It was agreed that they would be married and return to their homes, watching their opportunity to board their car and get it coupled to an outgoing train. So one Saturday afternoon when Billy was not engaged at his work he borrowed his father's horse and buggy, and he and Molly, provided with articles necessary to make them look like a man and a woman, sallied forth and drove to a parson ten miles distant. But they failed to fool him, and he told them to go home. Molly was a bit discouraged, but Billy said:

"We'll try another parson."

They tried several, the last being old and half blind. He married them, and they returned to their separate homes. If Molly had been older she would have been in a flutter; as it was she was simply more docile than usual.

A freight train was scheduled to start at 11 o'clock at night. Shortly after the wedding, when the family were in bed, Molly stole out of her window on to the shed, dropped to the ground and made for the car. Billy was there and after putting her in shut the door, sealed it and ordered it attached to the train. When this was done he entered it through the trap, and he and Molly waited breathlessly till they felt themselves moving.

The next morning there was a hubbub in the Burnes family. Molly's disappearance being coincident with Billy's not turning up at the freight office was a pointer, and during the day the freight agent noticed that the place where the old car had been standing so long was vacant. Nevertheless he could not get it through his head that the disappearance of the car could have anything to do with the absence of either Billy or Molly.

However, during the afternoon succeeding the flight while sympathizing with Mr. Burnes over the incident he mentioned the fact of the missing car. Mr. Burnes went home and while talking over the flight with his wife mentioned the matter to her. There are some things a woman can see through a millstone better than a man.

"I wonder"— said Mrs. Burnes, then stopped.

"Wonder what?"

"Do you know that old stove in the wood house?"

"Yes."

"It's gone. I missed it this morning when I went for some kindling."

"What stupidity! How can the old cook stove have anything to do with Molly's disappearance?"

"I do believe those two children have gone off in that car."

Her husband stood looking at her in a mild sort of manner for a time, then turned and hurried back to the freight house. It was not long before a passenger train started in the direction the 11 p. m. freight had gone, and Mr. Burnes went on it. He brought up at Wharton, where he made inquiries of the agent. A yard hand who heard him said:

"I know where those children are."

"Where?"

"I won't tell unless you promise to forgive them."

Mr. Burnes objected, but finally promised.

"They're in a car in the yard. I saw a light shining through a crack and investigated."

Taking up a lantern, he led the way to the car, threw aside the door, and there were the bride and groom eating supper by candlelight on Mrs. Burnes' sewing table. The sight was too much for the father's wrath. He burst into a laugh.

"Oh, papa," pleaded Molly, "don't take us home!"

But that was the end of the wedding tour. The couple were taken home, and after many suggestions as to what was to be done a home was provided for them. Billy's salary was advanced, and they set up housekeeping in something better than a discarded freight car.

Mr. and Mrs. Mudge have a daughter fifteen years old. Her name is Molly, and her mother says she wouldn't trust her any more than she would have trusted herself at that age. She watches Molly like a cat. When Mr. Mudge asks his wife if she didn't choose wisely she replies:

"Suppose I did. I shouldn't have gone on a wedding trip in a freight car."

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

THE RESTLESS.

IN hope of doing better
How we jump from town to town,
Looking for a pleasant prospect
To annex and settle down,
Always trying something different,
Taking fliers on the way,
Looking for some newer projects
That will mean a larger pay!

In a far and distant city
Of a splendid job we learn
That will pay us so much money
That the surplus we can burn,
And we rush to make us ready
Like a person quite insane
As we pack our small belongings
And proceed to take the train.

If the job is there as painted
And we land it in a bunch
We remain a month of Sundays
Till we get another hunch,
Till we hear of something better
Up the road a little piece,
And the old one couldn't hold us
With the aid of the police.

Thus, like pioneers who journeyed,
Singing out, "Pike's peak or bust!"
Here and there we move responsive
To the calling wanderlust,
In response to hope illusive
Going on from town to town
Till our joints get so rheumatic
We're obliged to settle down.

Sounded So Like Him.

"Did you think of me, dearest, when I was away?"

"I certainly did," replied the dutiful wife.

"And did you miss me much?"

"Well, fortunately an automobile broke down in front of the house nearly every day, and the way those men talked made it seem so homelike."

Not Desirable.

"Is he an intimate friend of yours?"

"I think so."

"Think so?"

"Yes."

"Don't you know?"

"Well, as he finds it impossible to distinguish between my property and his I think I might say that we are."

Preferable.

"He is a very promising young man."

"I don't care for that kind."

"No?"

"No; I prefer a discharging one."

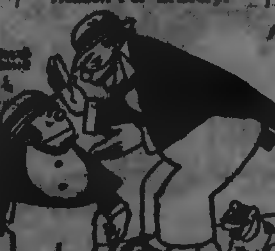
"Discharging?"

"Yes; one who discharges his duties instead of promising to do so."

Changed the Tune.

He was honest, though poor,
And was sure, very sure,
That he loved her alone for herself,
But her father went broke,
And he swore 'twas a joke
As he laid her away on the shelf.

Reason For Bravery.



"I'm not afraid of bumblebees."

"Aren't you? I am."

"Well, I am not."

"Why?"

"'Cause they always stay in the country, and I never go there."

Told Her Nothing.

"What kind of a man did Belle marry?"

"I hear he is an octogenarian."

"Oh, I don't care anything about his religion. How much money has he got, and what is his age?"

The Kind That Bites.

"What is Scrooge in such a hurry for?"

"Maybe he has just got a wireless from his wife."

"Wireless nothing. You can bet there were barbs on it."

Should Be Exempt.

"He is both fat and bald."

"Then he shouldn't have to pay taxes."

Just Alike.

"The Lord loveth a cheerful giver."

"So does the chronic borrower."

Watch Him.

Beware of the affable stranger!
Be there with your hand on your gun.
He isn't around, you may wager,
With all of that honey for fun.

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

Having borrowed trouble and made yourself miserable therewith, you, being honest, are constrained to return it with interest and thereby make some one else miserable.

There are people who cultivate a supernaturally wise look for the purpose of covering up their inward foolishness.

Money talks, but it seldom addresses large audiences.

A gift of gab has been the undoing of many a man.

The man who makes a fool of himself has no one but himself to blame if he doesn't do a good job.

Frenzied finance is the kind you have minus the money when you are called on to pay Christmas bills.

"Will you take a couple of tickets for the tradesmen's dance, Mickens?" inquired the local bootmaker.

"Tickets?" snorted Mickens. "I can't afford tacks, let alone tickets with trade in this condition."

"Things as bad as all that?" came the sympathetic inquiry.

"'Tisn't the trade, but the people as worries me. Look at this pair of trousers now. This is the fifth time I've had them in to press and they're not even paid for."

"Bit of, I'll admit," said the vendor of boots, "but you need not grumble. What about me? Yesterday I went to collect a bill for a pair of boots, and the wretch kicked me out with them!"—Pearson's Weekly.

A Triangular Love Difficulty

A War Veteran's Story

By CAPTAIN F. A. MITCHEL

Half a century has passed since we pushed out from the Rappahannock and the little village of Fredericksburg and started up the incline, with scarcely a house or a tree on it, toward the ridge, its base lined with Confederates waiting for us. But its picture is as sharply defined on my old brain as it was then on my young eyes. What! Go over that tilted plain that at a word from the Confederate commander would be swept with a hailstorm of lead and iron? It was awful to think of then, and many a night since in my dreams I've been there again.

There was a deathly stillness, broken only by our monotonous tramp, before they opened on us. Jim Edmonds was marching next to me, and, turning, I saw that set look on his face which men wear when going into battle. Jim was as pale as a man walking to his execution. As I turned to look at him he faced me. I can never forget that look.

"I'm not coming out of this," he said.

I had no reply to make, and if I had had there would not have been time to make it, for at that moment the singing and the screeching, mingled with the rattle and the roar, began. We marched on, here and there a man dropping in his tracks, and the nearer we drew to the Confederates the more frequent the drops. Our regiment got as near to the gray death line as any, but the remnant at last broke like the rest. Why men were called upon to march up that open inclined plain, so admirably fitted for wholesale slaughter, is one of the many unaccountable blunders of the war.

Jim fell shortly after we broke. We were at the time, I think, about midway between the river and the ridge. He held out a hand to me, on which was a ring. He had lost the power of speech, but I knew what he wished me to do. I was to take the ring off his finger and put it on my own. Instead of doing so then and there, I took him up and carried him to the rear. When I put him down he was dead.

I must go back a bit. Jim had left a sweetheart at home. He had often talked about her to me. We were as near to each other as youngsters can be, and that is pretty near. We were very different, and I believe that helped to draw us together. Jim was confiding, and I was reticent. His face was a mirror for his feelings; I had perfect command over my features.

He would talk to me by the hour about his sweetheart. I had left one of my own at home, but I never mentioned her to any one. I couldn't. I wasn't built that way. I felt that it was contemptible in me to accept my friend's confidences and not give my own. Nevertheless I permitted him to pour them into my ear without a return.

One night, shortly before the battle in which Jim was killed, when he was talking about his betrothed by a campfire, he said to me: "You know how absorbed I am in Edith. Well, I've often thought that it is selfish on my part. I want her to make me happy. I haven't thought much about her happiness. Suppose I get killed. She will suffer the same as I would if I should hear of her death. I've been thinking about this and how her life would be spoiled. She wouldn't give her heart to any one else, for she would think that in doing so she would be untrue to me. I've formed a plan in case I am killed to prevent her living the lonely life of an old maid. There's but one man whom I can bear to think of as her husband."

"And who may that be?"

"You."

"I!"

"Yes. And, what's more, in case I don't get back home I wish you'd go to her and tell her so."

Now was the time, if ever, to confess that I had a sweetheart of my own. I was about to overcome my natural reticence when it occurred to me that there was as much chance of my being knocked out by a shell or a bullet as Jim. Why not let the matter rest as it was? All I said was:

"Jim, you are very unselfish. Let's take a cheerful view of it. A soldier mustn't think of getting killed, though that's what we are here for. Let us, rather, dwell on both getting back home and my being best man at your wedding."

"That's all right if we get home. My plan is based on my getting killed. The day we left for Washington Edith took this ring off her finger and put it on mine. 'Jim,' she said, 'I'll never marry unless I marry [illegible] that wears that ring.'"

"She meant that she [illegible] no man but you."

"But don't you see how it [illegible] with my plan for her?"

"No, I don't."

"Well, you will when I've told you the rest. If I am killed take this ring off my finger and put it on yours. It will overcome her scruples."

Our conversation was interrupted at this point and was never resumed, for we marched early the next morning and were soon laying pontoons in face of the enemy's fire on the Rappahannock. [illegible] on getting across we marched [illegible] which, as I have said, seemed to have been especially contrived for mowing down anything that attempted to go over it.

[illegible] Jim's body to the [illegible] the ring off his finger [illegible] It was [illegible] for me to come back to them. My troth had been pledged to one, and I felt in a measure bound—through my lost friend—to the other. But as it was not my habit to try to cross a bridge till I got to it I settled nothing in my mind as to what I would do in the premises. Indeed, it appeared to me that Jim's plan for me and his sweetheart was but a fancy of his which had died with him.

The war lasted two years after Jim was killed and brought great changes. I was wounded at the battle of Winchester and sent to a hospital, where I remained some months. A number of young women in those days came down to devote themselves to nursing soldiers, and it so happened that I fell under the care of a young woman who ministered to me. I am quite sure that it was due to her attention that I recovered from my wound.

This being cared for by an attractive woman was a dangerous situation for a man to be placed in who had already two women to whom he might be said to be in a measure bound. I believe there are more marriages resulting from men being nursed by women during sickness than through any other cause. I am ashamed to confess that my betrothed and Jim's betrothed both faded before my growing attachment to my nurse.

Another weak spot in the situation for me was that, not having my natural physical strength, I did not have my full moral strength. I craved a demonstrative sympathy from my nurse and showed that I craved it. At first I got only an indulgent nurse's petting, but little by little the barriers were broken down between us, and we became lovers.

The day I was discharged from the hospital marked the close of my military service, for the war had ended. I was surely in an unenviable position. I was expected to go home and marry my fiancee. I felt that I should pay some attention to my dead friend's wishes, and I was in love with my nurse, who showed a willingness to listen to my suit. What should I do?

Providence was kind to me, for on rejoining my regiment for the purpose of being mustered out of service I found a letter from the girl to whom I had been engaged, but had not seen for four years. It was a long effort to excuse herself for breaking her engagement with me. She said that when we parted she was little more than a child, while now she was a woman. She had recently met a man who had been very kind to her and had the means to make her very comfortable. To refuse him would spoil his whole life. This was the gist of the matter, though it was spread out over sixteen pages of letter paper. It might have been condensed into six words, "You are thrown over for another."

I released her joyfully, though in a sorrowful letter, and an important point of my triangular complication was canceled. It remained for me to go to Jim's sweetheart and see what was in store for me there. I could not divest myself of the feeling that I would soon forgive myself if I did not do my part in bringing about what Jim had desired. I regarded it a matter of feeling rather than one of honor, but the feeling was very strong. I wondered if Jim had ever written her on the subject. If he had and it appeared that her future happiness as a wife depended on me I would not shrink from acceding to Jim's plan.

I tried to make up my mind to go to see the lady and abide by what the meeting brought forth, but in cowardice we always prefer to write rather than "take the bull by the horns." I wrote her a letter telling her of Jim's wish and leaving it with her as to what should be done in the matter. I received a kindly note in reply, couched in delicate terms, the main feature of which was that if I were fancy free she would be happy to see me, but if not the matter of Jim's wish need not even be taken up.

This reply helped matters amazingly. I wrote her that I loved another. In due time a reply came releasing me from any obligation to Jim, but inviting me to bring the ring for a friendly visit. She had a great desire to meet dear Jim's bosom friend.

I resolved to clear up this second point at once, then go and offer my heart and hand to the woman who had nursed me. I took a train the next day and on arriving at my destination drove to the house and sent up my card. Presently I heard a soft step on the staircase, and who should enter but—my nurse!

While I was paralysed by astonishment, her face was covered with smiles and blushes. I stammered something about a remarkable coincidence, when she stopped me:

"The coincidence is not here. It was in our meeting in the hospital, you as patient, I as nurse. And I knew who you were the moment I saw the ring Jim had from me the day he marched away to the war."

"Did Jim write you"—

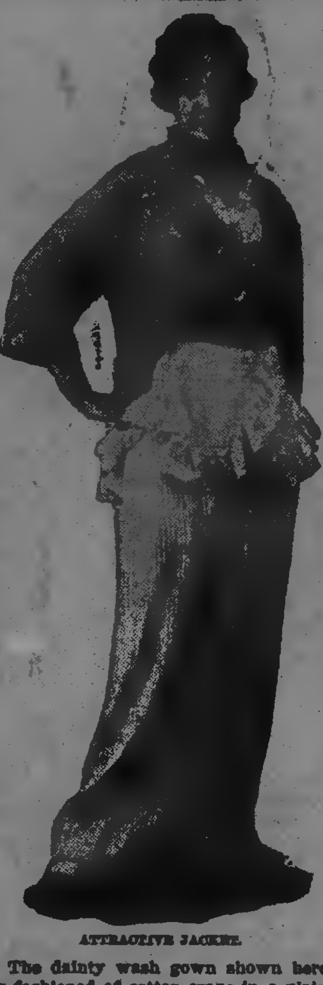
"He did."

"Then," I said, taking her in my arms, "since you have said that you will marry only the man who wears this ring I claim you."

For a brief space she was lost in thought. I fancied I could understand her reverie. She was thinking of the day, the moment, when she had spoken those words. What a difference between then and now! These four years had broken the bonds uniting many a happy family. The man she had then loved was among the many victims. I had taken his place. Nevertheless we were both silent, thinking of the great change.

SUMMER JACKETS.

Dainty Lightweight Affairs to Wear With Washable Gowns.



ATTRACTIVE JACKET.

The dainty wash gown shown here is fashioned of cotton crape in a plain and striped fabric. A stylish effect is achieved by the use of the short frilled peplum. The little jacket with the long shoulder lines is caught together in front with a ribbon bow and buckle. It is short in front and slopes down to a moderate length in the back.

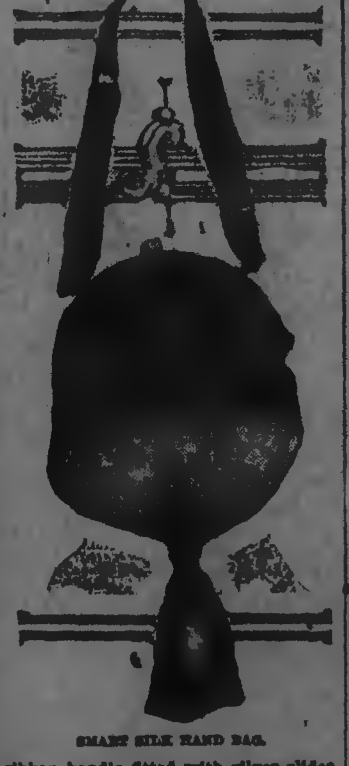
Coats of the Norfolk type are very popular this season. The fullness of the coat from the yoke to the coat edge is gathered in at the shoulders, is fitted smoothly under the arms and confined at the waist under a fairly broad belt made of the coat material. Large patch pockets are a most necessary detail which should never be omitted. They will hold without undue weighting various little accompaniments which will be found handy to possess when indulging in cross country walking.

FANCY HAND BAGS.

Gay Plaids and Roman Stripes Used In Their Construction.

Fancy hand bags are still popular. One made to wear with a taffeta gown was designed of plain silk, the lower part of the bag being of figured silk ribbon. A silk tassel was fastened to it below and a moire band was attached for carrying it.

Black moire purses are seen. A square bag made of black moire had a clasp of German silver and a moire ribbon handle fitted with silver slides. The bag was cut square, lined with gray moire and fitted with a mirror and change purse.



SMART SILK HAND BAG.

A novelty is the small bag of Roman striped ribbon or plaid. Bags of this sort are chic carried with plain dark suits.

Lace bags, especially those of Irish lace, are smart for wear with white gowns.

Scorch Stains.

To remove scorch marks on linen (unless they are very bad) cut an onion in half and rub the scorched part with it; then soak in cold water. The marks will soon disappear under this treatment if they can be remedied at all.

The man behind the bass drum works to beat the band.

Points for Mothers

Embroidered Carriage Covers.

The embroidered articles for baby should be washable, for they will frequently need freshening up. The prettiest white articles are for the baby's crib or perambulator. The little pillows are always fascinating things to make, and the embroidered sheets to match are a suggestion which many needlewomen will welcome. They will make an appropriate gift and one which will not be duplicated as frequently as many other dainty articles.

Pique and linen are the favored materials for making lingerie carriage covers. When the former material is used it is necessary to cut the piece for the underflap and seam it again on the under side, for both sides of the pique are not alike. This flap is drawn over the strap and holds the cover in position. The carriage cover should be cut long enough to extend over the end of the carriage. The width should be ample also.

A simple design is preferable for the cover. Anything elaborate is not considered good taste. A combination of eyelet and solid embroidery is charming for the cover of linen or pique. The edge should be scalloped and buttonhole stitched.

The daisy design is always appropriate for the cover of linen, and the festooned garland of small flowers and foliage looped up with bowknots or ribbons is a design generally admired.

Fancy Crib Sheets.

The tiny crib sheets can be had with hemstitched ends, and in this case it is only necessary to add the embroidery design. If you desire a more elaborate design scallop and buttonhole stitch the top. The top of the sheet is turned down to a depth of eight inches and the design embroidered with satin stitch. Many pretty effects can be obtained with dots. One sheet has a border of interlaced rings formed of dots of graduated sizes. The edge of the top is buttonhole stitched. A second design is an arrangement of daisies, while a third has a gracefully trailing vine along the hemstitched border.

For Outdoor Amusement.

Sand interests every child. It can usually be secured from a nearby builder. Tincups, molds in different sizes, several of each size, can be purchased for a small sum.

The sand should be boarded off in one corner of an outdoor shelter, and as the child experiments and creates with it he is rapidly gaining a sense of proportion. He sees that large molds will not fit into small ones, nor will their contents make a uniform border unless they are placed with those of a like size. Buckets and shovels of varying sizes are also excellent play toys for sand.

A Traveling Bassinet.

When it is necessary to take baby on a long journey he may be made very comfortable in a bassinet built of the traveling baskets or suit cases which have two sections, one fitted over the other. Line each half with quilted cotton sateen. The deeper piece will answer for a cradle. When it is in use the other, if placed over the end lengthwise, will make a nice little shield from drafts. In traveling from place to place pack the baby's belongings in the basket, and carry it by means of a shawl strap. It may be opened up for use on the train or boat.

Exercises With Clay.

Colored clay that is very reasonable in price is most useful in amusing a child. Place a low table and small chair in the shelter, and on this he will never tire of fashioning new forms with the clay. The big muscles need constant and proper exercise. Clay gives this to perfection. Without actually helping him suggest pretty forms for him to make on the clay, as baskets, rosettes and borders made of balls. Sometimes make him a model and then ask him to imitate. Imitation is the basis of all teaching.

Summer Rompers.

A crawling youngster of a year can get about as dirty as any little four footed pig. If the rompers are of white they will be a sight to behold in five minutes; if they are dark blue the dirt will be there just the same, only not visible. A compromise calls for a thin quality of material that easily washes out. No ironing is needed. If such garments are dropped into a big tub of water kept for the purpose they may be hung out dripping, but clean. They will dry in a couple of hours and be ready for wear.

Curing Crooked Eyes.

Crosseye or squint in children is sometimes caused by a peculiarity or slight malformation of the interior of the eye. Take the child to an oculist at once. The wearing of spectacles will probably cure the trouble, or a slight operation may be needed. Do not let childish timidity or your own nerves stand in the way of proper treatment.

Buttons on Shoes.

When buying buttoned boots for the children get the shopman to put the buttons on with patent fasteners before sending them home. Boots with buttons off are always untidy.

If shy of wisdom, profit by that of others.

HINTS FOR FARMERS

THE HAY CROP.

One of the most anxious times of the season for the farmer is at haying. The experienced haymaker knows that one ton of hay cut and cured in good shape is worth three tons badly made. Hay that has suffered from rain during the making will contain less soluble food than well made hay; this loss will be greatly increased if the hay has been long in the field and undergone fermentation as well as washing.

Harvesting clover is a very important work. It is important that it should not be cut too early, but should be cut early enough to allow of a second cutting early in the season for seed. The hay for the first crop should be cut early, so that it will be succulent and less woody, therefore more digestible. Then again the growing for clover seed is one of the most profitable farm undertakings on clean land.

Cut clover when in full bloom and before one-third of the heads are turned brown. Cut early in the morning as soon as the dew is off the crop, and according to the curing heat of the sun, let the cut clover lay. Then get busy with the kicker or side delivery rake. It must be remembered, however, that if the sun is intensely hot, the tedder may be used immediately after cutting, or at least in a few hours. When you are able to decide by touch and experience that the hay is cured, cock, and do it well.

The second crop, when saved for seed, must be cut until it is thoroughly ripe. Get a head of clover, and if you cannot rub the seed out of your hand, let it stand until you can.—Canadian Farm.

TO KEEP BUTTER COOL.

When ice is not available, put enough butter for a meal in a small dish, and set it in a larger one containing a little water. Turn a porous clay flowerpot over it and this will cause vaporation of the water in a way that will keep the air inside the pot very cool. If the pot is wrapped in wet cloth, the corners of which are left touching water in outer dish, the arrangement is almost as good as an ice-chest. Stand dish where there is a free circulation of air.

This is as helpful in connection with milk, meat, and other foodstuffs, and the similar trick of filling a can or bottle with water, closing it tightly, wrapping in wet flannel, and standing in a current of air, will cool the water as effectually as putting ice in it. If the wrapped can is stood in a plate containing water the flannel will keep wet without attention.

CURING ONIONS.

Rolling down onion tops for the purpose of stopping top growth and hastening the ripening is a fad of the home grower which the professional hardly ever practices. When the bottom or bulb develops and matures naturally and perfectly the top dwindles away, leaving the bulb sound and well finished, without any green core. Such an onion will keep, and you can pack it and ship it in any kind of dry package, crate, barrel, or even sack that your commission merchant will tell you is suitable and acceptable to that particular market. It will never do to pack and ship onions known as scallions, which have a large green core and thick neck, to market with good, well-finished bulbs. When an onion once takes a notion to produce that thick neck no amount of rolling down will make a nice, well-finished, and ripened onion of it.

BONE FORMER FOR HOGS.

A good supply of salt and ashes for hogs should not be neglected. If wood ashes are available, the hogs should have all they will eat. When not convenient to feed ashes, charcoal is a good substitute, and even soft coal will be eaten for want of something better.

Hogs are never injured by eating all the ashes they want, but is is not safe to give larger quantities of salt to animals not accustomed to it. The salt and ashes mixture should be kept in a low box under cover where it will be protected from rain, and it should consist of about two quarts salt for each bushel ashes.

Many feeders add a few ounces of copperas to this mixture. Free access to such a mixture will preserve the health of the hogs, and sows which have had an abundance of such food rarely eat their young.

PAVED BARNYARDS.

This is what one dairy farmer has to say about concrete feeding floors: "As farmers we have fallen into the slouchy habit of letting our milch cows stand around sloppy barnyards where in the early spring they sink half a foot in the mire every time they take a step.

"The cows use up enough energy in paddling around the average barnyard to keep them thin. I've solved that problem for all time. Concrete did it. My barnyard and feeding lot are solid in all kinds of weather. There is no wasting of feed. Practically every bit is used, for it isn't trampled down in the mire. We bought our own concrete mixer, but it has paid for itself many times over."

A paved yard may not be really needed when the drainage is first-class; but what this dairyman says is true in most cases. When stock is fed out of doors the loss through trampling in the mud is enormous, and a good solid floor of some kind is the way to save this loss.

MATING UP THE TEAM.

On farms where a number of horses are kept, and in fact on many of those on which only a comparatively few are in use, it is many times possible to mate up the teams very well according to size, conformation, color and temperament. When this is the case it is always advisable to pair the horses off, having the individuals composing the teams as nearly alike as possible. A writer in the Farmer and Stockbreeder has this to say on the subject:

"One thing which is too frequently neglected—partly perhaps on account of the prejudice which the men sometimes have themselves—is the proper selection of the teams—by which I mean putting the horses together to the best advantage. I think that in this particular they were no better in the brave days of old than we are now. Horses should be matched by their weight, their activity, and by that indescribable characteristic, their style. Nothing looks worse than to see a heavy horse and a light one working together, the light, quick horse tied back and fretting his heart out in order that his pace may be reduced to that of his heavier yokemate. But more than mere appearance is affected by such bad pairing. There is waste of work, and where there are several badly-paired teams this apparently trivial, because not very obvious, waste becomes quite a considerable item. So it is worth while to spend some time in putting the various teams together, and on a large place perhaps to change them about somewhat."

HOT WEATHER RULES FOR WORKING HORSES

The following suggestions for the handling of work horses during hot weather are being sent out by the Boston Work-Horse Relief Association:

1. Load lightly and drive slowly.
2. Stop in the shade if possible.
3. Water your horse as often as possible. So long as a horse is working, water in moderate quantities will not hurt him. But let him drink only a few swallows if he is going to stand still. Do not fail to water him at night after he has eaten his hay.
4. When he comes in after work, sponge off the harness marks and sweat, his eyes, his nose and mouth, and the dock. Wash his feet, but not his legs.
5. If the thermometer is 75 degrees or higher, wipe him all over with a wet sponge. Use vinegar water if possible. Do not turn the hose on him.
6. Saturday night give a bran-mash, cold; and add a tablespoonful of saltpetre.
7. Do not use a horse-hat, unless it is a canopy-top hat. The ordinary bell-shaped hat does more harm than good.
8. A sponge on top of the head, or even a cloth, is good if kept wet. If dry, it is worse than nothing.
9. If the horse is overcome by heat, get him into the shade, remove harness and bridle, wash out his mouth, sponge him all over, shower his legs, and give him four ounces of aromatic spirits of ammonia, or two ounces of sweet spirits of nitre, in a pint of water; or give him a pint of coffee warm. Cool his head at once, using cold water, or, if necessary, chopped ice, wrapped in a cloth.
10. If the horse is off his feed, try him with two quarts of oats mixed with bran, and a little water, and add a little salt or sugar. Or give him oatmeal gruel or barley water to drink.
11. Watch your horse. If he stops sweating suddenly or if he breathes short and quick or if his ears droop, or if he stands with his legs braced sideways, he is in danger of a heat or sun stroke, and needs attention at once.
12. If it is so hot that the horse sweats in the stable at night, tie him outside. Unless he cools off during the night he cannot well stand the next day's heat.

WHAT IS A VACATION?

A few weeks ago we chanced to come upon one of our good friends in one of the busy hotels of a large city. Upon our enquiry as to the reason for his being in the city instead of out on his well-managed farm, he informed us that the doctor had ordered him to take a vacation from farm work temporarily and take a good rest. Otherwise, his nervous condition might prove fatal at any time. Our friend chose for a place of rest a large city and a busy hotel, about the last place one would consider as a health resort for one whose health would naturally demand extreme quiet and freedom from excitement. Our friend, however, concluded that a change of his mode of living for a while was the thing required, and he accordingly took for a cure for tired nerves the very thing that drives city people into nervous prostration.

The experience of our friend—we should add successful experience, for he entirely recovered — emphasizes one real essential of a vacation that is distinctly helpful. It is worry and the monotony of life that brings gray hairs. Doing the same thing day after day, getting into a bottomless rut, and failing to look beyond our horizon are the things that tire the brain and dull the enthusiasm. There is nothing that so changes the aspect of things as to get clear away from our environment and look at ourselves and our surroundings from the viewpoint of other people.

We wish we could convince each reader of this page that vacations are a profitable investment in every respect. Hours of labor may get you to your goal, but the fastest progress is made when we put in hours of labor backed by intelligent direction. Intelligent directive force is secured by studying not only our own farms, but our neighbor's farm. In a still larger sense, one should have a good knowledge of the agricultural affairs of the province and of the entire country. The more a farmer gets into the habit of enlarging his experience by observation, the more intelligently and readily he should be able to make a success of his business.

When canning strawberries, if you wish them to keep their original red color, add two tablespoonfuls of vinegar to each quart of berries.

For the Children

Smart Little Girl Just Past Two Years.

Not every day can you meet such a sturdy and self confident young lady as the one here pictured. She is Miss Ernestine Lindauer, and she lives in the Bronx, which is one of the five boroughs that make up the great city of New York. Ernestine was wheeling a baby carriage (her own) when the camera man came along and she cheerfully posed for her photograph. Most ladies like to have their pictures taken, and Ernestine is no exception. She volunteered the information that she was just past two years of age and that she was very accomplished. Early to bed goes Ernestine, but she is also an early riser. When morning breaks she is quickly awake, and then she runs to her papa's room and tells him to get up at once or he will be late for work. So you see Ernestine is useful as well as highly ornamental.

Chinese Boy's Recitation.

There was a rich merchant who became interested in a bright little Chinese boy and told his father that he would take him into his employ when he could speak good English. "Not pidgin English," warned the merchant. By the way, "pidgin English" is what is known as "business English" and is pronounced pidgin by the celestial as the nearest he can come to saying "business."

One day the father brought the little boy to the merchant, telling him that he now could speak most elegant English. The merchant did not believe it from the short time he had been at it, but to give him a chance said: "All right. Say 'Little Jack Horner' for me. Do you know it?" The little Chinese boy smiled delightedly, proud to be able to show off his knowledge, and this is what the merchant heard:

Ittee Johnny Horner
B'long insidee corner,
Makee chowchow one Clismas pie.
He put insidee tum,
Catchee big piecee plum—
Hi yah! What one good chile my!

The Candy Stuck.

A Connecticut family, just after a snow, gave an old fashioned candy pull to their friends. When the sirup had been boiled sufficiently the dishful was placed on the snow just outside the door, the quicker to cool off and be ready for pulling. Suddenly there was a great racket outside. A pig had entered the yard and chanced to come upon the dish. The surface was cool enough to be comfortable, so the pig, according to its nature, plunged his snout away down to the bottom of the vessel. Then he drew back—the candy stuck to him, and then he fled. The people came out in time to see piggy going through the fence. They gave chase, and when they caught the porker the candy had cooled off so that it had to be knocked off with a hammer.

Cubbyholes.

I'd like a house built all upstairs,
With boxes and the floor for chairs,
And full of cubbyholes, just right
For me to live in out of sight.

In nooks and corners I would stay,
And I would always live that way,
And all my cubbyholes should be
Just right for one or two or three.

Like homes of lords and high born dames,
My cubbyholes should all have names—
"The Castle" and "The Witch's Glen,"
"The Secret Cave" and "Robber's Den."

And, like the buccaneers of old,
I'd bury tons and tons of gold
And sometimes play I had with me
A princess in captivity.

And could I be a monarch grand
I'd have no rooms in all the land,
For, though there were a million souls,
They all should live in cubbyholes.

BOWSER'S CARDS

They'd Have Won But for the Tactics of Mrs. B.

By M. QUAD

[Copyright, 1914, by Associated Literary Press.]

No one had stepped on Mr. Bowser's feet all day.

He found a seat in the car going home.

No one had found fault with his legs stretched across the aisle.

There were no stray hogs in the front yard as he reached the house.

Mr. Bowser ascended the steps with a feeling that it was good to be alive and to have a wife and a cat to come home to. When Mrs. Bowser met him in the hall and announced that the new cook was incompetent and the dinner was spoiled he kindly replied:

"Well, we won't worry about that. I guess you can scrape enough together to make some sort of a meal."

In a Suspiciously Amiable Mood.

There was plenty of occasion to find fault, but he ate what was set before him and continued to smile. When Mrs. Bowser told him that he must order a ton of range coal in the morning he did not charge her with selling half the last ton to buy caramels, and when he saw the gas bill for the last month he actually complimented her on keeping down the family expenses. As they reached the sitting room he found a hairpin on the floor, but he had nothing to say about reckless extravagance and the poorhouse, and when she told him that the clock had stopped for want of cleaning he beamed on her instead of asking whether she had punched it with a crowbar or battered it with an ax. Mrs. Bowser looked upon these signs as ominous. In hopes of averting a calamity she suggested a call on a neighbor.

"WOMAN, YOU STOLE THAT HAND!"

"Not this evening, my dear," he remonstrated. "I wish to remain at home and take solid comfort. All the way home I was saying to myself that I had the nicest wife and the pleasantest home in the world."

"That was good of you," she replied, delighted at the compliment and forgetting her fears for a moment.

"Yes; the nicest wife and the pleasantest home, and I want you to understand that both are thoroughly appreciated. If all men were as well off as I am there would be very little in this world to complain of."

Too Good to Be True.

Mrs. Bowser murmured her gratification, and the family cat came downstairs and rubbed against Mr. Bowser's legs and said to herself that there'd be an explosion in that house before the evening was over. There was silence for two or three minutes, and then Mr. Bowser said:

"If you know how to play poker we'll run into Green's some evening. He says they have a little party there almost every night. It's just a neighborly game, you know, with a penny ante and a two cent limit, but still one ought to know a little something about poker to take a hand in it. Hasn't it ever occurred to you to learn?"

"Why, I played poker with you one evening," she replied, with sinking heart.

"Did, eh? I don't recall it."

"And you got mad because I won."

"I don't see how you could have won unless I dropped to sleep. But we'll let that go. I only hope you win this time. Where are the cards?"

"I think I would rather wait until some other evening. You haven't read the paper yet."

"Never mind the paper, and it will be no trouble to explain things to you. Draw up your chair, and I'll take the first deal."

Mrs. Bowser looked at the cat and sighed, and the cat looked at her and shook her head in a pitying way.

Cheek or Ignorance.

"There's your hand," continued Mr. Bowser, "and if you don't want to stand pat, as they call it, you can discard and draw. If you have a pair retain them. What do you do?"

"I—I think I'll stand pat."

"Oh, you will? That's either cheek or ignorance, of course, but we'll see. What's your bet?"

"I should like to bet as much as $5."

"Five dollars! Why, woman, you'd be gooped blind in two hands in a regular game. A pair of aces or kings is not worth much of a bet. I warn you to look out for me, and I'm going to raise you five."

"I'll see you and raise you ten."

"What! Where did you pick up those expressions? And, by the way, let me tell you that this is no baby business. What you lose comes out of your pin money on Saturday. If I lose I'll pay at once. That's the only way to learn how to play poker. Do you want to take it all back and bet 10 cents?"

"I think I would rather bet $10."

"All right. That's two weeks' pin money. I'll call your hand."

Mr. Bowser laid down two big pairs, with a sugary smile, and was going to ask if she had ever heard of bluff when she showed a flush of hearts and held out her hand for the money.

"How—how did you get any such hand?" he demanded as his face grew red and he regarded her with deep distrust.

"You dealt it to me. When I stood pat you ought to have known that I had a good hand."

"But how did I know you knew anything about pat hands? It was all an accident, however, and it won't happen again. Deal away."

High Expectations.

This time Mr. Bowser got a pair of aces to draw to, and Mrs. Bowser got only queen high. He got a small pair with his three cards, and she had the luck to draw two more queens. He was determined to crush her at a blow, and he said:

"No baby business, now. I'll bet $10 on this hand."

"I'll raise you five," she calmly said.

"But how can you?" he shouted. "You only held up one card."

"I know it, but I'll raise your bet just the same."

"You will, eh? Well, I'll see the raise and call your hand, and if you ain't the sickest woman in this town"—

But Mrs. Bowser maintained her health. When he laid down two pairs she laid down threes, and his chin was shaking as he exclaimed:

"There's trickery here somewhere, but I'll soon get on to it. No human being ever held two such hands running. Give me the deal."

Wonderful luck attended Mrs. Bowser's hands. On the third deal she got a straight, while Mr. Bowser got threes. When she announced that she'd stand pat again he looked at her for a minute and made up his mind that she had heard of "bluffs" somewhere and was trying it on him. He didn't better his hand, but he thought threes good enough to see her bet of $5 and raise her $10. She came back at him, and there was supposed to be $50 in the pot when he got scared and called.

"Woman, you—you stole that hand!" he shouted as soon as he could find his breath.

"But how could I?" she protested.

"You stole 'em all and have swindled your own husband. Think of it. I sit down here to give you a few pointers, and you deliberately go at it to defraud me."

"Mr. Bowser, you knew it was fair. You had two deals to my one. You owe me"—

An Outrageous State of Affairs.

"Not a cent—not a red cent! I have not only been robbed by my own wife in my own house, but my evening has been turned into a hollow mockery. Woman, you can sit with your conscience, and I will go down to the club. They may rob me there, but they will not grieve my soul."

She began to protest and entreat, but he hustled down the hall for his hat and bounced outdoors. Five minutes before, but unknown to the players, three dogs had chased a cat into the open vestibule, where she turned at bay and defied them. They were standing on the steps, waving their tails and showing their teeth, and the cat had her back up and her claws ready when Mr. Bowser walked out on the quartet. His advent precipitated a climax. His yell of surprise was answered by a screech from the cat and a growl from each canine, and by the time Mrs. Bowser reached the door he was lying on the sidewalk and the cat and dogs were leaping over him as they fought. The Bowser cat ran down and took a hand, and it was not until a policeman came up and used his club that a rescue was effected. Then Mr. Bowser crawled up the steps and tottered into the hall, and as he leaned against the wall for support and panted for breath he managed to say:

"It only needed this! Robber of her husband and would be assassin—tomorrow—tomorrow!"

Turning the Tables.

Mrs. Exe—You take an awful long time to dress to go anywhere. Doesn't your husband get angry waiting so long?

Mrs. Wye—Why, no. You see, when he calls up to me to hurry I tell him to get his hat and cane and I will be right down.

"Well?"

"Oh, I've previously hidden them, and when I go down and find them for him he has to apologize for keeping me waiting."—Boston Transcript.

AN ACCIDENTAL HERO.

Sometimes It's Easy to Make a Hit if You've Got the Nerve.

Egbert Dobbs was one of those boys who never knew how to dance. The parties he attended were devoted mostly to kissing games, and at such the other kids had nothing on Egbert.

It was not until he was about sixteen years old that Egbert realized that he had missed something. He could wabble through a square set, and he was strong on the grand march to supper, but at other entries Egbert was a shine and knew it.

At this, the crisis in his young life, he might still have beaten it to dancing school, but he did not. He became a pitiable victim of self consciousness and at parties for the next four years spent most of his time out in the hall in the vicinity of the lemonade bowl.

When Egbert was twenty-three years old he spent his two weeks' vacation at Mud Knob, in the Catshires. It was the era of the tango and the maxixe. One night in the hotel ballroom a husky summer girl dragged him out on the floor.

"I can't dance!" spluttered Egbert hysterically.

"Come on; you gotter!" cried the playful thing.

"But I can't, I tell you!" he gasped.

"Yes, you can! Just keep a-bobbing!"

Egbert was helpless. Heavens, what a frightful spectacle he was making of himself! How the girls would laugh at him! How the other fellows would josh him! All the while he was slipping, sliding, crouching, skidding, rocking from side to side, up and down, in and out, in the grasp of a giggling girl who wouldn't let go of him.

When the music stopped Egbert staggered toward the door. His sole idea was to escape. But he was intercepted by a whole bevy of girls.

"Oh, Mr. Dobbs," cried one, "what was that you were dancing with Miss Biggs? Won't you show me?"

"Oh, Mr. Dobbs," cried another, "won't you teach me?"

"Me, too, Mr. Dobbs!" said a third in shrill appeal. "It had some awfully cute steps in it. Where did you learn it?"

In short, instead of a boob, Egbert found himself a hero.

"Well, well," said the man who had returned to the little old town. "I can hardly realize that it is twenty years since I left here."

"I dunno why you should feel that way about it," replied the old inhabitant. "There's been a lot of changes. The Baptist church has been tore down and rebuilt since you went away, there's Lem Richardson's garage where the postoffice was when you lived here, we've got three movin picture shows that we didn't have when you left, and there's been lots of other improvements. I should think you'd notice 'em."

"Oh, yes, I've noticed the improvements, but I see that Bill Higgins is still running for constable, so I can hardly realize that there has been any change."—Chicago Record-Herald.

BIGGEST FLOATING DOCK ON PACIFIC READY THIS YEAR

It is expected that the Grand Trunk Pacific authorities will have the big dry dock at Prince Rupert in operation before the end of the present year. The completion of this great work will mean much to Northern British Columbia and especially to Prince Rupert. That rapidly growing city will have a new industry this coming winter. Many of the big coast steamers that have hitherto been compelled to make their headquarters elsewhere will be overhauled in its harbor. It will be able to boast of the largest floating dock on the Pacific with an equipment including every up-to-date device for handling ships up to 20,000 tons. There are four large buildings to house the various sections of the ship building and repairing plant and practically all the machinery to equip the shops has been made in Canada.

The yard will have a 45 ton locomotive crane. Other machinery includes an 80 foot lathe, capable of turning a steel shaft 50 feet in length; a plate bending machine with a capacity of bending a sheet of steel twenty feet by three-quarters of an inch thick; a big steam hammer and four air compressors. The machine shop, boiler shop and blacksmith shop will have the most complete set of modern tools on the coast.

Adjoining the dock along the face of the harbor are the big new wharves and the railroad has large freight yards here.

For a city that dates back only to 1906, when the Grand Trunk Pacific's staff of engineers made a landing and clearing for the location of their camp preparatory to making the preliminary survey, this is a record of progress that it would be hard to equal.

ADDRESSES OF APPRECIATION OF BAND AND LOCAL CORPS

Temple Band is Welcomed Home During Concert at Victoria Park

The reception accorded the Salvation Army Band in Victoria Park last evening proved that the citizens of Peterboro not only appreciate good music but they also are grateful for the work the army is doing within out midst. The park was crowded and throughout the speeches the key note was appreciation and at the mention of the Army's work applause occurred. Adjutant and Mrs. McElhiney came in for a great deal of well deserved praise also.

Ald. Stratton was chairman and several well known local officials spoke. After the first selection by the band Ald. Stratton in calling upon Adjutant McElhiney told the audiece that the purpose of the reception was to welcome back the band. He touched on the good work Adjutant McElhiney and his supporters were doing while he also paid a tribute to Bandmaster Peryer for his excellent work in moulding together such a sterling musical organization.

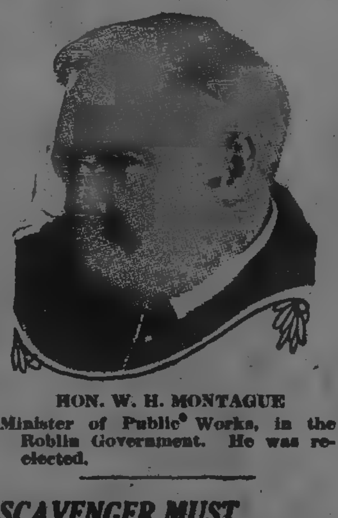
Adjutant McElhiney was given a rousing ovation when he rose to speak. He stated that it was with much pardonable pride that he was called upon to speak before such a fine gathering. He referred to the Empress disaster and said that although the 31 men and himself were heavy hearted they put their shoulder to the wheel and displayed wonderful courage in facing the situation. Not one suggestion of turning back was made. The Adjutant said that the reception at London was excellent. He then outlined a few of the marches and concerts and concluded by saying that everywhere the band went Peterboro was put to the fore and he honestly believed that the city had got its money's worth through the advertising which he and his followers were so glad to do for their home town.

J. H. Burnham, M.P., spoke briefly and referred to Commissioner Rees whom he knew well as being a great man. He also urged the Army not to be carried away with pomp and display. The success of the Army to the present day had been in its simplicity.

Mayor Buller congratulated the band and Army for the work they were doing in the city. He referred especially to work among the poor and said that the citizens of Peterboro would always be ready to help the work along. His only regret was that the grant given the band for its old country trip had not been larger.

G. A. Gillespie, M.L.A., Ald. Duffus, and Ald. Johnston spoke along congratulatory lines after which Secretary Hensley on the band and Adjutant McElhiney replied with words of thanks for all the good things that had been said and done for them.

The program played by the band was the same as announced in Monday's paper. Probably the most enjoyed was the last. It was Airs of All Nations with a flag display to note the country which national anthem the band was playing. Through their playing the band displayed excellent tonal abilities and powers of attack that were stirring.



HON. W. H. MONTAGUE
Minister of Public Works, in the Roblin Government. He was re-elected.

SCAVENGER MUST RETURN THE MONEY

The case of A. N. Robertson, a scavenger charged with getting $5 under false pretences was enlarged at this morning's session of Police Court for one week with instructions from the Magistrate to the defendant to pay back the money. Robertson claimed he received the money but when he went to do the job, another man was already at work. He therefore kept the money he had received.

JUDGMENT RESERVED

First Action to Recover the Amount of Stock Subscribed for

IN CORDAGE CO.

Books Can be Searched for Sign of Payment of Dividend

Evidence produced by the liquidator of the Candian Cordage Company, at this morning's session of the actions against contributaries tended to show that two men, J. S. Lattimer and J. A. Bennett were the big works at the company's meetings during its infancy. Extracts from the minute book showed "moved by J. S. Lattimor and seconded by J. S. Bennett" and "moved by J. A. Bennett and seconded by J. S. Lattimer" on every motion concerning the company's allottment of stock and efforts to collect from the contributors. No other names appeared although several prominent local men were the big stockholders of the concern. During the morning Richard Hall, who was acting for one defendant, asked Mr. Hatton, liquidator, if he knew whether the company had ever paid a dividend. Mr. Hatton replied that so far as he knew they had not. He was then asked if the minutes of the directors' meetings would show that, and he said he could not say as he had not gone over all the minutes. Mr. Hall will be given the opportunity to inspect the books.

The First Action.

The first action taken up by Judge Huycke was one against Alexander Sanderson. Mr. Medd acted for the liquidator and Mr. Dixon for Sanderson, who it is claimed was a contributor to the extent of $50.

Sanderson is stone deaf and the questions put to him had to be written out. He claimed he met a couple of men while in the woods to the north of here in 1902, and stated he may have told them he might take some stock, but he did not sign any application.

The liquidator produced a letter from Sanderson to the company in which he said the reason he had not paid up sooner was because of his money being tied up in a mortgage. The liquidator did not produce a signed application, but produced books of the company which showed an entry charging Mr. Sanderson with $50 of stock.

Mr. Medd argued that as Sanderson had admitted in his letter that he would have paid up, that he was a contributor. He also said there was no evidence to show that the company had issued a call to its stockholders, although Secretary R. M. Glover had written to numerous contributors. He argued that a call had to be authorized by the directors, and until a call had been made the debt did not become effective.

Mr. Dixon claimed that the lack of an application would justify his honor in dismissing the claim while the debt had been outlawed under the act, which called for collection to be made within six years. Several cases were cited by both parties and judgment was reserved.

The other action was against L. R. H. Burns of Ottawa. Mr. Hall acted for him. Burns was not present. No application was produced in this case either, but an agent's record showed that Mr. Burns had placed his name to his list. A letter was read, signed by Burns in which he stated that he merely signed the paper to help Agent O'Meara get other customers and that he did not intend to take any stock and would not pay for it. The signature was attached on a Sunday.

J. B. LAUZON
Conservative member for La Verendrye, in the Roblin Government, who was re-elected.

CO-OPERATION IS URGED

Prof. Hutt's Suggestion for Exhibition Grounds

Prof. Hutt of the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, after inspecting the exhibition grounds, has urged that the city and fair directors get together and co-operate for the improvement and retention of the grounds for park, playgrounds and exhibition purposes. The professor visited the grounds in company with G. A. Gillespie, M.L.A., President Garbutt of the fair association and several directors. He suggested that an ornamental fence be erected around the grounds. He also visited the other city parks and was very much impressed, especially with Victoria Park, and paid a high tribute to the groundkeeper there for the excellent shape he has the lawn and flower beds in.

R. J. McCORMICK GETS HIS SEAT

Judge Decides in Favor of Liberal Candidate

SARNIA, July 15.—By the decision of his honor Judge MacWatt, rendered at the close of the recount proceedings late last night, the East Lambton seat in the recent Ontario contest has been awarded to Robert John McCormick, the Liberal candidate. Conservatives say they will carry the decision to the Court of Appeal. No less than 123 ballots were found in the ballot box with the counterfoil and printed numbers attached, which has been held to be against the law in a number of previous election cases. Of those, 77 ballots are marked for Martyn, and 46 are marked for McCormick. The 123 ballots with counterfoil attached are from the polling subdivision of Thedford. If these ballots were counted they would give Dr. Martyn a majority of 31 in that polling subdivision. If, however, on the other hand, they were declared illegal, it would give Robert McCormick, the Liberal candidate, a majority in the riding of about 25. Then again, if these disputed ballots are allowed, Dr. Martyn, the Conservative member-elect, will have a majority of nine or eleven in the riding. Judge MacWatt held a count at his chambers last night, when the case was argued by the legal representatives of the respective candidates, and decided in favor of Mr. McCormick.

U.S. SECRETARY ADVISES FREE IMPORT AT FALLS

As Solution of Vexed Question Regarding Electrical Development at Niagara He Recommends That Free Entry be Granted and Present Limit of Water Diversion be Maintained.

WASHINGTON, July 15.—Removal of restrictions upon the importance of electric power from Canada and retention of the present limit of 15,000 cubic feet per second upon the amount of water diverted for water power purposes from the Niagara river above the falls on the American side were advocated by Secretary Garrison in a letter to the House foreign affairs committee, made public yesterday. With the letter Mr. Garrison sent a report by Brigadier-General Kingman, chief of the army engineers, declaring that the enormous commerce on the great lakes probably soon would demand a ship canal between Lakes Erie and Ontario on American soil.

As to the situation below the Falls, Secretary Garrison said there seemed no reason for an express limitation upon water diverted there. He endorsed in a general way the pending Smith and Cline bill, which, he said, "closely approached the legislation needed for the protection of the Niagara river, and for the best and most economic use of its waters for power developments not inconsistent with navigation interests."

The Secretary's letter will be before the committee to-day, at a meeting called for a general discussion of the Niagara water-diversion problems, which have vexed Congress, the War Department and New York State authorities for years. Representatives of the Seneca Indians are expected to appear to support the Snecas' claim to rights in the Niagara, under the Pickering treaty.

LORD MORLEY OF BLACKBURN.

BILL BAILEY TAKES EXCEPTIONS TO "FOOLISH QUESTIONS" OF COURT TELLS COUNSEL TO GO TO BLAZES

Arthur Maxwell and William Maxwell were this morning committed to trial by Magistrate Dumble on the charge of theft of various articles from the home of William Bailey.

C. R. Widdifield of the firm of Gordon and Widdifield, acted for the defendants.

In examining Detective Newhall, Mr. Widdifield drew the startled glances of the court by enquiring "How is it you have so many admissions around here?"

There was no response to the question.

In his evidence, William Bailey, well known in the city, afforded considerable laughter by his various answers.

The fireworks were started when Mr. Wearing announced to the witness that he was there to examine him and that he was to speak fairly loud.

"Shut up, you're not here to give me your advice," yelled the witness.

"Where do you live?"

"In your house."

"Whose house?"

"Magistrate Dumble's house."

"Where?"

"In the south end."

"Say, look here both of you are asking foolish questions at once and I can't answer you both at the same time," exploded Bill.

"We are not here for your tomfoolery," declared the Magistrate.

"Neither am I."

"When did you miss these goods?"

"I don't see why you ask so many foolish questions. I don't value the goods, but they broke the padlock on my door."

"I didn't want the clothes or I would have been wearing them," continued witness who further created a laugh by claiming that if they had taken the entire suit he might not have missed it."

In cross examining the witness Mr. Widdifield asked the witness to identify the clothes.

"I won't," responded the witness jumping out of the witness box.

"Why?"

"If you meddle with my clothes I'm not going to examine them.

"You're a pretty thin man," Mr. Bailey.

"You go to blazes."

"Ever been in court before?"

"Sure, and am proud of it."

"Ever miss anything before."

"Why," he grinned I've often missed my dinner, it's so small."

"Are these your things?"

"Don't ask such silly questions."

"Abraham Cherincoff, a second hand dealer gave evidence of purchasing the goods of the two prisoners.

Detective Newhall described how they had traced the goods and arrested the two men. They had admitted to him, the theft of the goods.

NO REPORTS MADE TO POLICE CHIEF

The report that houses on Elm St. had been entered was denied this afternoon by Chief Thompson who also stated that no reports had been received of any houses being entered since last Thursday evening.

DRAWING ON MONDAY.

The drawing for the list of articles in connection with the Sacred Heart Lawn Social will be held on Monday evening next. The count of the votes in the contest between the C.M.B.A. and Foresters will also be made that evening.

FRENCHMEN CELEBRATE

On Anniversary of Fall of the Bastile

PARIS, July 15. — Half a million Parisians, celebrating the fall of the Bastile, were thrilled yesterday at the opening by the President of the republic's annual review of the Paris garrison, when twenty military aeroplanes rose at the far end of the Longchamp's race course and in perfect alignment of fours swished at full speed past the Presidential stand.

A mighty roar of enthusiastic cheering swept over the ground and this was kept up as the 30,000 troops, comprising cavalry, artillery, infantry and other branches marched in close order before the reviewing stand.

Another minute of excitement was provided at the close of the review by a charge of 2,000 cuirassiers in bright steel breastplates and brass helmets, waving their swords, who galloped at full speed in a single line to within 30 paces of the President.

Fireworks displays, military bands, public dancing, free performances at theatres, both afternoon and evening, in Paris and all the other cities, towns and villages of France, are all provided at the expense of the Government.

BELIEVES STORY

MINEOLA, N.Y., July 15. — The grand jury yesterday took up the case of Mrs. Florence Carman, charged with the murder of Mrs. Louise Bailey, one of her husband's patients, who was shot in his office on the night of June 30.

Dr. Carman was on the stand nearly two hours. As he left the grand jury room he refused to say anything about the nature of his testimony. District Attorney Smith said he was satisfied with Dr. Carman's story, and had changed his mind about asking him to sign a waiver of immunity. Neither Carman nor the attorney would say whether Carman had in any important details altered the story told at the inquest.

Temperament and Temperature.

"What's the trouble, John?" exclaimed the amazed wife.

"Hot weather."

"Hot weather can't give you a black eye."

"I got into an argument with a hasty friend about the best way to keep cool."—Washington Star.

AMENDING BILL PASSES

Marquis of Crewe Waives Vote on Third Reading in Lords.

LONDON, July 15.—The House of Lords yesterday passed the third reading of the bill to amend the Irish Home Rule Bill, and sent it across to the House of Commons for consideration.

On suggestion of the Marquis of Crewe, the bill was read a third time without a vote being taken.

In the closing stage in the Upper House the Marquis of Crewe, Liberal leader, took part in the debate on the bill, and indirectly promised that the attainment of an agreement in regard to the elimination of the time-limit, by which the counties of Ulster were allowed to vote on the question of their exclusion for a period of six years from the operation of the Home Rule Bill, did not prove difficult. He said, however, that the area of the portion of Ireland to be excluded had been so greatly enlarged by the Unionists that it would be a vexed and critical question. The Unionists, he argued, had failed to explain how they proposed to meet the inevitable objections to exclusion of the Roman Catholic counties of Ulster and their friends elsewhere in Ireland.

The Marquis of Crewe concluded by asking for the exercise of patience and forbearance, and firmly hoping for a successful solution.

The Marquis of Lansdowne, the Unionist leader, reiterated that nothing short of the Unionist amendments could avert the imminent peril that was threatening. He said this was his explanation of the demand for the total exclusion of the Province of Ulster, and he complained that the Government had given the Unionists no assistance whatever in the task of avoiding civil war.

Before the passage of the third reading of the bill, the Earl of Dunraven moved the insertion of a new clause providing that the King might by an order-in-Council, suspend the operations of the Home Rule act until a commission should have reported on the constitutional relations of Ireland to the other parts of the United Kingdom. He argued that by means of such a commission there would be hopes of creating a situation that might lead some day to a satisfactory final settlement of the whole problem, and that peace might be achieved without dismemberment.

Lord Dunraven's motion was adopted without division, although it aroused no enthusiasm. The Marquis of Lansdowne said it was vague and open to the objection of putting the whole Empire into the melting-pot on the chance of getting the Government out of a purely domestic difficulty. Affairs in Ulster, he continued, brooked no delay, and under no circumstances would his side of the House accept the clause as a substitute for their own amendments. But if these were accepted and incorporated in the act, there might be considerable advantage in the proposed inquiry.

Lord Morley of Blackburn, in behalf of the Government, described it as a purely academic proposition brought forward at the moment of the crisis, for which there was no precedent. With regard to the other amendments adopted by the House of Lords, he said their effect would be to embitter relations and increase the difficulties of a settlement. They amounted virtually to to elaborate method of rejecting the bill. It would have been far more straightforward, he declared, if they had voted for Lord Willoughby de Broke's motion for the rejection of the amending bill.

Carson Hurries To London.

BELFAST, July 15. — Sir Edward Carson left unexpectedly for London last night by the Liverpool steamer, having been recalled by a telegram from Westminster.

Addressing the Ulster volunteers at a tattoo in the grounds of Craigavon, he said: "I am returning on the one and main business of my life. I have made up my mind to carry out the covenant to the very end, and I hope you will do the same."

TWO SISTERS MEET DEATH AT CROSSING

Thick Undergrowth Prevented Them From Seeing the Approach of Danger.

NEWMARKET, July 15. — A tragedy was caused at the C. N. R. crossing at Mount Albert yesterday morning by the apparent haste of the Misses Louisa and Mary Starr, who lost their lives, when the C. N. R. express crashed into the buggy, in an attempt to pass over the tracks in front of the on-coming train. Two horses were also cut to pieces, and the vehicle completely demolished.

The accident occurred at 11.40 a.m. The girls were driving into Mount Albert from the east, and the train was proceeding north. The danger at this point is enhanced by a thick growth of bushes, which precludes the railway traffic from the sight of those approaching the crossing.

In this particular instance it appears that the two girls were aware of the presence of the train in the vicinity, but thinking they could "make" the crossing, continued on their journey, which had such a tragic result.

The train, which was moving at a high rate of speed, reached the crossing as the horses and buggy were squarely on the tracks. Death was instantaneous, the bodies were cut to pieces.

Coroner J. H. Wesley and jury visited the scene of the accident shortly after noon and adjourned the inquest for a week. The Misses Starr had managed a farm at Whitechurch since their father's death nearly two years ago.

Conservative candidate for Portage la Prairie, who was defeated in the Manitoba elections.

BOAT STILL FAST

Resists all Efforts to Dislodge Her

QUEBEC, July 15.—All efforts of the wrecking tug Lord Strathcona, and the Canadian Government steamer Lady Evelyn to dislodge the steamer Canada of the Gaspe and Baie des Chaleurs Line from the rocks on which she is stranded have proved ineffectual, and the two boats which had gone to her asistance returned yesterday to Rimouski. Her situation is said to be serious as she may have to wait for the high tide, and until that time the northeast wind will be dangerous.

The Canada is now lying on the rocks about four miles below the church at Cape Chatte, and in nine feet of water. Her passengers, freight and part of her crew have been sent home by the Gaspesian.

The Lady Evelyn and the Strathcona are said to have developed about 3,000 horsepower while engaged in their operations.

HINDU INVASION IS THREATENED

Agitator Trying to Bring Over Another Five Hundred

VANCOUVER, July 15.—Negotiations are now being carried on by an East Indian styling himself Behari Lal Verma, as secretary of the American Indian Colonization Co., with Towner, Jones & Co. of Bombay, for a vessel capable of carrying 500 third class Hindus via the Suez Canal to Halifax. Verma failed in chartering a boat in Hong Kong for the same purpose. The protector of emigrants, the Government official in Bombay, has not yet agreed to issue permits for the proposed 500 emigrants to Canada.

A call for 400 volunteers among the Hindus residents of Canada to go to India about the time the Komagata Maru sails back and to preach sedition there with the Maru passengers is now being issued here.

Hindus have also gone east in order, it is said, to get into the United States and come west to the Pacific coast states, and raise additional volunteers there to make the total number 1,000.

BROKE LAW ON ELECTION DAY

WINNIPEG, July 15. — Election day infringements of the Liquor Act have resulted in nearly twenty prosecutions being instituted by the Provincial License Department, against Winnipeg hotels for having their bars open on Friday last. The act provides that bars shall be closed all day during federal and provincial elections, and contrary to this a number of local bars opened for business when the polls closed on election day last week.

PETERBOROUGH, WEDNESDAY, JULY 15, 1914

WHITNEY SHOULD FORGET REAUME.

AN ITEM appeared in the Toronto papers to the effect that Mayor Clay of Windsor having been appointed to the vacant Registrarship of the County of Essex, the statement is current that a safe seat would be found in Northern Ontario for the defeated Minister of Public Works. Why these two names should be mentioned together has yet to be shown, but doubtless the powers behind the throne could illucidate the matter.

At any rate, the Whitney Government would be well advised to leave Dr. Reaume in the oblivion where the electors placed him. He was defeated in a constituency where the writer knows there is a large French vote. He was defeated by a Presbyterian preacher, and, so far as the voice of the people who know Dr. Reaume is concerned, it was decisively against the minister. Moreover, his record in office was by no means a brilliant one. The mess that has been made over the new Government House is directly attributable to Dr. Reaume. The actual cost of this building has far exceeded the estimates, a common defect in public works, but showing up lamely against those public Works built under the supervision of the Hon. Adam Beck, which were under the estimated cost in every instance. The location of this building, costing practically a round million, is at present the most serious charge against Dr. Reaume's disposition of this problem. Its setting could hardly have been worse chosen, located, as this expensive building is, in close proximity to brick yards, shunting freight engines, and other soul-inspiring details of its murky background. It is situated at the bottom of a hollow, where it has really no range of view, and altogether on this one thing alone the incompetence of the Minister of Public Works was plainly apparent and deserved the defeat he received.

How the Whitney Government thinks it will strengthen its position by retaining Dr. Reaume is a puzzle to those who wish well for the Conservative party. There are plenty of men in Ontario among the Conservatives recently elected from whom a Minister of Public Works could be selected who could discharge his duties with better results than has the Hon. Dr. Reaume. The Whitney Government received excellent support throughout Ontario for its strong administration in every department save that of Public Works, and, if it respects the electors who so generously endorsed its policy it will also respect the same voice when it condemned the one minister who was defeated and the administration of the department over which he presided. We say again, Sir James Whitney would be well advised to leave Dr. Reaume where his own electors placed him.

THE RESULT OF THE INQUIRY.

THE COURT ROOM at Quebec, made historic by the inquiry into the terrible disaster which overtook the Empress of Ireland in the St. Lawrence River, on the 29th of May, was crowded to the doors to hear Lord Mersey deliver the finding of the court. It was a breathless throng, intensely interested in the words of the judge, that listened to the reading of the judgment. Here and there were to be seen widows' weeds, the evidence of mourning caused by the wreck. Lord Mersey held the interest of his audience as he read, in clear, business-like tones, the finding of the court, which concluded the last scene of this phase of the tragedy. The crier fussily called "silence," the judges filed out, and, within a few minutes the court room, so long occupied with this case, was empty and silent.

As to Lord Mersey's report, which is one of the most important that has been rendered in recent years, it names primarily the First Officer of the Storstad, Tuftenes, with the negligence which caused the catastrophe. The Empress was exonerated, but one criticism of Captain Kendall's course was made, which is as follows:

> "We cannot accept this suggestion (that the Empress' steering gear was out of order), but we do think the stopping evidences uneasiness on the part of Captain Kendall and a consciousness that his ship was possibly in too close proximity to the Storstad. We think that he would have been better advised if he had given the Storstad a wider berth, and had navigated his ship so as to pass the Storstad at a greater distance on his beam than he originally intended. We do not think, however, that this stopping, which was really done for greater caution, can be said to have been an unseamanlike act, nor do we consider his failure to give the wider berth as a contributory cause of the disaster."

The report stated that the disaster was not in any way due to the St. Lawrence Channel, that the Empress sank quickly because of the flooding of her bulkheads on the starboard side, and that she was well equipped with life-saving appliances.

Evidence received makes it clear that the Empress of Ireland was damaged in the immediate vicinity of the watertight bulkhead fitted between the two boiler rooms, whilst the stem of the Storstad must have penetrated into the side of the Empress of Ireland sufficiently to destroy the water-tightness of this compartment. The immediate effect of the damage was to place compartments with a combined length of 175 feet in communication with the sea, allowing an initial inflow of water into the vessel of 263 tons per second. Under the actual conditions prevailing at the time of the collision, however, with the side of the vessel where struck, open to the sea above the main deck, and with bulkhead doors on the starboard side of that deck open, water could find its way freely over the deck, thus wholly destroying the vessel's stability and caused her to capsize and founder.

Three principal suggestions were made:

(1) That all watertight doors and portholes below the top of the watertight bulkheads be closed when in a fog.

(2) That the placing of rafts secure, and yet easily loosened, on the deck be considered.

(This, in the opinion of the Daily Mail, Montreal, is the most important and far-reaching suggestion.)

(3) That the system of picking up and dropping pilots on the St. Lawrence be changed so that incoming and outgoing ships will not have to cross each other.

The second one is important, but we do not think it is as important as the simple recommendations contained in the first suggestion, to insure the efficiency of watertight bulkheads, the object of which is to keep the boat afloat long enough to unload its passengers. An important fact in both the Empress and Titanic disasters was the rapidity with which the vessels sunk, and, had they been able to keep afloat longer, more lives would have been saved. When it is remembered that the largest proportion of human freight on these immense liners has to climb some sixty or more feet to where these rafts are recommended to be placed, their efficiency as life-saving apparatus is to be much discounted. A great difficulty of saving life at sea is to get the people from the hull of the ship to the lifeboats, and where ships are so large, there is such a distance to be covered that the installation of rafts or floating decks is to be much questioned.

It is to be noted that this report does not mean that the suggestions made will have to be carried out. The report merely suggests these things, and if it can be shown that the recommendations are feasible and calculated to increase the safety of passengers at sea, the necessary legal steps will be taken to have ships equipped as recommended.

The burden resting on First Officer Tuftenes is tremendous. He has been blamed for an error of judgment that cost over a thousand lives. No doubt he thought he could take his ship safely by the Empress. There is no moral culpability resting on him. His mistake is that of many a general who loses a battle, and which is the cause of pure accidents. To prevent the failure of the human factor by giving a greater margin of safety is the aim and keynote of the recommendations made, and it is hoped that such may be the actual result of them.

MR. BURNHAM'S TIMELY SUGGESTION.

THE SUGGESTION of Mr. J. H. Burnham, M. P., that the City Council take steps to celebrate the completion of the Trent Valley Canal is timely. For this locality, particularly the city of Peterborough, the occasion ought to be important and suitably marked. Doubtless the aldermen have some good ideas on the matter, but as it will likely receive considerable discussion, the more suggestions received the better.

It might be an auspicious occasion to hold an old-home day or week to mark the event. A booklet, outlining the history of the enterprise and describing the details of the system, ought to be a good memento of the occasion, as well as a good advertisement for the city. The fact that the waterway is complete needs to be blazed abroad as much as possible, so that all the traffic that should go through the canal will go that way. Where advisable, the local and other newspapers should be used. Possibly a committee to receive suggestions and report a proposed plan of celebrating the opening of the canal would be a practical beginning. At any rate, Mr. Burnham's suggestion should be immediately acted upon, for there is none too much time to carry to completion a suitable plan for celebrating the opening of the Trent Valley Canal System. One thing that should be borne in mind is that if anything is done, it should be done "right," and not made abortive by penuriousness or disputes about control and authority. The advisability of putting the whole plan decided on in the hands of a manager and special commission, or special committee of the Council, might be considered by the authorities. However, we trust that if they decide to celebrate the event, it will be worthy of the city of Peterborough.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

WE CONGRATULATE the London Advertiser on its thirty-two-page edition on its new Hoe press. The enterprise of the Advertiser is to be commended, and we trust recognition of that enterprise will continue in the future its past success. However, it made one claim as to size that we are inclined to question when it stated it was the one paper west of Ottawa that has adopted the long eight-column page. We are under the impression that the Hamilton Spectator is of this size.

Pat Ahead.

An Irish soldier serving in India so disliked the climate that he decided to make an effort to get sent home. With this object he complained to the doctor that his eyesight was bad. "How can you prove that to me?" said the doctor. At a loss Pat looked round the room before answering. "Well, doctor, you see that nail in the wall?" "Yes," replied the doctor. "Well," said Pat, "I can't!"

FOOT PASSENGERS

By Walt Mason

Pedestrians should be suppressed, all motorists avow; long since they ceased to be a jest, and they're a nuisance now. There's nothing harder on a car than running over men; it gives the works a deadly jar, and wrecks the springs again. This spring I bought a new machine that took 'most all my pile; I filled its tank with gasolene, to try it for a mile; two neighbors got beneath the wheels—their nerve was cold and raw; what wonder that a driver feels there ought to be a law? It takes all pleasure from the game, it spoils the joyous graft, to find that some wayfarer's frame is wound around a shaft. The walkers say they have a right to alley, street and lane, and just to demonstrate their spite, they let themselves be slain. Pedestrians will go too far; they're claiming now, 'tis said, that every man who runs a car should stop and plant his dead. With jealousy their breasts are filled; since they can't ride in cars, they take delight in being killed, in gaining wounds and scars; by this they're hoping to create a sentiment adverse to this, the pastime of the great — could jealousy do worse? Our legislatures and our courts should shield us from such shocks, should guard the noblest of all sports, and jail the man who knocks.

SPECIAL CORNER FOR AFTER DINNER READERS

A MATRIMONIAL SCHEME

By EDITH V. ROSS

Clementine Woodbridge, an old schoolmate and bosom friend of mine, married and was so happy with her husband that she wished me to be happy too. So she concocted a scheme to trap me into the double life. She got up a house party for my especial benefit, composed of half a dozen young men and a dozen young women, and informed me that one of the young men was intended for my fiance. But when I asked her to name him she declined, saying that to do so would spoil it all. He had been informed that one of the girls of the party had been picked out for him, but he, too, was to be kept in ignorance as to her identity.

When the party met I looked the young men over, but did not think I could fall in love with any one of them. A man might passively submit to ignorance in such a matter, but not a woman. I had not been in the house five minutes before I began to try to find out who the man was who had been picked out for me. But Clementine had made this not so easy a matter as would appear by telling every one the same story she had told me. In other words, the party had been divided into couples with matrimonial intentions. But this was only better to keep me and the man picked out for me from discovering each other.

Nevertheless all took kindly to the plan, especially the girls, each one of whom was as much bent on finding out her partner.

My favorite was Alan Coleman; therefore I was sure he was the man who was intended for me. But Alan did not reciprocate, and after showing my preference for him I suddenly dropped him and lavished my favor on George Burke, who acted as if I was the girl picked out for him or at least was the girl he hoped had been picked out for him.

As soon as I dropped Alan and showed a preference for George Helen Smith, who had conceived an idea that George was intended for her, showed her spleen toward me, treating me with the greatest coolness. Alan also, seeing the change in me, considered himself very much injured, barely speaking to me, and it was evident that there was an antagonism between him and George.

What took place among the four that I have mentioned occurred with the others as well. Every girl became antagonistic to every other girl; that I knew. But I didn't have as clear an insight into what was going on among the men. I don't believe men think as much about marrying as women do. Marriage in the case of men usually comes about unintentionally, while women intend to marry if they can find the men they want and can get them. However, we had not been working out Clementine Woodbridge's matrimonial scheme long before her husband admitted to me that there was nearly as much rivalry among the men as among the women.

During the first few days of our house party it was very enjoyable. During the next few days constraint began to appear, though it was varnished over with apparent good will. By the time we had spent two weeks together the house was in an uproar. Many of the girls did not speak to one another, and, as for the men, they looked as if they would like to shoot one another. Several of the girls told our hostess that they were about to take their departure, making some trivial excuse, and were only prevented from breaking up the party by Clementine telling them that if they didn't finish the term for which they were invited—twenty days—she would feel offended.

Finally the day before the expiration of the term Clementine called us all into the library and said that she had been urged by her guests to reveal the names of the couples as she had intended them to unite and would read them out from a paper on which she had written them and sealed in the presence of witnesses on the day the invitations were sent out. She then broke the seal of an envelope, took out the list and read aloud:

"Walter Hartley and Jennie Hart."

"Oh, my goodness grac'"— exclaimed Miss Hart, stopping the exclamation by putting her hand over her mouth.

Mr. Hartley's eyes bulged, his face reddened, and he looked as if his shirt collar were choking him. They had paid each other no attention whatever.

"Henry Depue and Helen Dougherty."

Miss Dougherty arose from her seat and, with her head in the air, swept out of the room. Mr. Depue sat still, staring at the ceiling.

"Donald Mix and Celia Moffat."

"What an idea!" exclaimed Miss Moffat, with a vicious giggle.

The last couple called was myself and my partner, Everett Clarke.

I had fortunately the experience of three girls who had shown rudeness and had resolved when my turn came to show myself a lady. I threw a kiss to the partner who had been provided for me.

That act made my matrimonial market. Mr. Clarke was so delighted with my act that, smiling all over, he ran out to the conservatory, plucked a few flowers and, hastening back, handed them to me amid a clapping of hands. He then and there made a secret resolution that he would win me for his wife, and he succeeded.

Women as Cricketers.

A women's cricket club has been started in London. The secretary, Miss Ethel Hill, a very capable player, announces that the club had some 50 members, including writers, artists and actresses.

"We hope to start in June," she explained, "on a ground which is being found for us either in Richmond or St. Quintin's Park, near Wormwood Scrubs. We hope one day to have a mixed club, with both men and women playing on each side in matches. We have received encouragement from Mr. P. F. Warner, Miss Beatrice Harraden and Dr. Saleeby, and we are confident of every success."

Miss Hill looks forward to the day when ladies' elevens from the Overseas Dominions will visit England. "In all probability we shall play matches about twice a week, and some of our neighbors have declared their intention of giving up summer golf altogether and devoting their energies to cricket. The costumes for play are being designed by one of our members."

DISCOVERER OF SHAPHIRA FRAUD IS NO MORE

Of the company of learned men engaged in the revision of the Old Testament in 1884, not one now survives.

Dr. C. D. Gingsburg, who was the last of the revisers, died a few weeks ago at the age of 83 years.

Dr. Gingsburg was a Polish Jew who forsook Judaism and embraced Christianity. His special knowledge of Hebrew was probably unique, and his introduction to the Hebrew Bible, his edition of the Hebrew Bible, his Massorah, as well as other studies, have secured him a lasting place in the scroll of fame.

But Dr. Gingsburg is known to the wider world by the service he rendered to the British Museum on a memorable occasion. A certain dealer in old manuscripts who had already procured through the Arabs many literary curiosities, a Mr. Shaphira, in 1883 reported a find to the British Museum which created an immense sensation.

This "find" was a copy of the Book of Deuteronomy, made in the reign of Jehoshaphat, nearly 900 years before Christ. It consisted of fifteen leather strips, black with age. To the casual observer there was only a plain oily surface, but on touching them with spirits of wine these strips appeared covered with writing—40 columns of Deuteronomy, in the ancient characters similar to those on the Moabite stone.

Mr. Shaphira estimated the value of this new treasure at $5,000,000. Obviously the first thing the British Museum authorities wanted to be assured of was the genuineness of this discovery. As many critical questions would be settled by such a document, Biblical scholars held their breath while the investigation was proceeding. On Tuesday, August 21, 1883, the Times announced that the document was a fraud, one of the cleverest literary swindles ever perpetrated.

CENSUS OF BIRDS BEING TAKEN

Count Will Include All of the Different Species in the Country Except Game Birds

Washington, July 15. — Officials of the biological survey in the department of agriculture hope soon to be able to announce the most accurate count ever made of the birds in the United States. Returns from some of the hundreds of nature-lovers around the country who have enlisted as volunteer enumerators have been coming in, reflecting an enthusiatic interest in the count.

When the census was decided upon about 250 bird enthusiasts in all sections of the country who prevously had rendered valuable service were asked to supply the desired information, and in addition to these, several hundred others volunteered their aid.

The counting has been going on since June 1st, and was to have been wound up by July 1st, but it probably will be some time before the last of the returns are in and announcement is made of the total bird population. The census will not include the varieties known as game birds, but in all other respects it will be as thorough and as well classified as is practicable. Previous estimates by the bird experts are that there are 880 main species of birds in the Unitd States and Canada, the varieties being more generously distributed in the eastern states than in the west, and the least of all in the prairies.

But this is only a guess. The enumerators in the present count have been assigned typical tracts of woodland, cultivated land and pasture, and asked to count the birds on each. Officials of each state will be asked to furnish the department of agriculture with information showing the total number of acres of each kind of land within the borders of the states and the number of birds in each state then will be fairly accurately computed.

The plan adopted by many of the observers is to zigzag back and forth across the chosen area at daylight, counting the male birds of each species, as at that time of day, at this season, each is in full song and easily seen. After the migration period is over and the birds are settled in summer quarters it is safe to considre that each male represents a breeding pair. One of the main objects of the census, by the way, is to determine how many pairs of birds of each species breed within definite areas,

A count taken in a part of Chevy Chase, a suburb of Washington, showed thirty-four species of birds in a tract of twenty-three acres, the total number of breeding pairs being 150, about seven to an acre. The average, it is stated, is about one pair to an acre. As the tract in question is thickly populated, the bird experts of the government see in this report a reputation of the theory that the presence of many people tends to decrease the number of birds.

CAKE RECIPES

The inhabitants of nearly every Continental region are expert cake makers, and the desults of their handiwork invariably fascinate sweetmeat loving visitors. Some of the most attractive cakes of the Continent are quite simply made, however—quite within the powers of an average cook.

Barcelona Shortbread.

Half pound each of flour and butter, half pound of ground Barcelona nuts, 2 ounces of castor sugar. Mix together the flour and ground nuts. Cream the butter with the sugar, gradually adding the flour and nuts during the process. When the whole is a smooth paste roll out to an eighth of an inch in thickness, cut into squares or other shapes, put in a baking tin and bake in moderate oven till slightly browned.

Swiss Spice Cake.

Quarter pound each of flour, butter and castor sugar, 2 egg yolks, a tablespoonful each of powdered cinnamon, and nutmeg, half a teaspoonful each of ground ginger, powdered cloves and cream of tartar, some carbonate of soda and milk. Cream together the sugar and butter. Drop in the egg yolks separately and beat well. Add all to the spices and sufficient milk to make a very thick batter. Pour mixture into a greased round cake tin, and bake for an hour in a steady oven.

Dutch Cheese Cakes.

Half pound of Dutch cheese, 1 oz. each of butter, flour, and castor sugar; 1 egg, 1½ ozs. of sultanas, 1 lemon, some puff paste. Line some deep patty tins with the puff paste, leave them for ten minutes, and then fill with the following mixture:—Grate the cheese finely and mix with the sugar, then add the melted butter the flour and the egg yolk. Mix. Stir in the grated rind of a small lemon, and the sultanas (previously cleaned). Finally add the egg white very stiffly frothed. The pastry cases should be quite filled with mixture, and the cakes baked for from thirty to forty minutes.

Vienna Chocolate Rolls.

Two ounces of unsweetened chocolate, 3 ozs. castor sugar, two egg whites, flavoring. Grate the chocolate finely, whisk the egg whites stiffly, flavoring with a few spots of vanilla or other preferred essence; then beat in the sugar and chocolate. Form the mixture into little rolls, place on a greased baking sheet, and bake until very crisp.

Chocolate Fishes.

A tempting dainty is a chocolate fish, already hooked on a small line attached to a tiny pole four to five inches long. This small fish rests in a little wooden box containing several other chocolate members of the piscatory world. In the corner of the box is the real surprise.

For after the chocolate fish is unhooked and eaten his chocolate brothers are likewise disposed of, there is folded into the cover of the box a small pasteboard fishing pond, with four or five pasteboard fish all ready to take the imaginary bait from the bent-wire hook on the end of the tiny fish line.

If you mix plaster of paris with vinegar, instead of water, it will be like putty and will harden slowly.

Buy by weight.
Next time you buy soap have the grocer weigh it. A bar of N.P. SOAP at 15 cents, the best soap you ever used, weighs more than 4 five cent cakes of any other kind.
Yes, more than 5 of some brands.
N.P. SOAP saves you from 25¢ to 40¢ on every dollars worth.
Ask for N.P. SOAP next time.

BIGGEST FLOATING DOCK ON PACIFIC READY THIS YEAR

It is expected that the Grand Trunk Pacific authorities will have the big dry dock at Prince Rupert in operation before the end of the present year. The completion of this great work will mean much to Northern British Columbia and especially to Prince Rupert. That rapidly growing city will have a new industry this coming winter. Many of the big coast steamers that have hitherto been compelled to make their headquarters elsewhere will be overhauled in its harbor. It will be able to boast of the largest floating dock on the Pacific with an equipment including every up-to-date device for handling ships up to 20,000 tons. There are four large buildings to house the various sections of the ship building and reparing plant and practically all the machinery to equip the shops has been made in Canada.

The yard will have a 45 ton locomotive crane. Other machinery includes an 80 foot lathe, capable of turning a steel shaft 50 feet in length; a plate bending machine with a capacity of bending a sheet of steel twenty feet by three-quarters of an inch thick; a big steam hammer and four air compressors. The machine shop, boiler shop and blacksmith shop will have the most complete set of modern tools on the coast.

Adjoining the dock along the face of the harbor are the big new wharves and the railroad has large freight yards here.

For a city that dates back only to 1906, when the Grand Trunk Pacific's staff of engineers made a landing and clearing for the location of their camp preparatory to making the preliminary survey, this is a record of progress that it would be hard to equal.

A rather unfortunate accident occured to a boy who was working for Mr. D. McMann last week. The young fellow was driving a two-horse hay rake and the wheel ran up on a fence, upsetting the rake. The noise scared the horses so badly they ran away and were only stopped by the rake becoming wedged between a telephone pole and the fence. The boy was extracted from the debris and found to be suffering from a compound fracture of the leg. Dr. Thompson was soon in attendance and reduced the fracture. The patient was later taken to the Hospital at Peterboro.

Biggest Cannon to Guard Panama Canal

Washington, July 14. — When its breech locking device has been perfected at Watervliet arsenal, the great 16-inch gun, the biggest piece of ordnance in the world, which has just been shipped from Sandy Hook proving grounds, will be practically ready for service on the Panama canal Pacific fortifications. It is 50 feet long, weighs 142 tons, and fires a projectile about six feet long. The projectile itself weighs a ton and is discharged by 665 pounds of powder.

This gun has a maximum range of from 22 to 23 miles and has sufficient power, theoretically, to pierce two feet of the best armor at the muzzle. At 11 miles the gun is calculated to pierce a 12-inch armor plate.

AN INCREASE IN COMMITMENTS

Increase in Cost of Living for Prisoners

That the Ontario Parole Commission could render more valuable services if a better parole act existed, is the assertion made by D. J. T. Gilmour, superintendent of the Ontario Reformatory, in the annual report of Edwin R. Rogers, Provincial inspector of prisons, which has just been issued. The report is for the year ending Oct. 31, 1913.

The report of Dr. R. W. Bruce Smith, inspector of common jails, is contained in the same issue as that of Mr. Rogers.

The number of jails in Ontario at the present time Dr. Smith places at 46, with five provincial lockups. The total expenditure during the year for jail maintenance was $202,074.82, a decrease of $361.94 over the year 1912.

The cash revenue from jail labor at Kingston and Perth was $1530.50. The average cost for each prisoner per day in the common jails was 24¾ cents. This is an increase of a quarter of a cent over the previous year.

The number of persons committed to the jails and lockups during the year was 19,250, an increase of 2,265 over the year 1912.

More for Murder.

The commitments for murder in 1913 were 31, an increase of seven over the previous year. The commitments for manslaughter in 1913 were 12, a decrease of five over the previous year.

Number of insane committed to jails, 491, a decrease of 21 over the previous year. There were 112 more prisoners sentenced to the penitentiary than during 1913.

There were 10,250 prisoners sentenced in 1912, while in 1913 there were 11,397, an increase of 1,647.

The number of persons sentenced to terms over one year was 92 more than during the pevious year. The number confined in prisons on Sept. 30, 1913 (date of the report), was 95 more than on the same date the year previous. Of those committed 7,549 were married men, while 11,701 were single.

Eighteen prisoners escaped during the year, five of whom were recaptured. There were 18 deaths in jails, a decrease of two over the previous year.

HUBBY LEFT A TELL TALE LETTER

Police Are Now on the Lookout for Him

The Ottawa police are looking for John Langford an alleged bigamist at Ottawa and a former resident of this county, having worked here with several farmers. It is alleged that Langford is a bigamist having a wife in Ottawa and also one in England where he came from about six years ago.

The story told the Ottawa police by Mrs. Langford at Ottawa is to the effect that she was married to Langford about a year ago in Ottawa by the Rev. Mr. Earle of the Bethany Church. Several weeks ago her husband received a letter from the Old Country which was the means of perturbing his mind. He left the letter on the table in the house, and his wife, not knowing what it was read it. The letter contained such information which led Mrs. Langford to the belief that her husband was married to a woman in England previous to his marriage with her. On his arrival home that evening from work she accused him and he became infuriated, treated her rather roughly. She swore out a warrant at the police station for his arrest. Meanwhile hubby got wise and decamped to parts unknown, resulting in the police instituting a search for him.

His Trade.

"If you don't mind, sir," said the new convict, addressing the warden, "I should like to be put on my own trade."

"That might be a good idea," said the warden, "What might your trade be?"

"I'm an aviator," said the new arrival,"—Houston (Tex.) Chronicle.

FUNERAL OF THE LATE COMMISSIONER DAVID M. REES

Toronto, July 15. — The funeral service to the late David M. Rees, whose body was recovered Saturday from the sunken Empress of Ireland, was held at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon in the Headquarters Temple of the Salvation Army. For the service the hall was beautifully decorated with palms and the blood red banners of the Salvationists. The remains lay amid a heap of flowers. The funeral was the largest since the mammoth spectacle in Massey Hall over a month ago.

While the 150 bandsmen, gathered together from all parts of the city under John Cosway, bandmaster, played the service, the officers and the headquarters staff took their places on the platform. Colonel Chandler then intoned the verses of "My Jesus I Love Thee," and the audience responded, singing the hymn. Prayer was offered by Mrs. Adjutant Hoddinott. The audience again sang "Precious Promise God Has Given." A portion of Scripture was read, and there were two solos.

Colonel Rees spoke reminiscently of his connection in the late Commissioner. He had known him longest of any officer in Canada. In 35 years of Army work he had served under Commissioner Rees three terms as his assistant field secretary in Great Britain and for two years as assistant at the International Training College in London. For the past three years the Commissioner had been in charge of the Army's work in British America and Alaska.

Sympathy His Strong Point.

"His strong point," said Colonel Rees, "was to enter sympathetically into the difficulties, trials and sorrows of his fellow-men; and his untiring patience in dealing with men. He could sit down with a man in sorrow or trial for hours together until he had thoroughly cleared away the whole difficulty."

Colonel Gaskin paid this tribute to his dead commanding officer:

"Commissioner Rees was great because of his goodness. He had a pleasant personality, radiated kindness, was an apostle of good cheer and good-will, an optimist, believing in the possibilities of good in all men, and his whole life was devoted to the reclamation of ruined humanity. We should do well to follow in his footsteps, even as he followed in Christ's."

The late Commissioner was in his fifty-ninth year, and had been in Army work for the past 35 years. Staff Captain Holman also spoke, and the service closed with "Abide with Me." The remains were not viewed.

On Albert street the procession to the grave was formed. The various flags and banners were placed in advance, and then came the men and women of the Toronto staffs. One half of the bandsmen followed, and then the hearse and carriages. Field officers marched farther behind, the second band followed, and the rank and file of the several hundred uniformed soldiers brought up the rear. The procession, marching up Yonge street, kept its form as far as Charles street. At the Army's plot in Mount Pleasant officers re-formed again for the service of interment. Colonel Gaskin pronounced the committal.

FORMER DURHAM FARMER FOUND DEAD AT HIS HOME

Thomas Whitmore, a farmer living about seven miles west of town, was found dead in his home on Tuesday by his cousin, Thomas Whitmore, of Crozier. When found the body was in an advanced stage of decay, showing that Mr. Whitmore must have been dead several days. The deceased came here about seven years ago from Durham, Ont., and settled on a farm west of town. He was about sixty years of age, unmarried, and lived alone. The last few years he had been subject to apoplexy and it is supposed that he was seized suddenly, and, no help in call, passed away. On the 5th of June Dr. Moore attended him and at that time warned him that he should not be alone as he was liable to drop off at any time. Deceased, as far as known, had no relatives here beyond his cousin, Thomas Whitmore. The body was interred on Wednesday on the homestead, the funeral being private.—Fort Frances Times.

HE WOULD PAVE THE ALLEYWAYS

Conditions at Some Places Are Detrimental to Health

"Although the general public may call me a faddist, these matters are of vital importance to the health of the city," said Sanitary Inspector Spence to The Review today in speaking of the unsanitary conditions of the lanes and alleyways in the business section of the city. The conditions are such as to warrant a serious outbreak, which will be the means of bringing the public to their senses. We have coaxed and used persuasion considerably, and from now on things will be forced. Dr. Clinton recently visited these places and strongly condemned the conditions. The Sanitary Inspector is required by the Public Health Officer to keep a vigilant supervision over all lanes and streets, etc. The lanes in the central district should be paved. People who use the yards and lanes should also keep them in sufficient condition as to avoid any serious infectious diseases arising from such.

In speaking of one prominent yard which has been a bone of contention for the past two years, Dr. Clinton stated that he was of the opinion that the owners could be made to pave this yard. The sewer pipe was higher than the ground, and all washings from the store nearby, which happens to be a fish store, instead of going through the sewer, remain, or, instead of soaking into the ground, remain on the top. On a hot day one could easily imagine the result. Girls directly above the yard were working. They were either forced to shut their windows and suffer from poisoned interior air or open the windows and suffer from the foul air of the yard.

The same condition prevails most of the time.

Property owners had been notified regarding the condition of their yards on numerous occasions. The majority of them are willing to have their yards paved. One in particular had refused to acknowledge the instructions to clean up. Other yards around the business section also were bad.

Referring to the Eating House Bylaw, Mr. Spence remarked that the bylaw included the sale of soft drinks and other minor refreshments. Places which might be fit to sell soft drinks might not be fit to eat in. The small grocer considered it an injustice that for the sale of a few bottles of pop they had to submit to taking out a license. They had to pay the same as the larger restaurants, and they considered it an injustice.

Dr. Clinton, he said, had inspected the waters of of Stoney Lake and had reported them to be in fairly satisfactory condition. The majority of the cottagers were carrying out the wishes and regulations of the Health Department.

Nine Year Old Miss Took First Class Honors

Miss Winnifred King, 9 years old, made a splendid showing in the recent examination of the Toronto College of Music, winning 1st class honors in the primary piano exams, and standing 2nd in the list out of 400, in the Dominion of Canada.

This speaks well for the talent of the little girl (who has only been taking lessons since last September) also for the thoroughness of her training. She is a pupil of Mrs. Fenwick, George St.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

HEAR! HEAR!

Editor of The Review,

Dear Sir,—Now that the election is a thing of the past, don't you think it high time that the bill boards in the city received a coat or two of white wash, especially on George St., or are we to understand that Mr. Rowell wants "Is that you Daddy?" to decorate our street for the next four years, to save expense for the next campaign. For my part I am of the opinion that such an eye sore should be covered up.

Yours,
TEMPERANCE.

60 Expensive Dresses at One Price, $1.69

This is our annual clean-up sale of Wash Dresses. Last year there were twice as many, and we cleared the lot long before the noon hour. The values run as high as $7.50—a few even higher. Some of these dresses are quite soiled and need a visit to the wash tub; some are creased and wrinkled; others for some reason have not sold well. When we say this is positively the best dress bargain of the year, it's putting it rather mildly. Included in this lot are about fifteen white dresses. They were bought late last season, and on this account need a little altering, but then this is worth overlooking when we tell you that some of these are worth as high as $12.50. We cannot accept phone orders, neither can these dresses be exchanged. All clearing at the one very low price of $1.69

SUNLIGHTS ON THE MERCHANTS BIG PICNIC

Mr. J. C. Sullivan, East City, will not now be a passenger in the Aeroplane since W. J. Byers is going to run it.

F. J. Might is keeping on the good side of Hangman Fowler since the latter has received the appointment.

R. M. Glover of the Examiner may be taken before Judge Lynch as soon as he comes on the grounds, everything he has done wrong on the merchants during the past year, will be settled there and then. The Hangman will donate his services free in case he is needed.

Robt. G. Kingan and Herb. Stenson will be contestants in the Pie Eating Contest.

Several of the prominent ladies in town are buying a lot of nails these days. No doubt it is for the nail driving contest.

Porter S. White is trying to make the grade to measure the necessary 64 inches waist measurement in the Fat Man's race. The hundred weight of flour looks good to him.

Several applicants have come in to get into the pillow fight, among these are ex-Mayor Bradburn, John Crane, W. G. Morrow and J. J. Turner.

M. J. Hickey has offered the Hangman a fabulous sum to get his position for 30 minutes. If he gets it, D. M. Minicola will not be on the grounds.

There is sure to be doings on the grounds all afternoon and evening, and it cannot all be told here, as many things will happen at the picnic that your scribe knows not of.

INCIDENTS AT THE CADET CAMP

The following account of the Cadet Camp, at Barriefield, has been received by the Review.

The Cadet Camp opened up successfully on July 6th. They all arrived in two days, Monday and Tuesday. There were 1,707 cadets, and about 1,800 of all ranks. The keenest interest in being shown in the work by all ranks and so far, no serious hospital cases have been reported.

The catering is being carried out by Messrs. Reid and Hambrook of Kingston. It is all that can be desired, good, healthy food, and plenty of it, is the rule of the camp.

Everybody is highly pleased with the catering with the exception of one or two, but these men would do with about six days at Petawawa on jam and bread diet.

A new departure in the camp this year is the moving pictures conducted every evening by the Y.M.C.A. and judging from the number of boys who patronize this venture it appears to be a very good method of keeping the boys in camp at night. Anywhere from 12 to 15 hundred boys gather to watch the pictures every night.

Great credit is due the Y.M.C.A. for the good work carried on here. The "Y." have the handling of all incoming and outgoing mail, which is no small undertaking.

An interesting feature of Wednesday's program, was a presentation by Col. Hemming to Bat. Com. Lorne Cann, of Peterboro, of a medal for shooting. Col. Hemming complimented Mr. Cann for the keen interest he shows in cadet work and hoped that the other boys would endeavor to win a medal for the different branches connected with cadet work.

Wednesday night a big bonfire was lighted and a program was given in the firelight. This lasted from 9 to 10 p.m. in front of the headquarters' tent. This finished with the singing of God Save the King, and three cheers for the general staff, and three cheers for the cadet camp.

Great credit is due to Col. Hemming and Major Gillespie for the able manner in which the camp was conducted Wednesday afternoon the General Staff Officer. Col. Gwynne, director of cadet services, inspected the Brigade of 5 Battalions. He was highly pleased with the manner in which the corps conducted themselves.

The inspection lasted about two hours. The Peterborough Boys' Band played the march past for the third battalion.

Mr. Otter, the Y.M.C.A. representative, was severely burned while taking a flashlight on Friday evening the 10th inst. The Ottawa Cadet Corps won the best shot honors again this year.

The Williamstown Cadet Corps were awarded a cup for best corps on the common.

A Stirling man received a nasty cut on the left eye. This required a couple of stitches.

Thursday opened up a beautiful day. Cadets rose at the usual hour and took part in physical exercises, each corp in command of its own instructor. After breakfast the 3rd Battalion was formed up to partake of the musketry instruction on the ranges. The Batt. was in command of Capt. Hounsell (musketry instructor) assisted by Instructor F. Foster. Inspector Foster explained the mysteries of marking in the Batts. to about 58 cadets during the morning.

At the early morning parade the Battalions were visited by Col. the Hon. Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, and Col. Gwynne of the General Staff.

Col. Hughes shook hands with and complimented the officers and instructors of the 3rd Battalion, and expressed his pleasure at the fitness of the cadets. The staff also complimented the cadets on the cleanliness of the camp.

Thursday afternoon about 600 cadets went down the St. Lawrence River on the steamer America for a trip around the Thousand Islands. The remainder journeyed down to Lake Ontario Park where a special vaudeville was given. The park excursion arrived back about 8 o'clock, when a good supper was served to the boys. The boat trip arrived back about 8.30 o'clock. All those who went down on this trip seemed highly satisfied with the beautiful trip.

Thursday night was a very quiet night. All the boys seemed very tired, so this appeared to be a good reason for the silence.

Friday morning the Third Batt. formed up for target practice and under the direction of Musketry Inst. Capt. Hounsell some good work was indulged in for about 3 hours.

Friday afternoon a big field of sports were run off by all five Battalions separately. A large number of handsome prizes were given. About $100 worth of prizes were competed for by the five Battalions of cadets.

Friday night another large bonfire was lighted in front of the Headquarters' Camp. About 1,200 cadets were present. Col. Hemming made a few suitable remarks at the close of the camp. This closed with three cheers for Col. Hemming and Major Gillespie.

Saturday morning the camp broke up. The different corps left at the scheduled time. The recommendation was put through that another year, the camp be a ten day one instead of a six, as is now the case.

Captain C. E. Jamieson was in charge of the third battalion.

The cloudy look on a piano can be removed by a cloth dipped in soap and water wrung very dry.

Have all dishes for the refrigerator of white enamelled ware of various shapes and sizes and keep them just for holding left-overs. There will be no broken china if this plan is followed.

NO ALCOHOLIC APPETIZERS FOR SCOTCH LABORERS

It is explained that the new legislation against early morning drinking in Scotland has reference largely to the habits of some classes of laborers.

The bill is aimed at the breakfast-hour drinking of intoxicants on an empty stomach, to which, among skilled artisans, the "black squad" who work in the open (riveters, platers, caulkers, and boilermakers), and dockers, among casual laborers, are much addicted. Among the engineers who work under cover the mischief is said to be much less.

The customary hours of work are from 6 a.m. till 5.30 p.m., with a breakfast interval from 9 to 9.30 or 9.45, and a dinner hour from 1 to 2. With the public houses open as hitherto from 8 a.m. there is a temptation for men engaged in hard open-air work in an inclement climate to take a "refreshment" before breakfast, and this is not only unwholesome in itself, but is believed to conduce to excessive drinking at other hours.

The present extent of the mischief is hard to estimate. The only evidence adduced as to breakfast-hour drinking related to a single public-house in Glasgow, which was seen to be entered by 84 and left by 47 customers within the space of nine minutes during the breakfast hour on a Monday morning. From Aberdeen on the other hand, there was the estimate made by a licensee that the loss of two hours trading in the morning would cost the 125 license holders in the 11 wards no less than 44,000 pounds sterling per annum. Aberdeen, moreover, has no black squad. Its morning customers at the public-houses are fishermen in from the sea, or women engaged on night work at the curing sheds.

As to the probable effects of the new legislation, it is said that the comparative indifference with which the prospect of the change has been received, even in the industrial district, leads to the belief that it will be little resented in practice.

Silence is the wisest argument of an ignorant man.

The Doctor knows that Beer is healthful

That is why he drinks—

and prescribes it for his patients. He knows that the greatest scientists and food experts—like Dr. Wiley and Prof. Gartner—have proved the food and tonic value of beer, brewed like O'Keefe's "Pilsener" Lager.

This wholesome nourishing beer is brewed only from fine Barley Malt, choicest Hops and filtered water. 345

HUERTA TAKES RECREATION.

Mexican Dictator Celebrates French National Holiday.

MEXICO CITY, July 15. — President Huerta was the guest of honor of the French colony at a celebration at Chapultepec Park yesterday, in commemoration of the fall of the Bastille. The President was also seen during the course of the day in various public places, and, so far as could be learned, no preparations are being made for his possible departure from the capital.

Many Mexicans joined with the French residents in celebrating the holiday. Most of the stores were closed, and the buildings in the principal streets were decorated with French and Mexican flags.

Carranza Presses Forward.

WASHINGTON, July 15. — Although the resignation of Gen. Huerta is confidently expected by the State Department and Washington diplomats to occur at any moment, the the Constitutionalists, unaffected by the news, are pressing hard their military campaign on Mexico City.

Official despatches revealed that Gen. Villa with 15,000 men was ready for a rapid advance on the Mexican capital, and that Gen. Obregon's forces at Guadalajara were prepared to sweep onward within a few days. Although officials have not been given much to prediction, they now firmly believe the Constitutionalists will be in Mexico City in two or three weeks regardless of what the Huerta Government may do.

TO SEEK RESTITUTION.

Government Will Demand Excess Subsidy From Southampton Ry.

OTTAWA, July 15.—When the report of A. R. Pringle, K.C., who investigated the cost of the Southampton Railway of New Brunswick, is made the Government will take steps to force restitution of the subsidy which the commissioner states was fraudulently obtained from the Dominion.

The ordinary subsidy is $3,200, but where the cost of the road runs up to $21,000 a double subsidy is paid. In the case of the Southampton Railway the figures of cost were padded so as to make it appear $21,000 a mile and $6,000 a mile on the recommendation of Mr. Johnson was paid the road. The road is some 13 miles long, and the total subsidy paid was $81,000. The Government will take force restitution of half this amount, or $40,500. The Department of Railways and Canals accepted the recommendation of its engineer, E. V. Johnson, who has been suspended.

Arbitrator Agreed To.

GENEVA, Switzerland, July 15.—The Swiss Government has officially acceded to the request made by both Greece and Turkey for the appointment of an arbitrator to settle the differences between these two countries in the event of the negotiations which are now going on at Smyrna failing. A Graeco-Turkish commission is endeavoring to reach a settlement on the emigration question and an exchange of property belonging to Greek and Turkish refugees.

Dragged By Horses.

GUELPH, July 15.—A serious accident occurred yesterday morning when Mr. Robert Caulfield, a farmer near Arkell, almost lost his life. He was mowing in one of his fields, touching the highway. Something went wrong with the mowing machine and the horses ran away. Mr. Caulfield was thrown to the ground and dragged the length of the field. He was badly hurt, and is in a critical condition.

Master Painters Convene.

BELLEVILLE, July 15. — The eleventh annual convention of the Canadian Association of Master House Painters and Decorators was opened in this city yesterday with a large attendance of delegates from all parts of the Dominion. President George Metcalfe, of Hamilton, delivered his annual address and a number of papers were read. The convention will last until Friday afternoon.

Good crackers to serve with salad are made with a half-inch cube of cheese set in the centre of each cracker, which then is browned in the oven.

TEN MORE CONSTABLES.

They Will Look Out For Unlicensed Chauffeurs.

TORONTO, July 15. — Ten more constables are to be appointed by the Provincial Secretary's Department on Friday to assist in enforcement of the Motor Vehicles Act. They will be stationed at points throughout the province.

While all infringements of the act will be watched for, what was especially provocative of these appointments is the boast of a good number of chauffeurs, some with much experience, that they have taken out no license and will not do so. Other drivers have passed parts, but not all of the necessary examination, and are driving motor vehicles.

St. Clements Is Liberal.

WINNIPEG, July 15. — St. Clements was added to the list of safe Liberal seats by additional figures received from that constituency yesterday morning. Three missing polls give Hay (Con.) 66, and Ross (Lib.) 50. With one poll to hear from, where there are less than 30 names on the list, the vote now stands: Hay 882, Ross 1,025, or a majority of 143. This makes the standing: Conservaives 25, Opposition 21. There will not likely be any change unless such should occur through some recounts which may be demanded.

Shortis Is Now Insane.

OTTAWA, July 15.—It is learned here that Valentine Shortis, the Volleyfield, Que., murderer of years ago, now in Kingston Penitentiary, has developed insanity, though of a harmless form.

It was the commutation of Shortis' sentence to life imprisonment that nearly wrecked a Government once, as vice-regal and social influence was alleged as having operated to save him from the gallows.

Devotion to Duty Cost His Life.

EDMONTON, Alta., July 15.—In a head-on collision in the Edmonton yards of the C. N. R. Frank Scott, fireman, jumped, shouting to Marshall to do the same. Instead the engineer blew his whistle and jammed on the brakes.

TOOK STOLEN PAPERS.

And British Newspaperman Goes To a Japanese Prison.

TOKIO, July 15. — Andrew M. Rooley, an English newspaperman, was yesterday sentenced to two years' imprisonment and a fine of $100 on a charge of receiving stolen documents in connection with the recent Japanese naval scandals involving officers in the receipt of illicit commissions for influencing the allotment of contracts.

Rooley received the documents from Carl Richter, an employe of a German armament firm, who had stolen them, and was alleged to have used them for blackmailing purposes.

Two other prisoners also were convicted yesterday in the same case, V. Herrmann, the Tokio representative of the German armament firm, being sentenced to one year in jail, and George Blundell, also connected with English journalism, to ten months' imprisonment. The sentences on these two men were suspended for three years.

Three Girls Drowned.

WESTFIELD, Mass., July 15.—Three girls, patients at the Tuberculosis Hospital, were drowned while bathing in the Westfield river yesterday, in company with about 20 other patients. Most of the girls could not swim and were unable to aid their companions. The drowned were Fannie Gold, 14, and Bella D. Steinberg, 15, of Boston, and Annie E. Linehan, 13, of Chelsea. The girls were in charge of a nurse from the hospital and stepped into a hole about 16 feet deep, some distance from shore.

Subway Is Refused.

OTTAWA, July 15.—A judgment of the Dominion Railway Commission just issued refuses the application of the Board of Trade of Georgetown, Ont., for an order for a subway under the G. T. R. tracks at Esquesing Township, near Georgetown.

Although the company was ready to contribute and the municipalities also, the commission did not feel that the danger was sufficient to warrant compelling the company to go to the expense that would be required.

SPEEDING BLOUNTMEN BUMPED THE SENATORS

In Merry Melange of hits and Errors, Petes Came Out on Top

Ottawa, July 14.—Peterboro made it two out of three against the Ottawas, taking today's game by a score of 9 to 5. Ottawa led by 2 to 0 until the fifth, when two errors by Smykal, one by Powers, and one by Nill, coupled with hits by Miller, Sterling, Blount, Byrne and Welsh gave the visitors five runs and a lead that Ottawa could not overcome. After the second inning Sterling had the Ottawas numbered, whilst Peterboro drove Shocker out of the box in the fifth, and then hammered Lill, who was taken out in the eighth. Rogers finished the game, and be too was pummeled, Peterboro having a total of 14 safeties, including a triple by Dolan, which Rogers should have caught.

Sterling held the Ottawas to eight hits, and fine support saved him on many occasions. None of the Ottawa pitchers had much, Rogers and Lill being exceptionally wild. Shaughnessy derricked Shocker in the fifth as Shocker stood in the box and allowed Dolan to steal second. A ball was called on him, and Shaughnessy sent him to the bench. Ottawa afterwards drew within two runs of the White Caps, and had the bases filled in the seventh, but they could not find Sterling when hits meant runs. The Senators played very raggedly in the field, and there will likely be a shake-up at once. Nill will be benched, Smykal sent to second, and Brazel, a new infielder from Chattanooga, put at short. Pitcher Paige reported from Chattanooga today :—

COMMENT

As You Like It

The executive of the Mercantile League met last night and ordered that the De Laval-Red Caps game be replayed. The former had protested, claiming that they should be entitled to a win over the Red Caps, as a runner reached home on a wild peg with the deciding score. The umpire ordered the runner to return to third base.

While the former league leaders are slipping the former tail end Petes who were so far behind at one stage that a telescope could not locate them are climbing fast. The Petes have been doing some real slugging while the hurling has been good so why should they fail to climb. The Brants will be here tomorrow for three games and the Petes should aviate still higher at the expense of Rube Deneau's crew.

Let us then be up and doing,
With a club for any shoot;
Biff them gently on the kisser—
Make them labor as we scoot.

He laughs best who laughs last, which reminds us that while some of us didn't find ourselves tickled to death, Mr. C. Blount is now at bat.

Pugilism of the heavyweight variety is coming back if recent events are any criterion. The receipts for the Gunboat-Carpentier go in London tomorrow have reached $75,000 to date and there are some seats to let yet. The French champion is fancied by the English sports and when he arrived at London yesterday he was given a reception equal to that of any foreign monarch. The battle will decide the white heavyweight championship.

On top of the big reception accorded the clever Parisian is the announcement that Johnson and Langford the ink spot fighters have been matched to fight in London during October. The big smoke will receive $30,000 while his smaller member of the Ham descendants will pull down about $7,500.

Picture the countenance of Terrible Shag. when the Petes shot five runs across in one innings of yesterday's game. Keep it in mind, get used to it, and you can walk through any cemetery without showing a single trace of the jim-jams.

There is much woe in Ottawa. The twice champion Senators are not the terrors of old and unless some sudden change occurs will find themselves on the verge of falling out of the first division as they are third now and only a few games ahead of St. Thomas.

Rube Deneau and his men from behind the dyke will be with us tomorrow. The game will start at 3 o'clock, and the pleasure will be all ours to present a few more sinkers, to assure the Brants of safe anchorage in the depths below. And they said they would be the leading aviators.

DEAF MUTE ACROBAT RECOVERS HIS SPEECH

A remarkable case of recovery of speech is that of John Egan, a deaf mute acrobat.

Ten years ago he had an adventure with a shark in American waters, as a result of which he was deprived of the powers of hearing and speech. Egan earns his living, in England, at shows and fairs as an acrobat and conjurer.

While giving a performance in Kent, he fainted. When he recovered he asked for a glass of water, the first words he had uttered for years.

Egan was a diver in the service of the United States. While working upon a wreck he had an encounter with a shark. This fish was the worst danger they had to guard against. On this day, though, he was caught. Fortunately those in the boat quickly discovered that there was something wrong. He set to work to frighten the fish off, which became entangled for a time in the air pipes. When rescued, Egan was unconscious and several days later it was found that the shock had deprived him of speech and hearing. The man was compensated and Egan still bears the marks on one of his legs where the shark bit him.

Before this happened Egan had been noted for his acrobatic powers and conjuring abilities. The adventure in the waters did not make him feel inclined to go back to his old job, so he developed his abilities in the other business. Some time ago he was in the States with a traveling circus as an acrobatic performer and conjurer, and it is his intention to cross the Atlantic in the near future to see his friends.

THE TEXT AND THE ANTHEM.

There had been friction between the choir and minister for some time past, but so far the singers had more than held their own.

However, one Sunday morning the minister, after listening to the singing of the usual anthem, announced in a loud voice, My text this morning will be, 'Now, when the uproar had ceased.' "

For a moment the members of the choir looked crestfallen. They felt that the parson had scored for once. Then in the softest of whispers they decided to make a slight alteration in the musical program, and when the sermon concluded the organ pealed forth and the choir triumphantly sang, "Now it is time to wake from sleep!"

Chemists say it takes more than twice as much sugar to sweeten preserves, sauce, etc., if put in when they begin to cook, as it does to sweeten after the food is cooked.

JACK EVANS LANDS 20 POUND LUNGE

Jack Evans, son of Street Commissioner Harry Evans, marked this year's vacation with his parents by landing one of the largest lunge caught in local waters this season. He was trolling near Bewdley yesterday afternoon and was awakened from his idle dreams by a strenuous tug on his line. In the course of a few seconds the fisherman realized that he was landing a monster and before he had it under control he more fully realized the fact.

The big fish measured 39 inches from tip to tip and weighed 20 pounds 9 ounces by the market scales.

An Ominous Adage.—When a lady patient living far from town had to telephone for her physician she apologized for asking him to come such a distance. "Don't speak of it," said the doctor, cheerfully; "I happen to have another patient in that vicinity, and so can kill two birds with one stone."

SOCIAL WAS FINE SUCCESS

Large Patronage Given Annual Event for Sacred Heart Church

Although allowing dark heavy rain clouds to hover over the city all day, the weather man gathered in his grouch dispensers last evening and permitted the Sacred Heart Lawn Social, held on the church grounds, to be featured by perfect weather. During the last few days the various committees claimed the success was inevitable if the weather was suitable, hence when the ideal conditions presented themselves and the crowds started toward the grounds the prophecy of the committees became a reality.

Judging from the hundreds of people present and by the fact that upwards of 1,500 enjoyed supper, it is safe to state that so far as attendance is concerned all the previous records have been surpassed. From five o'clock till after nine the section set aside for the supper tables was kept continually filled. The supper provided was truly a revelation and drew favorable comment from every diner. Practically all the provisions were supplied by parishioners and so unbounded was their generosity that a great deal has been left over and will be the means of assisting the various charitable institutions of the city. Some fifty women of the parish assisted by about twenty-five young men were in charge of the supper and carried on their duties in a commendable manner.

On the section of the large grounds, other than where the supper tables were placed, a number of seats were erected, affording accommodation for those enjoying the band concert rendered by the 57th Regimental Band. Bandsman J. Minicola further assisted by singing several well received solos.

The ocean wave, in charge of Messrs. J. Murray, W. Boyle and D. Gleeson proved a big attraction for the kiddies, while the ball tossers kept the "hitting the nigger" stand in charge of Mr. F. Neary, busy all evening. The fish pond for which over 3,000 articles had been prepared was crowded till all the articles had been disposed of. It was one of the best attractions on the grounds and was in charge of Misses A. Simmons and A. Meagher, assisted by Misses M. Boyle, A. Gillman and K. Masterman. To Miss Simmons and Miss Meagher is due the credit for collecting the various articles.

The refreshment booth of the Sodality was in charge of Misses Annie Fagan and Mabel Desautel, assisted by Messrs. M. Desautel, T. Flood, M. Sullivan, K. McNichol, A. Murray and Messrs. J. Rogers and G. Desautel. The T.A.S. booth was in charge of Messrs. I. Goslin, Jr., I. Goslin, Sr., J. Goslin, T. Goslin, H. Rishea, and F. J. Rishea. The young ladies in charge of the lottery booth were Misses L. Desautel, M. Ryan, M. Meagher, J. McNichol and B. Shaughnessy. The flower booth was taken care of by Misses V. O'Brien, A. Grady, L. Milloy, J. O'Brien and E. Brioux.

Messrs. E. Hurtubise and D. N. Minicola acted in the capacity of auctioneers and auctioned off a large number of the more valuable articles. Mr. R. Desautel also assisted in this work.

During the evening Rev. J. J. O'Brien, pastor of the Church of the Sacred Heart, made it known from the auctioneer's platform that he had just received a telegram from Bishop O'Brien, D.D., who is in Parry Sound, in which His Lordship acknowledged his regret on not being able to be present but nevertheless wishes the function all success.

SIGNALS TO STREET CARS

Passengers for street cars are requested to distinctly signal the car, as it approaches the stop at which they are waiting, by raising the hand, cane or umbrella to a horizontal position or higher.

In many cases it is impossible for the motormen to know whether or not persons who merely step out towards the centre of the street, when a car is approaching, want the car to stop or not, and much uncertainty and consequent delay to passengers may therefore be avoided by our patrons making a distinct signal, as above, when they wish a car to stop for them.

You can't get away from it. This morning William B. Bailey walked into the court room at the conclusion of court and demanded a steamship ticket of minor value, which had been missed when Bill's goods were packed together. He was requested by Magistrate Dumble to wait a few minutes and they would get his ticket.

"It's my ticket, I paid for it, and I want it," demanded Bill.

"Quit this foolishness; I told you we would give it to you in a few minutes," remarked the Magistrate.

Bill after a few minutes' wrangling about the injustice of the courts lef in indignant silence. Detective Newhall spent considerable time looking for Bailey after he found the ticket.

LETTER CARRIERS WANT HALF HOLIDAY

Post Master General is Satisfied if Citizens Say so

Kingston, July 16.—The letter carriers of the city are anxious that they be granted a half holiday each week during the months of July and August. To bring the matter before the attention of the merchants of the city, as the matter lies entirely in their hands, a petition has been circulated, and is being largely signed.

When the matter was brought before the attention of the postmaster-general at Ottawa, he stated that he would be willing to give all the carriers in the service of the department the half holiday each week, providing the citizens were willing.

LINDSAY TAXES.

Lindsay, July 15.—The council last night decided to grant a discount of two per cent. on taxes paid during July, one and a half per cent for August and one per cent for September. Taxes are due at par in October and the by-law adds five per cent on all unpaid taxes on Dec. 1st.

TEMPER OF BOTH PARTIES BITTER OVER AMENDING BILL

Changes Made by Lords in Ulster Exclusion Are Pleasing to Neither Party, But Designed to Avert Bloodshed.

Canadian Press Despatch.

New York, July 16.—A Tribune cable from London says the second reading of the bill amending the Home Rule bill will probably take place in the Commons on Thursday of next week; that the bill will be returned to the Lords in a very different condition from that in which it left the upper house, and that hopes for a settlement by consent are fading.

LONDON, July 16. — "Despite the feeling of optimism which is said to prevail as a result of Lord Beauchamp's declaration in favor of a conference on the lines of Lord Dunraven's amendment it is difficult," says The Daily News, writing of the situation up to last night, "to see how a settlement can be arrived at owing to the present temper of the parties."

The amending bill is disliked by all parties and is regarded as a device solely to prevent bloodshed. The attitude of the Government to the changes introduced by Lord Lansdowne and his colleagues with the object of safeguarding Ulster is still obscure, but certain conclusions of which there is support in Parliamentary lobbies may be noted.

The time limit is, by general consent, gone. The Government will resist the deletion of the referendum but it might concede the grouping of the six "plantation" counties as one area to be decided by one poll, thus abandoning the original county option.

The fiercest fight, if the amending bill ever goes into committee, will be on the referendum.

The Prime Minister had a long conference with the Irish leaders yesterday, and it is expected that the whole situation will be discussed at to-day's Cabinet meeting, in the light of the new developments in the Lords.

The visit of the King's private secretary, Lord Stamfordham, to the Prime Minister at the House of Commons yesterday, and the hurried return of Sir Edward Carson to London have set many reports afloat as to a renewal of conversations. The Government, however, has made no approach in that direction. The interview of the King's secretary with Mr. Asquith had no undue significance, while Carson's journey to London was due to the possibility of the Government putting down the amending bill for discussion this week in the House of Commons.

The Prime Minister will announce to-day the exact date of the introduction and second reading of the amending bill.

If the amended bill be compared with the bill as originally presented by Lord Crewe it contains twelve clauses against the original nine, and with drastically altered provisions regarding the time limit area of exclusion, administration areas, position of judiciary, reserve forces, constabulary and several other matters.

If the two bills were placed in parallel columns it would be found that the amending bill is virtually a new bill. The general story from Westminster to-day is that politicians are once more feeling optimistic, but it is difficult to perceive in what material aspect the position has changed overnight. The complete absence of hostile acts in connection with the celebration of the 12th in Ulster doubtless affords politicians some ground for breathing more freely.

PROVINCIAL POLICE LOOK FOR MISSING YOUNG WOMAN

Disappeared After Leaving Doctors' Office Where She Was Treated for Stomach Trouble—May be Victim of Foul Play.

Tamworth, July 16.—Where is Miss Blanche Yorke, popular dressmaker and refined young lady, who has been missing from her home here since July 8? This question is the one that is baffling not only the county police but the Provincial officers, who have been asked to lend their assistance in locating the young woman and clear up the mystery that surrounds her disappearance. Miss Yorke, playfully referred to in this district as "Happy," because of her radiant and genial disposition, was last seen on the evening of July 8. Since that time not even a clue as to her whereabouts has presented itself or been discovered by the police or search-party which is scouring the vicinity of the village.

Three theories have been presented. These are that the girl has met with foul play at the hands of some unknown person, that she has done away with herself, or that she has been taken from the vicinity to some other place, because of a position in which the young woman is alleged to have found herself.

Last Seen July 8.

Her last known appearance was at the office of Dr. Robinson in Tamworth, on the evening of July 8, between the hours of 8.15 and 9.45. Dr. Robinson is a young physician, who has been in Tamworth for six months. He declares that the young lady called on him for treatment for stomach trouble. He says that he examined her and gave her a bottle of medicine, and that she left the office some time after 9 o'clock. The medicine given to her, he says, contained some strychnine. The entire bottle, if taken at once, he says, would be sufficient to kill her. A possible clue as to the end of the mystery was given by the doctor, who states that next morning he found that a bottle containing about fifty carbonate of mercury tablets, of which one would be sufficient to cause death, was missing from a shelf near where he had examined the young woman.

Left Doctor's Office.

Dr. Robinson says that she was in his office at 8.15 and left after nine. He did not see her afterwards. Miss Yorke was not missed until Saturday night. Her parents, who reside out in the country a short distance, thought that she was staying with the people for whom she was working. Daniel McGregor, the young man who was to have shortly married the girl, called at her home Saturday night, and not finding her went to the Walsh home. Not finding her there he raised the alarm, and search parties have been searching for her since, but up to 9 o'clock last night not a trace had been found of her.

Every effort possible has been made to locate her. With the circulation of stories which became grossly exaggerated as they travelled from tongue to tongue, a search was made of Dr. Robinson's home by A. B. Carscallen and Henry Richardson. Provincial Detective Miller, who arrived on the scene Monday, on being requested by some one to search the house, also went through it.

Miss Yorke bore the highest reputation and mingled with the finest people in the section. The search parties are dragging Beaver Lake and searching the swamps, groves, and even the grain fields in the vicinity.

NEGLIGENCE IS FOLLOWED BY SUSPENSION

Captain of Ferry Did not Blow Proper Signals

STRUCK MOTOR BOAT

Sarnia, July 16.—The license of Capt. William I. Thompson, master and owner of the ferry, Chas. S. Osborne, has been suspended for sixty days by the Duluth inspectors of Steamboats. The suspension took effect July 10, and is the result of a charge of not blowing proper passing signals. The Osborne struck the motor craft, Florence J., endangering the lives of five persons. The motorboat was not sunk, but so badly damaged that it was necessary to take the five passengers aboard the Osborne.

DEATH OF GEO. COATES WAS ACCIDENTAL

Toronto, July 16.—Two verdicts of accidental death were brought in at the Morgue last night. One was on the body of George Coates, of Scranton, Pa., who was killed on the railway tracks at Swansea last week, while the other was on the remains of Hugh Mickle, found drowned in the lake near the Exhibition Grounds two weeks ago.

Coates was the man who escaped from the Peterboro' jail where he was being held on a charge of theft. He was riding the bumpers and Coroner Dr. R. R. Hopkins' jury found that nobody was to blame for his death.

STOP TRESPASSING.

The annual movement of C.P.R. officials to stop residents of the south end from using the tracks as a walk is at hand. The section men have warned numerous trespassers and detectives are expected to arrive in the course of a few days. For the benefit of those who take the chance it might be well to mention that the fine for the offense last year was $2.60.

AN ADDRESS TO G.A. GILLESPIE

Members of the Fire Department Show Their Appreciation

To show their esteem and regard for Mr. George A. Gillespie, the officers and members of the Fire Department had an impromptu banquet last evening at six o'clock, at which the new member of the Legislative Assembly, for this constituency, was the guest of honor. Those present were: Chaplain, Adjutant McElhiney, His Worship Mayor Buller, Aldermen Green, Stratton, Anderson, Saunders, and Duffus, Ex-Alderman Jos. Batten, Mr. Geo. Grange, the Chief, and the members of the Department.

MR. G. A. GILLESPIE

After a delightful and sumptuous repast, which once again proved the ability of the firemen as hosts, Fire Chief Howard arose and called the assembly to oder. In a few explanatory remarks, the Chief explained that the members of the Department thought so much of Mr. Gillespie while he was chairman of the Fire, Water and Light Committee, that they suggested last fall that it would be but appropriate to present him with something by way of testimony. The Mayoralty election caused the Department to hold it over, and

MONTREAL RAISES FUND FOR EMPRESS VICTIMS

Montreal, July 16.—One of the largest subscriptions ever raised under the auspices of the Montreal Board of Trade is being secured for the aid of the sufferers from the sinking of the Empress of Ireland. Already the fund amounts to $55,073, and subscriptions are still coming in at the rate of about $100 a day. No thought of closing the fund has as yet been entertained, and it is hoped that before it is closed between $60,000 and $70,000 will be secured.

HUERTA RELINQUISHES JOB HE MAY GO TO EUROPE

Official Communication is Received by Mexican Congress With Cries of "Viva Huerta," But is Accepted by 121 to 17—Carbajal Succeeds to Presidency.

Canadian Press Despatch.

Mexico City.—The resignation of President Huerta, has been calmly received by the populace. Huerta with General Blanquet is supposed to be on his way to Puerto Mexico. It is announced that a special committee has left the capital for Celaya to arrange with the Constitutionalists for a peaceful entry into the capital. In some quarters it is not believed that Huerta's abdication will ensure permanent peace, but in anticipation of that event there has been for some days a movement of foreigners and the better class of Mexicans towards the interior with the expectation of being able to resume operations on their ranches and mines.

GENERAL HUERTA.

MEXICO CITY, July 16. — Gen. Victoriano Huerta resigned from the Provisional Presidency of the Mexican republic last evening and his resignation was accepted by the Senate and Chamber of Deputies by a vote of 121 to 17.

Francisco Carbajal, Foreign Minister, was then appointed President and took the oath of office in the joint session of Deputies and Senators.

Huerta's resignation was submitted through the Department of Foreign Relations. It was read in the House and was greeted with cries of "Viva Huerta." It was then referred to the joint committees of Gobernacion After brief consideration the committees reported, accepting the resignation in the following terms:

"Article 1.—We accept the resignation presented by Gen. Victoriano Huerta as President of the Mexican United States.

"Article 2.—We call Licentiate Francisco Carbajal, Minister of Foreign Relations, to assume the Presidency."

A ballot was taken and the joint session approved the report.

President Carbajal proceeded to the National Palace under an escort of Presidential guards, and all along the way was greeted with tumultuous cheering.

Official announcement was earlier made that, actuated by highest motives of patriotism, and complying with his supreme duty to his country, President Huerta would send in his resignation to Congress.

Villa Is Disappointed.

JUAREZ, Mexico, July 16. — "I would much prefer that Huerta had remained in the Presidental chair or in Mexico City until we could get our hands on him," Gen. Villa said yesterday in Juarez, when he learned of Huerta's resignation.

"That is the only comment I care to make on the subject," he added. "I am a soldier of my country and do not care to express my opinion of the traitor's resignation."

May Go To Europe.

WASHINGTON, July 16. — Rear Admiral Badger reported to the Navy Department last night that reports reaching Vera Cruz say that Gen. Huerta and Gen. Blanquet would "leave Mexico City by train under escort."

There was no mention of their destination, but officials here think the retired dictator will go to Puerto Mexico to board a foreign man-of-war for Europe.

Admiral Badger also announced that the British cruisers Hermoine and Bristol sailed from Vera Cruz to Puerto Mexico at six o'clock last night. Earlier in the day the Dutch cruiser Kortenaer, whose commander went to Mexico City a few days ago, started for the same port.

ENDED HIS LIFE BY DROWNING

Wealthy Detroit Man Was Affected by Illness

Ridgetown, July 16.—Temporarily deranged from the effects of a two years' illness, J. C. Paterick, a wealthy Detroiter, aged about thirty-five years, committed suicide by drowning at Terrace Beach, four miles south of here, at an early hour yesterday afternoon. Together with his wife and niece, he had been occupying a cottage at the lake, and it is supposed he got up and left the house about 1 o'clock. On being missed, an alarm was given, and a search was made by inmates of the other cottages. The body was found in shallow water near the shore at 5 o'clock this morning. Coroner Dr. Marr and Constable Blake of this town were summoned, and after inquiring into the circumstances, deemed an inquest unnecessary. The body will be taken to Detroit for interment.

COUNCIL MEETING.

The by-law for the expropriation of the Peterboro Light and Power Co.'s property drafted by the City Solicitor, will be submitted to the City Council on Friday evening of this week.

Sold Bad Meat And Was Heavily Fined

Chatham, July 16.—J. Hickey, a live stock buyer, was fined $50 and costs, $91 in all, in the County Police Court on a charge of selling meat unfit for human consumption. The trial was held before Magistrate Callwood of Tilbury, in Chatham. The hog was killed on the roadside, after it had fallen out of a rig and been stunned. It was dressed by a farmer and left hanging in a shed for two days. Hickey then disposed of it to a butcher, who in turn, sold it to a farmer. The farmer could not eat the meat, and on his complaining to the butcher an investigation was made.

BELTING HURLING

In First of Series With Rube Deneau's Band

BRANTS SCORE IN FIRST

Riverside Park, July 16. — Rube Deneau threw his Red Sox into a bag and shook them up somewhat in an effort to produce a winner and when the Dykes trotted out at Riverside this afternoon they were a vastly different outfit both in line-up and personnel than they were on the last appearance here. The "Rube" was on first, Fried, late of Ottawa at short, Long, late London in left, and Wilson, a new man in centre, Freight car Ivers was in right.

About fifteen minutes before the game was scheduled a handful of fans were present and it looked as though the Retailers' picnic had proven a keen opposition attraction.

The Blouters fresh from a successful invasion of Bordenville displayed all kinds of life in the workout. Dad Stewart who was let out was off the local line-up.

Ump. McPartlin made his initial appearance and when he announced Chase and Lamond for the Brants and Belting and Kelly for the Petes there were only fifty odd in the main stand but they were coming in small bunches afterwards.

The line-up :—

Petes.	Brants.
Blount, c.f.	Long, l.f.
Welsh, l.f	Nelson, 3b.
Dolan, 1b.	Deneau, 1b.
Rooney, r.f.	Ivers, r.f.
Byrne, 3b.	Roth, 2b.
King, 2b.	Fried, s.s.
Fox, s.s.	Wilson, c.f.
Kelly, c.	Lamond, c.
Belting, p.	Chase, p.

First Innings.

Brants—Long poked one through second. Kelly shot one to first and almost had Long off the bag. Nelson singled to left with two and three on him. Deneau was out at first and Long and Nelson were on second and third. Ivers hit to Belting who threw to Kelly and the Irishman thought it was a force and did not attempt to touch Long who scored. Nelson scored shortly afterwards on Roth's sacrifice fly. Fried singled through short. Fried was forced at second on Wilson's grounder to Byrne. Two runs, three hits, no errors.

Petes—Blount [illegible] to left. Welsh walked. Dolan [illegible] to Roth. Blount went to third and Welsh to second when Fried let Chase's throw go to centre. Blount scored on a passed ball and Welsh was out a minute later when he tried to score on Rooney's grounder to Chase. Byrne struck out. One run, one hit, one error.

Second Innings.

Brants—Lamond [illegible] along third. Chase forced Lamond at second. Long struck out with three and two on him. Nelson [illegible] Chase at second, Fox to King. No runs, one hit, no erros.

Petes—King [illegible] a double along third base. Fox bunted along third base and was safe, King going to third. Kelly fouled out to Deneau and Fox swiped second. Belting filed to Ivers and King was out at the plate. No runs, two hits, no errors.

He Did. Once.

"I never knew old Simpson to acknowledge that he had made a mistake."

"Ah ! I did once."

"Really. How did it happen ?"

"He put the lighted end of his cigar in his mouth."

Marmora Man Loses His Life When Gun is Discharged

Marmora, July 15.—A distressing accident occurred in Marmora by which Bernard O'Brien lost his life. E. A Lancaster Asks That Successor be Considered

ST. CATHARINES, July 16.—E. A. Lancaster, M.P. for Lincoln for the past fourteen years, author of the celebrated marriage bill and chairman of the railway committee of the Commons, who recently returned from a rest trip to a Nova Scotia sea resort, will not again offer himself for re-election, and his chief reason given is that the sessional indemnity of the Dominion Commons is not sufficiently high. Mr. Lancaster has asked that a convention be called to name a successor. He will sit out his present term in the House.

PETERBOROUGH, THURSDAY, JULY 16, 1914

COMMON STOCKHOLDERS SHOULD BE PROTECTED.

THE INVESTIGATION into the New Haven Railroad scandal should not be lightly passed over by Canadians.

In speaking of the criminal maladministration and negligence of the directors of the New Haven Railroad, the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission asserts that the directors knew they were perfecting an illegal combination.

> "If these directors, who were faithless to their stewardship, were held responsible in the courts and at the bar of public opinion for their failure to do those things they should have done, the lesson to directors who do not direct would be very salutary.
>
> "The result of our research into the financial workings of the former management of the New Haven system has been to disclose one of the most glaring instances of maladministration revealed in all the history of American railroads."

The report, however, states that the splendid property of the New Haven Railway will, with careful, efficient management, restore its former standing. What is of interest here is that the road was used for illegitimate purposes by the late J. P. Morgan and others, and that the directors, very probably knowing this fact, made no remonstrance.

As far as Canada is concerned, directors of a joint stock company have a responsibility to discharge to the rank and file of stockholders that, if neglected, should be subject to punishment. Too often the public are exploited by business sharks, not in the interests of business, but selfish gain or improvident and unwarranted speculation. How far this criticism applies to certain Peterborough concerns remains to be seen. One, the Canadian Cordage Company, does not appear to be exempt from it. One thing is certain, that stockholders who take no active part in the management of a company should be protected from the gross negligence or misuse of company funds by directors who do not direct.

FOURTEEN YEARS FOR A MISTAKE.

THE RELEASE of Karl Dullman (Luke Dillon) from Kingston Penitentiary recalls a crime the motive for which seemed singularly foolish. Dillon tried to blow up the Welland Canal at Lock 24, which would have caused much loss of life by releasing a great flood of water in the valley of the Ten Mile Creek. His object was to injure Great Britain, not to cause loss of life. Fortunately, the attempt failed and Dillon has spent fourteen years in Kingston as a consequence of his act.

His plan to injure Great Britain was small in conception and doomed from the very beginning to fail. It exemplifies a warped mind, a misplaced or mistaken sense of wrong. Individual revenge against a nation in this fashion can cause only suffering to innocent persons. For fourteen years he has been expatiating his mistake, and doubtless has realized how futile was his effort to attain his object and how foolish he was to waste so large a portion of his life in so vain an attempt. If revenge was wanted, he took a very clumsy way of getting it.

There are a good many, happily growing less from all appearances, who still harbor a hatred against England. They are usually Irish, who left the United Kingdom in troublous times and under distressing circumstances. But the Britain of those days has passed; other people, the children of the old days, form the Britain of today. They are innocent of the sins of their fathers, but this man attempted to make the children suffer for them. There is enough suffering in the world today, enough pain, which people do not deserve, without making a concerted effort to increase distress. This man spent fourteen years learning that fact. The pity is that such had to be the case, but perhaps it had its benefit on others, moved by similar mistaken desires. Let us hope that such has been the case.

RAILROADS GROWING BUSY.

ALL RAILROADS in the Middle West have found their traffic has grown fast within the past two weeks, and they are making desperate efforts to put their rolling stock in shape to handle the rush that will attend the moving of the crops. Farmers have been so busy getting in their winter wheat and doing other emergency work that the movement of grain eastward has been comparatively light, but this will change very soon because Europe is now bidding high for wheat, and the price offered farmers is remunerative when the size of the crop is taken into consideration.

Orders for rails, locomotives and steel underframe freight cars placed in the last half of June were the heaviest booked in many months. It seems that the railroads or some of them have reduced their crews, especially in the shops, to such an extent that they have fallen behind with their ordinary repair work, and they must now run their shops overtime to make up for what they have lost. This looks like bad management, or else a vain attempt to create political capital out of an appearance of depression.

PROFITS FROM A HUNDRED ACRES.

THE YOUNG FARMER who reports a profit of $1600 from one hundred acres during 1913 need not be ashamed of having his name published. His success is all the more remarkable in that he has only been four years on the farm. Whatever his training for the work had been, he certainly has made good, and clearly demonstrated the profitableness of agriculture if rightly practised. His expenditure for help would indicate that he employed one man and worked and attended to business himself. One of the satisfactory points about his letter, however, is the evidence it furnishes of a strict accounting of all receipts and expenditures. Many farmers seem to abhor the keeping of accounts in any shape or form.

GOOD TIMES ARE COMING.

IN 1896 and 1897 Wall Street heard, in exactly the same words that are being spoken at the present time, that there was nothing any more in the speculative markets; that active times were all in the past. Old brokers sold their seats on the Stock Exchange and retired or sought other fields of activity. Yet four years after 1897 there were long series of two and three million share days in Wall Street, when brokers were so overwhelmed with orders that they had to turn prospective clients away, and finally had to petition Stock Exchange governors for a special holiday in order to avoid physical breakdown. Stock Exchange seats, which were offered at $14,000 in 1896, were in such demand five years later that their price was $80,000.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

WE DESIRE to draw the attention of our readers to the items appearing every day now which say Mr. So and So was drowned in Lake Ontario, Miss Blank drowned some place else, etc. Had they been taught to swim, had public bathing places been provided where they could learn, many would not have lost their lives. Why don't the people insist that the municipal authorities take some action?

ACCORDING to Montreal papers, Mayor Martin motors through bylaws in that city. We remember an election he rode through, and his boast to ride through more. He's some rider, all right.

AN ACCIDENT occurred recently in which a blind horse ran into a deaf old man cutting weeds with a scythe. Both were badly injured. At present we fail to see how anything else but an accident could have happened.

A NEWS ITEM says a woman is up on a serious charge of stabbing, occasioned by a quarrel over the back fence. We trust the fence intervened.

Enlarging the Experimental Farm.
St. Thomas Times.

Hon Martin Burwell, since he became Minister of Agriculture, has been doing everything possible to encourage mixed farming in Western Canada. The latest move is the purchase of 480 additional acres for the Rosthern Experimental Farm, and 320 acres for the Scott Experimental Farm, both in Saskatchewan. In the past these farms have been devoted exclusively to wheat and grain experiments. With the additional acreage experiments will be carried on in mixed farming and in live stock. The significance of this move is apparent when one recalls that Rosthern has been one of the greatest wheat shipping points in the West, and the farmers have been devoted almost exclusively to wheat growing.

Where Go The Boats

Dark brown is the river,
  Golden is the sand,
Its flows along forever,
  With trees on either hand.

Green leaves a-floating,
  Castles of the foam,
Boats of mine a-boating—
  Where will all come home?

On goes the river,
  And out past the mill,
Away down the valley,
  Away down the hill.

Away down the river,
  A hundred miles or more,
Other little children
  Shall bring my boats ashore.

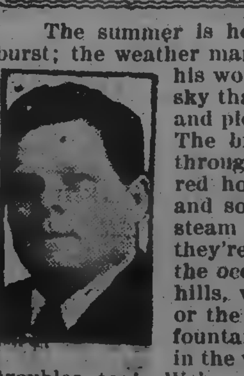
Discrimination Against Women.
Montreal Journal of Commerce.

The Province of Quebec is determined that there shall not be any Portias within her borders. The Quebec Bar Association have decided that a lady shall not be called to the Bar nor practice her profession in this Province. They overlook the minor and unimportant fact that she has successfully passed all her examinations and even headed the class. Women have not practiced in this Province in the 'good old days,' then why should they be permitted to practice their profession now? It is not intended that we should have any of the New Woman Movement in this Province. Not only are militant suffragettes tabooed, but the new feminism in all its phases is outside the pale.

As a matter of fact the position of women in this Province is in some respects not much better than the position of women in Turkey. The laws in regard to property rights, the ownership of goods and chattels, and in brief, the position and standing of women in civil matters is characteristic of the middle ages. This adherence to the medieval and pre-historic in manners relating to the rights of women confers a fine distinction upon the intelligence of the electors and lawmakers of this Province. Still we must be firm. Women are getting too independent these days and in some parts of the world are asking for the vote and demanding that they shall be accorded the right to think for themselves. There must be some corner in the world where mere man can shelter behind his ancient prerogatives, and it might as well be the Province of Quebec as Russia or Turkey. By all means let us keep the women in their proper places.

HOT DAYS
By Walt Mason



The summer is here among us, thermometers swell, and burst; the weather man oft has stung us, and now he has done his worst. The sky is like brass at present, the sky that was lately blue—but off where it's cool and pleasant, they're having their troubles, too! The breezes that come a-shovin' their way through the sweating town, seem fresh from a red hot oven, all baked to a luscious brown; and so, in despairing legions, we simmed and steam and stew—but up in the arctic regions they're having their troubles too! We sigh for the ocean breezes, we sigh for the snow-capped hills, we long for the forest treeses, the lakes or the rippling rills; our mouths are becoming fountains of words of a rich, dark, blue—but off in the woods and mountains they're having their troubles, too! We're cussing around together, we say that the climate's bad; but, listen! it isn't weather that maketh man gay or sad! Let's dig up a better topic than weather that's gone askew, and e'en though the summer's tropic, we'll all have our pleasures, too!

CHERRY PICKING

LAST night I climbed up in a big English cherry tree and straddled a bough jest loaded down with yaller-red fruit, and say didn't I enjoy myself! Half an hour afore I discovered thet tree if ye'd have told me thet I could climb a tree I'd have laughed at ye, but when I saw them cherries and smelled the ripe cherry smell in the air my rheumatic old limbs seemed ter get young and supple ag'in and by jinks I was up in thet tree afore I knowed it. And I et cherries till I couldn't eat any more and I climbed down again and went home and told Ma and she said,

"Jeb, ye'll be sick all night with yer stomach and to-morrie ye'll be as stiff ye can't walk; take me down ter see thet tree," she says. Wall I took her down and she wanted cherries so bad thet I had to do my climbin' stunt all over again and do ye know we both felt so kiddish over our lark thet we stayed ou in the dew and moonlight till nigh ten o'clock. "Now," says Ma, "we'll catch cold, too, as well as have stomach-ache and rheumatism." But we didn't catch cold ner suffer stomach cramps er bone-pains. I reckon thet cherry-pickin' lark did us both a world of good.

HER RETURN

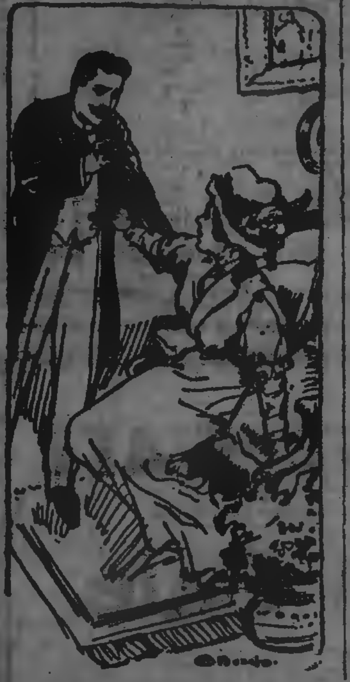
She Found What She Did Not Expect

By WILLARD BLAKEMAN

May Penrose when she was married had been somewhat spoiled by the number of her suitors, each one of whom was ready to promise that he would kotow to her through life if she would be his wife. For that reason none of her intimate friends could understand why she finally married a man twenty years her senior and who, so far as could be learned, promised nothing except what was included in the marriage service.

Some said that her mother made the match between May and Herbert Fenwick, realizing that her daughter was wayward and would need a cool head and a strong will to keep the connubial peace. But there is no doubt that May was perfectly satisfied to marry Mr. Fenwick, and it is quite probable that she had become a trifle tired of having her own way with the other suitors.

May's mother, having a quiet way with her and an abundance of common sense, had always exercised a healthy influence over her daughter. After the marriage this was kept up, not to the disadvantage of the young wife and her husband, but to prevent breaks that would have occurred had it not been for the mother-in-law's persuasive powers with her daughter. But when the couple had been married five years Mrs. Penrose died, and May was deprived of her mother's restraining influence. Then came the crisis of the wife's completing the passage from the partial guidance of a tactful mother to the sole influence of her husband. It proved a crisis indeed.



"GO AWAY!" SHE GASPED.

It would be impossible to state the exact rock on which the couple split, for a number of differences occurred, which culminated in the wife's announcement, with great dignity, that after the treatment she had received she could not maintain her self respect and remain in the same house with her husband. Mrs. Penrose's house had been closed after her death, and her daughter determined to remove there. When her husband went to his office one morning she packed what articles she needed, and when he came home in the evening he found the house deserted.

Mrs. Fenwick did not go away in a huff. She had been thinking the matter over for some time and decided that life was not worth living tied to a man with whom she did not get on. Doubtless there was a way for her to get on with him, but she had not found it.

For a week Mrs. Fenwick occupied herself in putting her abode to rights. After her mother's death she had intended to weed out the accumulation of articles whose value had passed away with those who had treasured them. Old schoolbooks, children's story books, packages of letters, even her own dolls, were got rid of. The work of selecting what should be destroyed brought before her a dead past and a corresponding loneliness. It was a work not calculated to re-enforce her resolution in separating herself from the only being who still belonged to her and whom, in spite of their disagreements, she loved. However, she kept at her work till it was nearly finished, when one day she needed an article that she had left at the residence from which she had departed.

She would have written her husband to send it to her, but could not direct him exactly where to find it. A search would be necessary, and she knew by experience that he was no hand for such a purpose. There seemed to be no way open to her but to go and get what she wanted. At least she convinced herself that there was no other way, but the truth is she desired to visit the home in which she had passed, despite connubial quarrels, many happy hours. Had not her resolution forbidden she would have liked to go when she would have a chance of finding her husband there.

She chose the middle of the afternoon for her visit. She had taken a latchkey with her when she left, though why she desired to let herself into a house she had resolved to leave forever does not appear. But when she put it into the keyhole she found that the door had been locked. She winced at being locked out of her home and unwillingly rang the bell. Expecting to see the maid she had left there, she was disappointed to see a stranger.

"I am Mrs. Fenwick," she said. "I am going upstairs." And she endeavored to brush past the servant, a strong girl, who placed herself in her way.

"Go into the parlor," said the domestic, "and I'll call the mistress."

The mistress! A pang shot through Mrs. Fenwick's heart. She was no longer mistress there, and, still worse, another was. Unwilling to make a scene, she went into the parlor and awaited the coming of the mistress. In a few minutes a young woman of between thirty and thirty-five, in appearance remarkably attractive, entered and indicated that she was ready to listen to the visitor's reasons for being there.

"I am Mrs. Fenwick. I have come to get something I left behind when I went away from here."

"Is it anything that I can bring you?"

"You!" with rising choler. "Of course not. I shall get it myself."

"You must consider, madam," said the lady, "that I am responsible for what is in this house, and I have only your word that you are Mrs. Fenwick. Not only that, but, granting you are what you claim, I have no authority to permit you to take anything which has been placed under my care."

All this was said in the most conciliatory manner and with an engaging smile. Mrs. Fenwick did not know whether to be charmed with the speaker or inordinately jealous of her.

"Will you be good enough," she replied, controlling herself with difficulty, "to tell me what position you occupy in this house?"

"I am Mr. Fenwick's housekeeper."

"And you refuse me permission to go about the house which is—or has been—my home and take away any articles that belong to me?"

"It is not necessary for me to do that. If you will wait a moment I will call up Mr. Fenwick and get his instructions."

"I'll call him up myself." But there came an exceeding distaste to ask her husband to direct his housekeeper to permit her to go about in her own house. "No," she added; "I'll go away without what I came for. I have not been accustomed to ask permission of any one to go where I please on these premises, and I'm not going to begin now."

"But surely you don't blame me for doing what it is my duty to do?"

"Oh, no, I don't blame you!"

"Won't you have a cup of tea with me before going?" asked the lady, maintaining the same pleasant manner and tone.

"No, I thank you," replied Mrs. Fenwick disdainfully.

The housekeeper on Mrs. Fenwick's arrival had stood at the landing on the second floor and heard what had passed between the visitor and the maid. She had at once gone to a telephone booth, closed the door and called up Mr. Fenwick at his office, when the following brief dialogue occurred:

"Is that you, Herbert?"

"Yes. What is it, Maud?"

"May is downstairs."

"You don't mean it!"

"Yes. Hadn't you better come? I'll do what I can to keep her till you arrive."

"All right. I'll take an auto and be there in ten minutes."

As Mrs. Fenwick declined the cup of tea offered her she swept out of the room, but stopped on the threshold. There was the sound of a latchkey in the lock, which this time worked, the door opened, and Mr. Fenwick entered. But before he could get a glimpse of his wife she had retreated into the room. What was her horror to hear a smack and "What brings you home so early?"

"Oh, I got through my work ahead of time today."

Mrs. Fenwick collapsed. She sank on a sofa half unconscious, where her husband and his housekeeper found her on entering the room. Fenwick stood looking down at his wife. Her appearance was so pitiable that he approached her and bent over her with an anxious look on his face.

"Go away!" she gasped.

"Sweetheart!"

"Sweetheart! I had hardly got out of the house when my place was supplied by"—

"But, my dear, I must have some one to run the house. I telegraphed Maud to come on."

"Maud!" starting up. "Is that Maud?"

"Yes," said the housekeeper, taking the wife in her arms, "I'm Maud, whom you have doubtless often heard my brother speak of. I came to help him out and as soon as you came called him from his office. I can't stay with him any longer, for my own husband and children need me. So you two must stop this nonsense and be good."

She placed her sister-in-law in the arms of her husband and left the room.

There was a happy dinner in the Fenwick home that evening, which was provided by the housekeeper. She announced her intention of departing the next morning, but Mrs. Fenwick vowed she would lock her in if she attempted it. She had heard Maud's praises sounded so long and so often without seeing her that now she had got her into her possession she would not let her go.

The Fenwick matrimonial crisis passed without any further complication, and the tranquillity of the household was never again disturbed.

Getting On.

"How did you come to buy that second-hand table?" exclaimed Mrs. Climber's husband. "We don't need it."

"That shows how much you know," replied his wife. "In one of the drawers I found a bunch of the most select visiting cards in the city. They will look lovely in our hall."

Alligator Still at Large.

ST. CATHARINES, July 15.—Although the water was drawn off the Hydraulic Raceway for sixteen hours, the missing four-foot alligator, which escaped and took up its hiding place in the power channel, was not found. It is believed to have escaped into the larger body of water nearby, the old Welland Canal.

Suffragette Outrage Checked.

DURHAM, Eng., July 15.—Suffragettes made an unsuccessful attempt yesterday to burn Cocken Hall, a fine residence, near the ancient town of Chester-le-Street, belonging to Lord Durham, but unoccupied. AFRAID SHE WAS DYING

Suffered Terribly Until She Took "Fruit-a-tives"

ST. JEAN DE MATHA, JAN. 27th. 1914.

"After suffering for a long time with Dyspepsia, I have been cured by "Fruit-a-tives". I suffered so much that I would not dare eat for I was afraid of dying. Five years ago, I received samples of "Fruit-a-tives". I did not wish to try them for I had little confidence in them but, seeing my husband's anxiety, I decided to do so and at once I felt relief. Then I sent for three boxes and I kept improving until I was cured. While sick, I lost several pounds, but after taking "Fruit-a-tives", I quickly regained what I had lost. Now I eat, sleep and digest well—in a word, I am completely cured, thanks to "Fruit-a-tives".

THE CHIC SAILOR.

Again in Vogue in Divers Striking and Novel Shapes.

"Small sailors, showing higher crowns than were formerly in use, together with narrow two inch brims, are in high favor," says the Millinery Trade Review. "For dress wear the hat is a trifle larger and may be black or any of the fashionable shades of the season. For tailored use the small hat continues to hold sway. Street hats continue to be in dark tones, tete de negre and black leading in favor. Smooth finished straws are given the preference, although there has been some effort toward bringing out hats developed of rough straw. Lisere or Belgium split holds a foremost place in millinery circles. Leghorns and panamas bid fair to take a prominent place in midsummer millinery—in fact, all white hats are among attractive models shown for warm weather use."

THE OCTAGONAL SAILOR HAT.

Sailor hats come in various novel shapes, one of the most remarkable being the hat with the octagonal crown. The model illustrated here is severely simple, with a draped band like the masculine hat.

The wired organdie collar shown is another indication of the tendency to swing to accessories of a severely plain character. No doubt, after the vogue of the befrilled and furbelowed styles of the moment, the pendulum will naturally swing to the tailored styles or something very much akin to them.

The Bootless Brigade.

On the subject of the bootless state of the local fire brigade the parish council of Hill, near Halesowen, Worcestershire, Eng., have consented to receive a deputation. When the brigade was established six years ago uniforms were provided, but no "jack" boots, and when representations were made the council agreed to provide five pairs for the eleven firemen. As all the boots were of a standard size the men declined to wear them. During a recent fire that occupied the brigade for twenty-two hours one man spoilt three pairs of boots and another through getting his feet wet contracted a serious illness. The men now declare that the parish shall provide boots or have no brigade.

EMBROIDERED FLOUNCINGS

Many Successful Gowns of the Season Designed of This Material.

EMBROIDERED LINGERIE GOWN.

Machine embroidered muslin flouncing enjoys a very great popularity this season. It is adapted to the construction of the tiered gowns of the moment, and in fine materials it really makes up into charming costumes. The gown pictured here is a stylish frock for wear at the seaside or mountain resort. It is an ideal dress for the garden party or for the fair spectator at the golf or tennis tournament. It is fashioned of very fine embroidered cream batiste flouncing, which has a deeply indented edge. The embroidery has been cut out and appliqued to shadow net, giving an individual and charming effect. The sash is of old blue satin ribbon, and the leghorn hat is adorned with a bow of this same shade to supplement the wreath of white flowers on the crown. The parasol is of white taffeta, printed with blue flowers.

Japanese Hairdressers For Men.

The professional coiffeur for men is a much older occupation in Japan than that for women. There are records as far back as the thirteenth century of male hairdressers for men, for the samurai especially were very particular as to how the hair was done up, though as a profession the samurai was of somewhat later growth. It may be said, however, that during the later Tokugawa days the men appear to have appreciated in their wives and daughters the same careful attention to style of hair as was observable among their lordly selves. It is not without some significance that the first professional hairdresser for women was a man.

Timely Warning.

"What's this game you're tryin' to interduce into Crimson Gulch?" asked Broncho Bob.

"It's called pinochle," replied the traveling salesman.

"Well, put it away. If some of the boys was to see all them aces comin' out in the same deal they'd be almost sure to get rattled an' start shootin'."—Washington Star.

Judge Lumley Smith, who recently retired from the Bench, tells a story of two eminent K.C.'s, who happened one day to see a street accident. One of them seized the other by the arm and hurried him away.

"Come away, quick!" he exclaimed. "We mustn't stop, or they'll make us witnesses in the case instead of sending us briefs to conduct the action for damages!"—Answers.

BIGGEST FLOATING DOCK ON PACIFIC READY THIS YEAR

It is expected that the Grand Trunk Pacific authorities will have the big dry-dock at Prince Rupert in operation before the end of the present year. The completion of this great work will mean much to Northern British Columbia and especially to Prince Rupert. That rapidly growing city will have a new industry this coming winter. Many of the big coast steamers that have hitherto been compelled to make their headquarters elsewhere will be overhauled in its harbor. It will be able to boast of the largest floating dock on the Pacific with an equipment including every up-to-date device for handling ships up to 20,000 tons. There are four large buildings to house the various sections of the ship building and repairing plant and practically all the machinery to equip the shops has been made in Canada.

The yard will have a 45 ton locomotive crane. Other machinery includes an 80 foot lathe, capable of turning a steel shaft 50 feet in length; a plate bending machine with a capacity of bending a sheet of steel twenty feet by three-quarters of an inch thick; a big steam hammer and four air compressors. The machine shop, boiler shop and blacksmith shop will have the most complete set of modern tools on the coast.

Adjoining the dock along the face of the harbor are the big new wharves and the railroad has large freight yards here.

For a city that dates back only to 1906, when the Grand Trunk Pacific's staff of engineers made a landing and clearing for the location of their camp preparatory to making the preliminary survey, this is a record of progress that it would be hard to equal.

GIRL ASSAULTED BY CIRCUS HANDS

Montreal, July 15.—Gertie Hedge, 17 years of age, Valley Field, Que., was found in a box car in the C.P.R. yards in Montreal in a serious state as the result of an assault. She was taken to the Western Hospital. The girl says she came to the city to see the Robinson circus, and after the night performance she was grabbed by two negroes and hurried into a railway car, where she was assaulted and robbed of jewelry and money.

The circus was going to Farnham, Que., and she says the two men in question must have thrown her unconscious body into a box car at Farnham on a train bound for Montreal.

Misled.

The customer in the grocery store, having ruined his clothes, was hopping mad.

"Didn't you see that sign, 'Fresh Paint'?" asked the grocer.

"Oh course, I did," snapped the customer, "but I've seen so many signs hung up here announcing something fresh that wasn't, that I didn't believe it."—Boston Transcript.

NORWOOD PUPILS MADE GOOD SHOWING

Norwood Register.

In the examination results published this week, Norwood High and Public Schools made a most creditable showing, which will be very pleasing to the citizens of the village in general, as well as to the successful pupils and their parents.

At the Junior High School Entrance examinations fourteen pupils wrote from the Norwood Public School and fourteen passed,—a full 100 per cent,—which is an exceptional occurrence, and reflects much credit upon the work of Principal W. J. Trenouth and his staff of teachers.

In the Lower School Normal Entrance examinations there were twelve successful pupils from the Norwood High School. This is over one-third of the total number of candidates who passed in the county; the balance being from Peterboro Collegiate Institute, Havelock, Lakefield and Ennismore Continuation Schools. At the local High School 16 pupils wrote and 12 passed,—a percentage of 75 per cent. This is a very good showing for our boys and girls. Taking the results from about 40 centres only four compare favorably. The average for the province was small. At Lindsay, we heard, only 29 out of 60 were successful; Peterborough 12 out of 28; Lakefield 7 out of 17; Cobourg 2 out of 19; Brighton 3 out of 7; Stirling 19 out of 32; while some Toronto Schools were lower still, at Toronto Harbord C. Institute only 4 out of 40 passed, at Humber-Side Collegiate Institute 1 out of 13.

The results certainly evince careful preparation on the part of Principal Lawlor and his assistants.

ELECTRICALLY HEATED SCHOOL IN IDAHO A GREAT SUCCESS

Building Comfortably Warm, With Excellent Ventilation—Current Used for Other Things, Too—Cost About Half

While the West is regarded—chiefly by the Easterners — as less advanced in many ways than the East, the town of Rupert, in the newly-reclaimed sage-brush desert of Idaho, has come forward as a rival of the older and supposedly more progressive cities of the East by equipping its new high school throughout with electric heating apparatus. The cooking of the domestic science department is also done on electrical appliances, the machinery of the manual training room is motor driven, the apparatus of the science department is electrically operated, and the lighting is of course electric, in keeping with the rest of the equipment.

The heating plant is similar to the combined heating and ventilating systems now in common use in the public buildings with the exception that an electric furnace is substituted for one using coal, oil, or gas. This substitution not only saves a great deal of space that may be more profitably used, but is absolutely free from dirt and the gases of combustion. Eleven units are arranged in a breast of seven and with a wing of two units at each end across the openings from the fresh air ducts and at 90 deg. to the main breast. The temperature is regulated from a switchboard placed in the superintendent's office.

The building is kept warm at night by operating the heating units on half normal voltage. The inside recirculation of the air in the building maintains a uniform temperature and at the same time furnishes sufficient ventilation so that there is no danger of the units burning out from overheating. A considerable saving in the original cost of the building was effected in this installation by being able to do away with a large underground bunker that was planned to be used for coal storage and for the removal of ashes.

Cost About Half.

The total cost of the plant as compared with plants employing other forms of heat, was about half that paid for the systems installed in other public buildings in that part of the country for similar service. No attendance is required, and the yearly operating cost is estimated to be about $1440.

The present electrical equipment of the domestic science department consists of eighteen disk stoves. Each is supplied with a "blazer" or frying pan and a double boiler, these utensils being all that are necessary to carry on the operations ordinarily performed on top of the stove. The cost of operating this equipment is about twelve cents per hour on high heat. In the near future an addition is contemplated in the way of a range having a pair of hot plates, to be used for serving cafeteria lunches to the pupils. Other devices, such as an electric furnace, individual test tube heaters, etc., are being made by the instructor and the students to meet their individual views and requirements. Hot water is furnished by a circulating heater connected to a 280-gal. tank.

The cost of electricity for the various uses during February last was: $307.50 divided up among heating, $264; power, $25.90; water heating, $7.35; lighting, $6.90; cooking and appliances, $3.35.

REV. DR. CARMAN IS ACTIVE AT HIS EIGHTY-FIRST YEAR

Will Preside at Methodist Conference in Ottawa

Two weeks ago Rev. Albert Carman, M.A., D.D., L.L.D., the "grand old man" of Methodism, in Canada, celebrated the 81st anniversary of his birth. Despite his great years, filled with activity and heavy responsibility, Dr. Carman is still vigorous and active, his mind alert and in intimate touch with the varied activities of the great church of which for some years he has been the head. He will be called to preside over the deliberations of the general conference of the Methodist Church, which meets in Ottawa, next September, and it is more than likely at that time that he will make a pronouncement in behalf of Methodism on the great question of church union, which has now reached a critical stage. It is not to be wondered that Dr. Carman has been an ardent advocate of union. As head of the Methodist Church in Canada, he represents a union now all but forgotten of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Wesleyan Methodist body. That union was consummated in 1883. At that time Dr. Carman was a bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and on its union with the Wesleyan Methodists he was elected general superintendent of the Methodist Church in Canada, a position to which he has been re-elected at each succeeding general conference. While at the outset of negotiations Dr. Carman was an ardent advocate of the union of Methodist, Presbyterian and Congregational Churches, he has been led to modify his views somewhat by the tardiness of the Presbyterian Church in following up the negotiations by definite action. He is chairman of the joint committee on church union.

Dr. Carman has always taken an active interest in the promotion of educational matters with the church, which is perhaps only natural since he began life as a school teacher. That was away back in the fifties. He had graduated from Cobourg college in 1855 and at once secured appointment as headmaster of the Dundas grammar school. He held that position for two years and then became professor of mathematics in the Belleville seminary (now Albert College,) the institution taking its name from the honored head of the Methodist Church. In 1858 he became principal of the Belleville seminary and it was through his intervention that the institution was later granted affiliation with Toronto University. Subsequently he was instrumental in establishing Alma Ladies' College at St. Thomas. To-day Dr. Carman is senator of Toronto University and of Victoria University (a distinctively Methodist institution), and a governor of Montreal Wesleyan Theological College.

No man in Methodism enjoys a greater familiarity with the history of Canadian Methodism than does Dr. Carman. He has travelled the dominion from end to end on many occasions, and in 1905 in company with the late Rev. Dr. Sutherland, the general superintendent of missions in the Methodist Church, made a tour of the Orient to study at first hand, conditions in the Methodist mission fields in Japan and China. He was a delegate to the Ecumenical Methodist conference at Washington in 1891, and to the World's Moral Reform convention at Philadelphia in 1910.

Two sons of the Rev. Dr. Carman are well known Canadian journalists.

The 18th annual convention of the Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners is to be held in Indianapolis, beginning Sept. 21.

There was recently launched at Port Arthur, Ont., the freight steamer W. Grant Morden, with a capacity of 600 cars of grain in its hold.

DEVICE FOR VOTING

Allan B. Walsh, a New Jersey member of the House of Representatives, has invented a contrivance whereby a Congressman may vote by electricity.

Each member has a seat, duly numbered, with a box affixed to it. The box contains four buttons, marked respectively "Yes," "Nay," "Present," and "Paired." Nobody but the proper owner can vote from his seat, because he alone possesses a key that will open his box.

Erected above the clerk's desk is a sort of bulletin board, bearing the names of all the members of the House, alphabetically arranged. After each name, on the board, are two small glass disks, one red and the other blue. When the "Yea" button is pressed a red light shines after the voter's name on the bulletin board, and when one member votes "Nay" a blue disc is illuminated.

The device also makes a permanent record by punching each vote on a card, and on the completion of the voting the "Yeas" and "Nays" are automatically added up. It is estimated that Mr. Walsh's invention will save time to the value of $20,000 a year.

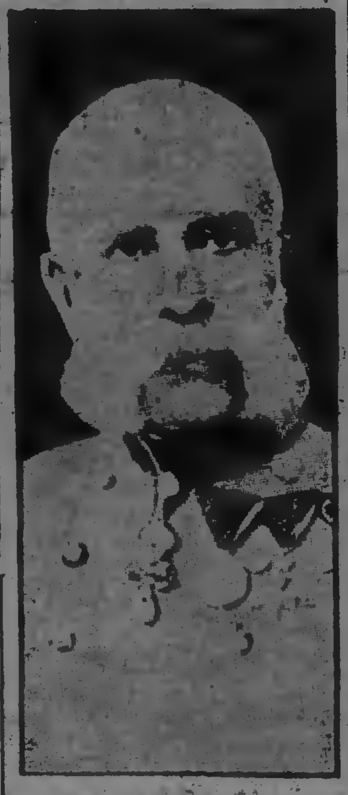
SILVER PLATE IN BODY ATTRACTS LIGHTNING

Altoona, Pa., July 16.—A silver plate taking the place of several ribs in the body of Charles Feathers, a Pennsylvania brakeman, attracted a bolt of lightning during a fierce storm here.

Feather's throat is completely paralyzed, while his jaws are firmly locked, although he is perfectly conscious and suffers no pain.

The trainman was standing by his porch and near him was his son. The bolt struck between the two, but the boy was uninjured, while Feathers was knocked down. The bolt loosened the silver plate in Feather's side. The physicians believe he will recover.

And one good action is worth more than a hundred good intentions.



EMPEROR FRANCIS JOSEPH

VIENNA, July 16.—Emperor Francis Joseph went out on his first shooting expedition of the season yesterday. This is taken to indicate that he has completely recovered from his recent illness and the shock of the assassination of Archduke Francis Ferdinand and the Duchess of Hohenberg.

WIDOW OF BANDIT DEFIES DETECTIVES

NEW ORLEANS, July 15.—Unless she is wanted by officers of some other city, police here said they could not hold Mrs. Charles C. Craven, 20 years old, widow of Charles Craven, the train bandit, who, they said, had confessed she had hidden $54,000 of her husband's loot. The young woman last night defied detectives. She is held on a charge of being a fugitive from justice.

Craven was killed five months ago by detectives who trailed the pair as suspects after an Alabama train robbery. The woman told the detectives that most of the $54,000 in cash and jewelry was obtained in the Alabama robbery. She said it was buried near Savanah, Ga.

Mrs. Craven also is known as Eva Slack MacCorkle. She ran away from a convent in Ontario some years ago. She says she was put there by her stepfather, who was former Governor of West Virginia. She declared she met Craven in Norfolk, Va., a little more than a year ago, and that they had been married only about eight months when he was killed.

"One never would think that I spent thirteen years of my life in an Ontario convent, would you?" Mrs. Craven said. "Nevertheless, it is true. I was born in Toronto, Ont., and when a small girl my father died and I was placed in a convent at Hamilton, Ont. My mother then moved to Charleston, W. Va., where she is now."

Her Alibi.

Much to the curious little girl's disgust, her elder sister and her girl friends had quickly closed the door of the back parlor before she could wedge her small self in among them.

She waited uneasily for a little while, then she knocked. No response. She knocked again. Still no attention. Her curiosity could be controlled no longer. "Dodo!" she called in staccato tones, as she knocked once again. "'Tain't me! it's mamma!"—Lippincott's Magazine.

AN ADDRESS TO G. A. GILLESPIE

when the idea developed the Provincial elections were close at hand, so they thought it best to hold it over till last night.

The members of the brigade decided that an illuminated address would perhaps meet the requirement. To present this, the banquet had been arranged. In making the presentation, Chief Howard asked Mr. Gillespie to keep the address in his home and have it as a reminder of the friendship the members of the Fire Department had for him.

The address was as follows:

Mr. Geo. A. Gillespie:

We, the officers and members of the Peterborough Fire Department, desire to express our feeling of good wishes and thanks to you at this time for your many acts of kindness towards this department during your five-year term as an alderman on the Council Board, and more especially during the latter two years as chairman of the Committee of Council, presiding over the affairs of the Department.

We have not forgotten your other colleagues who have rendered valuable assistance with you from time to time, which has been appreciated by us.

The kind treatment we received from you at a time when the Department was hanging in a balance seemed to have the effect of drawing us closer to you, and we want you to know it.

We shall always think of you as a near friend, and we want you to think kindly of us.

We ask you to accept this testimonial of our regard and respect for you.

(Signed)

W. A. Howard, Chief; Jos. J. Duffus, George B. Jamieson, Ernest Munden, Archibald McDonald, Joseph Jefferson, H. W. Meehan, Herbert Johnston, Charles A. Carter, John F. Degen, John Macfarlane, Edward Solesby, John A. McElhiney, Albert D. Tennyson, Mathew Clancy, Geo. W. Crouter, J. Ward, Geo. Grange.

In reply, Mr. Gillespie claimed that he did not feel worthy of such an honor, nevertheless he would accept it as a token of their esteem, and thanked them most sincerely. He always tries to do his duty as a member of the City Council, and would try to serve the city in his new position in the same conscientious manner.

Alderman Green, Mayor Buller, Alderman Stratton, Adjutant McElhiney and Alderman Duffus also made a few remarks, congratulating the Fire Department on the fine manner in which they demonstrated their feelings for Mr. Gillespie. The speakers also drew attention to the sterling qualities of the guest of honor and wished him every success in his new enterprise.

A few minutes before 3 o'clock the happy function was brought to a close by the singing of God Save the King..

PLACED DYNAMITE CAPS ON CAR TRACKS

Montreal, July 16.—Police reports show that George and William Whitterman, the two boys who were injured by the explosion of a dynamite cap in the rear of 79 Bourbonniere street yesterday morning, had been playing with dynamite caps and placing them on the car tracks to see if the cars would explode them. Only for the happy advent of a policeman who gave chase lives might have been sacrificed and property damaged by the foolhardy youngsters.

How the dynamite came to be in the possession of the boys has not yet been definitely determined. They claim that they found the explosive, and that it went off with a big bang when they attempted to fire it with a match.

The police, however, state that along with another boy the two brothers had filched dynamite from cement works in Longue Pointe.

That thousands of dollars worth of damage was not done and lives lose before the dynamite did its fell work is considered a matter of luck. The two boys, who are ten and seven years of age respectively, are resting quietly in the hospital. Their case is not considered serious.

He will also make a tour of inspection of the colleges at Saginaw, Mich., Mount Pleasant, Iona and other American points for the purpose of studying the improved methods of the most up-to-date colleges on the continent. Mr. Moloney will again report for duty here on August 15th.

CONGREGATIONS CRITICIZED FOR NOT PAYING UP

Toronto, July 16. — Chairman James Ryrie of the Baptist Home Mission Board has issued a sizzling criticism of certain Baptist congregations for allowing their minister's salaries to run into such arrears that the families are on the verge of starvation. Mr. Ryrie says that one Baptist minister has only received $66 since February. Another congregation has only paid its pastor $17 during the past three months. He terms the members of such congregations "criminally careless Christians."

Mr. Ryrie says that the cases of non-payment "are not solitary cases by any means. The board could furnish you with numbers of similar ones." He describes the condition of the unpaid Baptist ministers in such charges, in Canada as "dangling by their finger tips over the ragged edge of poverty." He also deplores the fact that only about ten per cent. of the amount appealed for to diminish the Baptist mission board debt has been subscribed.

Superintendent Norton says that he sincerely hopes the members of the Baptist churches will be induced to come to the relief of the home mission board "in our great financial distress."

CENTRAL CANADA EXHIBITION

Prize List

Distribution of the Big Prize List for the Central Canada Exhibition, September 11th to 19th, 1914, has commenced. The here-to-fore large list of classes has been strongly supplemented by the addition of new and special prizes that go far to make this year's offerings greatly in advance of any previous show.

This year the Association will again pay all freight upon Live Stock Entries. This big feature was first introduced last season and met with such an overwhelming success that it was decided to again offer the same inducement to exhibitors for 1914.

The precise rule for shipment is as follows:—

Freight Charges (not express) on Exhibits of Live Stock, from points in Ontario and Quebec Provinces will be refunded to the exhibitor by the Exhibition Association. This means, charges from the last shipping point to Ottawa. The regular one-way fare must be pre-paid by the exhibitor and refund will be made by the Secretary upon production of the original bill of lading. Exhibits remaining intact will be returned free to original shipping point.

$20,000.00 is the sum to be given away in prizes this year and all departments will be the richer by the increases provided by the offering of this large sum. Receivers of this Prize List—no matter in what department they are interested, Horses, Cattle, Sheep, Swine, Agriculture, Horticulture or Art—will find extra classes and extra prizes in their own special lines.

In the back of each Prize List sent out is a well made out Entry Form so that intending exhibitors may make their Entry at once by filling this Form in and mailing it to the Secretary and Manager, Mr. E. McMahon, 26 Sparks St., Ottawa, Can., who will also be very pleased to provide all information as well as extra copies of the Prize List and Entry Forms upon receipt of your name and address upon a post card.

RUSSIA SUFFERS FROM HEAT WAVE

Forest Fires Are Being Fought by Soldiers

St. Petersburg, July 16.—Russia is suffering from the most severe heat wave which has visited the empire in a half century. Reports to this city from many quarters brought news of extensive forest fires and death. The smoke from the fires is approaching this city, obscuring the sun at mid-day, and giving a sharp tang to the hot, lifeless air. Whole forests are aflame. Peat beds on the moors are burning, and many villages have been wiped out. Enormous damage has been done to crops, and the suffering of the people is intense.

A fire is burning around the great Schlusselburg dynamite factory, which covers several acres near the Neva, and it is in danger of being destroyed.

Five thousand soldiers are fighting the peat and forest fires along the Neva, in an effort to prevent the destruction of the factory. A whole army of peasants is at work throughout Russia, digging trenches and blasting lanes to prevent the spread of the flames.

Bridges have been burned and railway traffic cut off. Communication has been cut off from many sections of the country by the burning of telegraph and telephone poles, and the melting of the wires.

Famine threatens from the annihilation of the crops. It is impossible to estimate the money damage, but it will be many millions of dollars. Hamlets and small towns in the path of the devouring flames have been deserted, and the people have taken refuge along the shores or lakes and rivers or in the cities.

Cities in the interior report that a pillar of dense black smoke can be seen hanging over the sky, becoming bigger and thicker day by day.

The thermometer here registered 160 degrees Fahrenheit at midnight, and the temperatures at mid-day throughout the Empire range from 110 to 125.

Lesson III.—Third Quarter, For July 19, 1914.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Mark x, 46-52. Memory Verses, 51, 52—Golden Text, Isa. xxxv, 5, 6—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

Causing the blind to see, the deaf to hear, the dumb to sing and the lame to walk were samples of what will be more fully when His kingdom comes Isa. xxxv, 4-6). The blind and all other afflicted ones were physical illustrations of Israel's spiritual condition, and He was as ready to open their eyes as He was literally to open the eyes of a few individuals. But the great ones among them preferred their blindness because all the time they thought they saw clearly. Our Lord called them blind Pharisees, blind leaders of the blind (Matt. xxiii, 26; xv, 14), and when they asked Him, "Are we blind also?" He said unto them, "If ye were blind ye should have no sin, but now ye say, We see; therefore your sin remaineth" (John ix, 40, 41). In their case, as in the case of multitudes today, the god of this world blinded their minds, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them (II Cor. iv, 4).

Our lesson story is found in Matt. xx, 29-34, as well as in Mark, and is the record of a healing as He left the city of Jericho. He healed another man who was blind as He entered Jericho, and that man followed Him, glorifying God as He entered and passed through Jericho (Luke xviii, 35, to xix, 1). Matthew and Mark both say that the healing of our lesson took place as He departed from Jericho, and Matthew says that there were two blind men. Well, there are no discrepancies and nothing to reconcile. He healed a blind man as He entered Jericho and two more as He left the city, and one of the two was called Bartimaeus, and no doubt there were many more blind people healed at different times (Matt. xi, 15; xii, 22; John ix), and we cannot but rejoice with every poor fellow who received his sight, feel sorry for those who did not and pity the spiritually blind who fancied that they did see, because they were wise in their own estimation.

When the kingdom comes we shall see the King in His beauty, and we shall then think that we never knew Him before. He will be so glorious (Isa. xxxiii, 17, 24; John iii, 1, 2). Every eye shall see Him, either to adore Him and enjoy Him forever or else to see Him and hear Him say, "Depart from me; I never knew you." The cry of the man who was healed as He entered Jericho and that of the others healed as He left the city is so similar that some cannot think that Luke is telling of a separate incident (Matt. xx, 30; Mark x, 47; Luke xviii, 38).

In each event Jesus stood and commanded the man or men to be brought unto Him or called them to Him. Mark says that those who called him said, "Be of good comfort; rise; He calleth thee." That which we have in eight words here is just four words in the Greek.

I envy those who can read the Greek and Hebrew readily; there is such a fullness of meaning in those languages which it is difficult to express in English. There is something very remarkable here, and it is this: The words "Be of good comfort" (Greek "tharsei") are used by our Lord on five different occasions, all exceedingly interesting and helpful, four while He was on earth and once after He returned to heaven (Matt. ix, 2, 22; xiv, 27; John xvi, 33; Acts xxiii, 11). They make a beautiful, helpful Bible study on forgiveness, peace, victory and the purpose of God.

The remarkable thing is that this word, used only elsewhere by our Lord, is used in our lesson by those who called the blind man. I wonder why they should use one of our Lord's special words. I do not understand it. I only note the fact. If it was the disciples who used the word they did it as His representatives, and we think of a later word of His, "As my Father hath sent Me, even so send I you" (John xx, 21). If some of the multitude used the word, then I am perplexed.

Casting away his garment, he came to Jesus, and I expect that he did so very quickly. He knew his need and that there was a deliverer at hand, and he did not hesitate nor make any excuse. He was poor, empty, helpless, ready to receive. In the song of Mary it is written, "He hath filled the hungry with good things, and the rich He hath sent empty away" (Luke, 1, 53). It is also written, "Blessed are ye that hunger now, for ye shall be filled" (Luke vi, 21). The poor and the needy are those who obtain help speedily (Ps. lxxii, 4). The rich and the self sufficient and self righteous are the ones whom it is impossible to help.

"What wilt thou that I should do unto thee?" This is the question ever coming to us from Him in whom all fullness dwells, for has He not said, "If ye shall ask anything in My name I will do it;" "If ye abide in Me and My words abide in you ye shall ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you?" (John xiv, 14; xv, 7.) How brief and definite is the blind man's request, "Lord, that I might receive my sight." He did not want five things, nor three, nor two—just one. He knew well what he wanted, and he asked for it. If we knew our need as well and were as definite in our asking, what might we not receive! The longer I live the more clear it seems to me that we have but one great need as believers, and that is to be filled with and controlled by the Holy Spirit.

TORONTO, July 15.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Yards were 46 cars, comprising 320 cattle, 1502 hogs, 636 sheep and lambs and 135 calves.

Butchers'.

Choice steers, of which there was one load reported, sold at $8.75; loads of good at $8 to $8.40; medium at $7.75 to $8; common to medium grass steers and heifers at $6.75 to $7.50; choice cows at $7 to $7.25; good at $6.50 to $6.75; medium at $5.75 to $6; common at $4.75 to $5.25; canners at $3.50 to $3.50; bulls from $6 to $7.25.

Milkers and Springers.

A few choice cows sold at a little higher values, but the bulk went at steady prices. Quotations ranged from $60 to $93 each, the bulk selling at $65 to $75.

Veal Calves.

Prices were very firm, as the demand was greater than the supply. Choice calves, $10 to $10.50; choice, extra new milk-fed veals, $11; good, $9 to $9.50; medium, $8 to $8.50; common, $7 to $7.75; inferior, $6.50 to $7.

Selects fed and watered sold at $8.90; and $9.10 weighed off cars.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, July 15.—At the C. P. R. live stock market prices for cattle were unchanged since Monday, but the feeling was easy on account of supplies being more liberal and trade was slow. Sales of choice steers were made at $8.25 to $8.50, good at $7.75 to $8, fair at $7.25 to $7.50 and the lower grades at $5.25 to $6.40 per 100 pounds.

There were no choice butchers' cows on the market and the prices paid for this class of stock ranged from $5 to $6.50. Common and inferior bulls brought from $4 to $5.50 per 100 pounds.

The feature of the small meat trade was the continued weakness in the market for lambs, owing to the increased offerings, and prices scored a further decline. Even at the reduction sales were few, lambs fetching $3 to $5 each, as to size and quality, and old sheep $3 to $4 per 100 pounds.

Demand for calves was good at from $3 to $12 each. The market for hogs was easier, owing to the somewhat limited demand. Sales of selected lots were made at $9 to $9.10, and of heavyweights at $7.50 to $8.50 per 100 pounds weighed off cars.

Plural Voting Bill Ends Journey.

LONDON, July 16.—The House of Lords yesterday rejected by 119 votes to 49 the plural voting bill, which embodies the principle of "one man, one vote," and provides that a man who has more than one residence must before an election select which of his votes he desires to register.

Earl Beauchamp, on behalf of the Government, intimated that the defeat of the measure was purely academic, as the Government intended to see that it went into operation before the next general election.

The bill already has passed twice through all its stages in the House of Commons.

G. T. P. Sections Linked Up.

OTTAWA, July 16. — Collingwood Schreiber, chief consulting engineer of the Government, returned from an inspection of the G. T. P. from Winnipeg to Prince Rupert, announces that all sections of the line are linked up and will be ready to operate this autumn. As the Government has completed the eastern section, this means that the only gap now remaining from Halifax to Prince Rupert, is the Quebec bridge.

BOWSER'S THRIFT

It Results in Another Attempt on His Life

By M. QUAD

[Copyright, 1914, by Associated Literary Press.]

THE cat purred under the piano.

The cricket sang upon the hearth.

The cook had got through breaking dishes and gone to her room.

The children next door with whooping cough hadn't whooped for ten minutes.

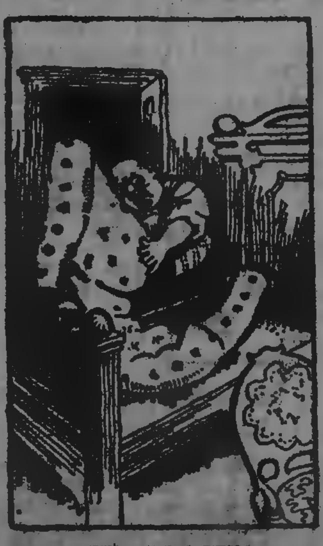
Mr. Bowser was smoking and nodding when suddenly it came without an instant's warning. Mrs. Bowser laid down her book and said:

"I wish you'd stop at some furniture store in the morning and see if you can't get a man for an hour or two. I want the things moved out of the spare bedroom and the carpet taken up."

"That's a fair specimen of your economical way of doing things," answered Mr. Bowser. "There's about ten minutes' work to be done, and yet you'd pay a man $10 or $12 instead of asking me."

"You ought to get a man for a dollar, and the last time you took down a bedstead you"—

"The idea of paying out enough money to buy two tons of coal for ten minutes' work! When I sit down and think over your reckless extravagance I wonder that we have a dollar in the bank. What is it to take down a bedstead, to yank a bureau out into the hall, to rip up a carpet? I'll have the room empty in five minutes."



A TWIST AND A WHIRL.

"But I thought I'd have the bureau brought downstairs. And you know the bedstead is big and solid, and once when you started to take it down you"—

An Ambitious Schedule.

"I know nothing about it. I don't propose to pay out my hard earned money for somebody to come up here and loaf around. It is now exactly 7 o'clock. In five minutes the room will be empty, and one minute later I'll be back here again."

"I'll pay a man out of my own pin money," protested Mrs. Bowser.

"You'll pay nothing!" he replied as he started upstairs, followed by the family cat.

No preparations had been made for removal. Mr. Bowser entered the bedroom to find the bed undisturbed, but with one wide sweep of his arm he gathered up blankets, sheets and pillows and carried them down the hall. Then he returned and gave the mattress a twist and a whirl, which flopped it off the bed and out of the door, and the spring came next. Mr. Bowser was working on ragtime. No man can pick up a set of bed springs to the time of "Auld Lang Syne."

Mr. Bowser In Trouble.

The cat saw the impending calamity and leaped to the top of the bureau. As Mr. Bowser heaved up the springs and gave them a bounce he lost his balance and went down with a crash, and, having nowhere else to go, the springs followed him. He was fighting them off with hands and feet when Mrs. Bowser looked in at the door and exclaimed:

"Thank heaven that the life has not been crushed out of you!"

"If you imagine I'm the sort of man to be crushed under a blamed old set of bed springs you don't know me!" cried Mr. Bowser, extricating himself with difficulty.

"I knew you'd have trouble, and that was the reason I wanted you"—

"There's no trouble about it. The cat tripped me up. I'm big enough and old enough to boss this job, and you get right back downstairs and attend to your knitting!"

There are two ways of taking down a mahogany bedstead weighing a ton or two. Mr. Bowser's way was peculiarly his own. His first move was to grab the footboard and wrench and twist and draw the whole bed across the room and push it back again. Then he stood off and kicked at the rails until the heels flew off his slippers. It was a sudden inspiration which caused him to lift up the ends of the rails, and to his great surprise they were loosened from the head and footboards. The footboard he managed to move down the hall without accident, but when he came to the headboard, which had been brought over in the Mayflower to ballast the ship, he realized that a desperate struggle was at hand. So did the cat, and in her wisdom she retreated to the hall to await events.

"Why my great-grandfather didn't use this lumber to build up a horse barn is more'n I can make out," growled Mr. Bowser as he surveyed the massive structure and waited for his second wind.

More Trouble.

It had to be moved, however, and there was no time to call up the wrecking company or figure on the hydraulic power. Mrs. Bowser crept up and sat on the stairs and shivered, and the cat walked to and fro in the hall and had nervous tremors, while Mr. Bowser moistened his hands and looked furtively about for a point of vantage. Suddenly he jumped forward and made an attack. His object was to take the bedstead by surprise and run it down the hall before it could make a move in defense. He succeeded to a degree—that is, he got the cumbersome mass clear of the wall and on the move for the door, and Mrs. Bowser was beginning to breathe easier and the cat feeling more hopeful when there was a yell of terror and a crash which shook things clear down to the cellar bottom. The headboard had bucked.

The jump Mr. Bowser made ought to be preserved in the chronicles of athletics. He struck his head against the wall with a bump which made him see stars, but he had saved his life.

"I knew it!" said Mrs. Bowser as she looked into the room and saw the headboard flat on the floor and Mr. Bowser wiping the dampness off his bald head.

"Has anybody asked for your opinion?" he replied as he tried to assume a careless air.

"I thought you were killed! I hope you will now let the rest of it go and send up a man. You see, you don't know how"—

"Oh, I don't, eh? But I'll show you that I do. I'll clear this furniture out if I break both legs and drive my head through the wall!"

A Man of Determination.

Mrs. Bowser went back to her seat on the stairs, and after lifting her eyes in appeal the cat got as far down the hall as she could. It was Mr. Bowser's plan to lull the headboard into a feeling of security by giving it a brief rest while he tackled the bureau. To get the bureau out he must move it over the headboard. He had no statistics at hand to consult, but he had great confidence in his lifting powers. Mrs. Bowser heard him suddenly rush upon that bureau and haul it away from the wall. Then she heard him gasping and grunting as he lifted at the corners. She followed him with her ears as he walked around behind it and put his shoulder to the wheel and got a brace for his feet. There was a louder grunt, a muttered, "Git up there, durn you!" and then the house was shaken again. Mr. Bowser had heaved up, and the bureau had heaved down, and the loss of his toe hold at a critical moment had given the bureau the victory. He lay there under it, and he seemed to be dead. The cook was summoned through the speaking tube, and by their united exertions the two women lifted the bureau and rolled the form of Mr. Bowser aside. It wasn't a case of death. He had simply been squeezed as flat as a pancake and had his bones twisted about. Mrs. Bowser had scarcely taken his head in her lap and moistened his nose with camphor when he opened his eyes and sat up.

Whose Foul Deed Is This?

"Who—who pushed the blamed old bureau over on me?" he demanded as soon as he could get his breath.

"Why, no one, of course," answered Mrs. Bowser. "You were trying to heave it up when"—

"When you sneaked into the room and jammed against it and hoped I would be squeezed to death! I might have known you would do it. Woman, although you have been foiled again, this is the end! You have tried assassination once too often!"

"But how can you say"—

"That will do. It's as plain as day. Tomorrow our lawyers can arrange about the divorce and alimony. Not a word—not a single word! I see through it all, and, baffled murderess, I wish you good night and pleasant dreams!"

TRUST DEED RATIFIED.

Cabinet Council Concludes Negotiations With C. N. R.

OTTAWA, July 16. — The trust deed in connection with the C. N. R. bond guarantee has been practically put through. An order-in-council was passed yesterday afternoon authorising the execution of the trust deed and the appointment of the trustee. The deed only remains to be formally signed up, and this will be done to-day.

Sir William Mackenzie has been here all through the negotiations. As in connection with all such guaranteed bond issues, the Government must approve the rate at which the bonds are sold and also the place. It is believed that some of the bonds will be sold in New York. Only a portion of the $45,000,000 worth of bonds will be put on the market at one time, of course.

The trust deed in connection with the G. T. P. bond guarantee of $16,000,000 will be taken up to-day, but may take a day or two to settle up.

Prosperity There.

HAMILTON, July 16.—A sign of returning prosperity was contained in the announcement made yesterday by Basil Magor, vice-president of the National Steer Car Co., that the concern had let the contract for an extensive addition to its passenger car department. The company has secured large orders for equipment and passenger cars, which means that by the early autumn the big plant will be running day and night. In addition to the regular staff about 500 more workmen will be required.

CLEVELAND, O., July 16.—Summer drinks will have a natural sparkle and will be without the foamy effect produced by the use of soap bark, as a result of an agreement signed by Cleveland bottlers, City Chemist White announced yesterday. The agreement is the result of a campaign waged by White for months.

THE SPORTING WORLD

BLOUNTMEN MADE IT THREE OUT OF FOUR

Ottawa, July 16.—Ottawa put up another farcical exhibition before a small crowd yesterday, losing the third of the present series to Peterboro by 9 to 1. Peterson got along well until the third, when his own error, followed by that of Bullock's and Blount's home run touched off fireworks, the visitors scoring three runs. Paige succeeded Peterson and was also hit hard. He issued several walks, and these, coupled with the Ottawa errors and base running blunders, gave the visitors six more runs. The stars gummed up pretty near every play they attempted, while the crowd kept shouting to Shaughnessy "To get a new team."

Schettler had the Ottawas at his mercy, striking out eleven and being touched up for five scattered hits. He did not issue a base on balls. Only thirty men faced Schettler, who was master of the situation at all times. The crowd roasted the Ottawa players throughout. Neither Peterson nor Paige could puzzle the visiting batsmen.

There will be a shake up in the Ottawa team at once. Pitcher Ed. Killian, the Detroit veteran, is expected to report tomorrow, and Hank Perry is also coming with a view to strengthen the outfield. Rogers the sensation of 1913, who has been a joke all season, is to be benched or released; also Nill, Powers and probably Smykal. The Ottawas are in desperate straits and have offered $1,000 to Adrian for Shortstop Mitchell. Shaughnessy and Dolan are the only ones who are playing any kind of decent ball. The score:—

LACROSSE TEAM WON AT CAMPBELLFORD BY 6-3

The Peterboro lacrosse representatives defeated Campbellford on the latter's grounds yesterday, and thereby kept within striking distance of the group championship. The final score was 6-3. The local players report that they were not treated to any over-courtesy on the part of the home club. It is the understanding and rule that the expenses of the visiting club be paid, but the Campbellford officials failed to come across with the necessary yesterday. The matter may be taken up with the O.L.A. executive, but at any rate the local club will not pay the expenses of the Campbellford crew when it comes here a week from to-morrow or Saturday.

The local club was by no means at full strength, owing to the action of some employers in refusing to allow men who play on the team a half holiday. The club has been handicapped from that source all season, and considering the difficulties has made a good showing. The game was clean and the locals held the upper hand all the way. Mr. Kemp of Norwood officiated. The Petes lined up as follows: Fleming, goal; Dillon, point; Crough, cover point; LeBarr, first defence, Kenneally, second defence; Halpin, center; Dunsford, first home; Manion, second home; H. Dunsford, outside home; McCoy, inside home.

"DAD" STEWART JOINS OTTAWA

(Special to The Review.)

Ottawa, July 16.—Dad Stewart, who was left behind by Manager Blount will appear on the local lineup this afternoon. A big shake-up in the team is to be made and if Stewart shows sufficient class he will become a regular.

COMMENT

As You Like It

THE FACT THAT THE PETES won three out of four in Ottawa signifies many things. The former cellar occupants have shown that they could accomplish something which is a reality. In the case of the Petes the victories were deserving, while the same applies to the Senators' win on Monday, when Kubat held Curly Blount's crew to five hits. During the series the Petes outscored, outhit and outfielded the former pennant winners. The locals scored 23 runs, poled out 37 hits, and made 4 mistakes. On the other hand, Ottawa had 30 hits, scored 13 runs, and had 10 errors.

THE SENATORS have either lost their punch or the Petes should be up in third place. By the way they have been performing of late, they should be there, and had they been performing as well in the earlier stages as they have been the past three weeks, they would be giving London the fight of their lives to stay on the pinnacle. Ottawa's games for the past month go to show that Shaughnessey's weak point is his pitching staff. The club sailed along fine during the early stages because the other clubs outside of London were below form and Schocker was hurling shut-out ball. Now that the other clubs are doing nicely, Schocker is shot, and Kubat about the best bet in the hurling corps, Ottawa is slipping behind and will continue to do so.

TALKING ABOUT PITCHING STAFFS, the locals look to have the best in the league at present. Louie Schettler is doing better, and the team is hitting behind him, something they failed to do in the initial stage of the race. Sterling, who had a tough job getting started, looks better today than he has since breaking into the league, and that means something. Belting can also be counted on to win steadily, while Ken Tracey is going along fine. Creswell is the hard luck boy of the bunch. He has pitched good ball in few starts, but his mates have been unable to clout effectively behind him.

THE BRITISH lawn tennis team yesterday won the preliminary match with France in the competition for the Dwight F. Davis trophy. The Britons will meet the winners of the Canada-Australia-United States matches in the finals, which will be played at Boston.

THE CANADIAN LEAGUE may not have any fence-busting Hilliards or Wrights on the various teams this year, but performances make it look as though the batters are a better lot of sluggers all round. Heck, Schocker, Auld, Donohue, and a few more who were supposed to be consistent winners, have fallen before the onslaught of the artillery quite frequently of late.

Irwin Trout the former Pete has gone up. Along with Kroy, Trouty has been taken from the Canadian League line-up by the Toronto management and placed with the Leafs. Kroy was with the Leafs before but fell off in his hitting. It was because of Trout's clouting that the change was made. He will be played in the outfield. Snell of the Leafs will join the Beavers.

Dad Stewart, the veteran right fielder, has been let out by Manager Blount. When the locals left Ottawa for home last night Stewart remained in the capital, probably in the hope of catching on with Midge Craven's Saints who open there today. The local pilot had to cut down on his crew and as Rooney has been fielding in good style and doing some nice hitting and has a far better arm than "Dad," Manager Blount made the change.

Eddie Carr is holidaying and attended the Ottawa series. Eddie blew home this morning and thought he was telling us something new when he stated that the Ottawa scorers protect the home club. However Eddie is only one of the many that knows how Ottawa players fatten batting averages and also fielding averages if the occasion demands. Eddie claims at least ten hits for the locals and three instead of four for Ottawa. Schettler whiffed eleven.

While in Ottawa the local secretary met Premier Borden and says he does not look anything like the picture you see on a tin of condensed milk. He stopped at the Chateau Laurier until they got wise and when the noon hour rolled around he beat it for the Russell.

Jimmy Direct and Ora Medium of Frank Montgomery's string and Dr. Johnson's Susie Hal were shipped to Orillia yesterday for the two day's meet which opens today. A number of local saddle and sulky devotees left early in the evening to attend the racing.

Catcher Kelly, of the Peterboro Club, will pay $20 into the Canadian Ball League treasurer as the result of his run-in yesterday with Umpire Jack Halligan during the game at Lansdowne Park. In the second inning Kelly shouted something at Halligan from the Peterboro dugout. Halligan turned and ordered him away. Kelly stepped onto the seat near the bench and continued to shout. In the third Halligan again spied him and shouted "Get off that bench, Kelly." Kelly refused and Halligan shouted, "That will cost you ten."

"Why don't you make it twenty?" asked Kelly, who is one of the freshest young athletes in the league.

"It's twenty now," shot back Halligan. "This game won't go on until you get out of the grounds." Kelly disappeared, but in the next inning Halligan noticed him at the plate, warming up Pitcher Sterling. "Time" called Halligan and again Kelly was forced to make a hurried exit. He was reported to President Fitzgerald last night and will likely draw a suspension. There was a warm repartee between the rival teams throughout the game.

"Put that busher out of the park," some one shouted from the Ottawa bench as Halligan was banishing Kelly.

"What's the matter," came from the Peterboro dugout, "aren't you in the same league?"—Ottawa Citizen.

Pitcher Ed. Killian, who for many years was a member of the Detroit Tigers, accepted terms with the Ottawa Baseball Club to-day and will join the Canadian League champions in the course of a day or two. Killian is a left hander, who dropped out of the game last year. He is an automobile salesman and his last engagement was with a semi-professional team in Detroit, though he pitched a few games for the Guelph team last year. Killian should strengthen the Ottawas. Hank Perry, an outfielder, who comes from Detroit and who has seen service in the International, will also come to Ottawa. His contract was received this morning.

The Senators have made an offer to Adrian for Shortstop Mitchell. Killian and Perry are both veterans, but it is calculated they would steady the team. Several of the present players are to be let out and one or two, who have been of no use to the team because of injuries or other ills, will be suspended for the balance of the season.—Ottawa Citizen.

Shamrock IV Will Soon be on Her Way Across Atlantic

Gosport, England, July 16. — Everything is ready for the departure on July 18 for the United States of Shamrock IV., Sir Thomas Lipton's challenger for the America's Cup. Her compasses have been adjusted, her ketch rig fitted and the steam yacht Erin, also belonging to Sir Thomas Lipton, is waiting to convoy her across the Atlantic.

"Shamrock IV. has done all that has been asked of her," is the final word of Charles E. Nicholson, the designer. He admits, however, that the trial boat was in no way satisfactory as the type of opponent which would enable yachtsmen accurately to gauge Shamrock's chances of lifting the America's Cup.

Underwriters at Lloyds are not so optimistic as Mr. Nicholson concerning Shamrock IV.'s chances. Their estimate was roughly 3 to 1 against the challenger. In other words they are issuing policies at a premium of 35 per cent. to pay the total loss if Shamrock IV. should prove successful. A similar risk in connection with an aeroplane flight across the Atlantic during the present year is being covered at 8 per cent.

The crew of Shamrock IV., numbering more than 30 men, is to be divided during the voyage across, forty of the sailors luxuriating on board the Erin as far as the Azores, and then relieving their shipments for the remainder of the journey.

FOUR COUNTRIES TO PLAY IN TENNIS TRIALS

New York, July 16.—Within the next two weeks there will be in the United States the cream of tennis players from four countries. Never before in the history of the Davis Cup matches have so many competitors from different parts of the world been in the defenders country at the same time.

The great Australian team, composed of Wilding, Brookes, Dunlop and Doust will arrive here on board the Cunard liner, Aquitania, and depart quickly for Chicago, where they will meet Canada in the elimination round.

The English and German teams sail from Europe on Saturday for the United States, while the Canadians will cross the border next week to practice on the Chicago, courts for their matches with Australia.

The victors of the Australia-Canada games will play the Germans and the team that emerges successfully from that struggle will play the English champions, after which the defenders are to meet in the final.

Gold may be the key to society, but poverty is the strongest bar.

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

OF course we all know that if other people were as liberal minded as we are there would never be the least bit of friction in the world.

Insanity continues to be the favorite excuse for innate meanness.

Money may not buy happiness, but it will buy all the other things that happiness ought to have.

If accidents didn't happen they wouldn't be accidents.

Hens are the most contrary minded objects on the farm. When eggs are worth 60 cents a dozen they refuse to lay.

Difficult Hunting.

There is no pole to look upon
Up in the frozen zone.
The man who finds it must depend
On instruments alone.
Unlike a whitewashed clothesline post
Or like a walnut tree,
It doesn't stand, and so it takes
A sage the pole to see.

One who had never hunted poles
Might think it was a snap,
For he has seen it since a boy
Right there upon the map.
He thinks that he would only need
Some doughnuts in a bag
To sally to its hiding place
And with the pole play tag.

But disappointment would be his
If it should be his fate
To find the pole, for thereabout
Is only good to skate.
He wouldn't even find a hump,
A hummock or a knoll.
You bet old earth is pretty smooth
Up there about the pole.

No; it requires a lot of sense
And instruments and skill
To be the one to do the job
And nobly fill the bill.
No dream book writer need apply.
A man of instinct rare
It takes, with science at his back,
To know that he is there.

Governed His Feelings.

"I can always sympathize with the man who is down."

"What are you, a charity worker."

"Oh, no."

"Just your human instincts?"

"Well, I make court plaster."

How He Likes It.

"My husband says he doesn't see that there is any work to be done in the house."

"That's the way with most men."

"What is?"

"Why, they want the work all done up and kept out of sight while they are around."

Good Idea.

"It is raining pitchforks."

"What!"

"Fact."

"When it clears up I'll tell you what let's do."

"What?"

"Start an implement shop."

Explained.

"What is meant by the term 'artist?'"

"Artist?"

"Yes."

SIGNALS TO STREET CARS

Passengers for street cars are requested to distinctly signal the car, as it approaches the stop at which they are waiting, by raising the hand, cane or umbrella to a horizontal position or higher.

In many cases it is impossible for the motormen to know whether or not persons who merely step out towards the centre of the street, when a car is approaching, want the car to stop or not, and much uncertainty and consequent delay to passengers may therefore be avoided by our patrons making a distinct signal, as above, when they wish a car to stop for them.

WAS CHOSEN TO HANDLE MONEY FOR CAMPAIGN

E. R. Teed on the Stand Before Commission

ST. JOHN, N.B., July 16.—At the inquiry into the crown land charges made against Premier Flemming of New Brunswick, which was resumed yesterday before the royal commission, E. R. Teed told the commission that he had been asked by Premier Flemming to take charge of the foreign fund. He had been asked to receive contributions. He understood that Premier Flemming had been informed that the lumbermen were raising a fund for party purposes. The Premier had refused to have anything to do with the fund, however, but had offered to nominate a man to take charge of the fund and had accordingly selected witness (Mr. Teed) for the purpose.

Teed said Mr. Flemming told him that Mr. Berry had informed him that the lumbermen were arranging a fund to be paid over to the Government for Government purposes. Mr. Flemming said that he told Berry that he, being an officer of the crown, could not touch the money, but if the lumbermen had decided to go ahead with the fund he would appoint a man to take charge of it. He accordingly asked witness to do this, to which the latter consented. The funds were to be used for the "good of the party in the province."

Teed was continued on the stand during the afternoon session. He told of several transactions in connection with the money collected. He had placed the money in a safety deposit vault in the Royal Bank of St. John, but after the charges were made by Mr. Dugal he had placed the cash in the form of a special deposit in the Bank of Nova Scotia. Before this he had loaned the Flemming-Gibson Co., Ltd., the sum of $15,000 out of the fund on the note of the company. This fund had all been paid back, with interest

Before the session adjourned Mr. Carvell asked witness what party the fund was for, and the witness replied that it was for the local Government party.

The Roman Forum.

The Forum Romanum, the first that was erected in Rome, served equally for the purpose of trade and all public meetings as well as for the administration of justice by the consuls and other Roman magistrates. Later on, when the fora numbered some eighteen or twenty, they were divided into two classes, some for public meetings and the proceedings of the law courts and others for the various requirements of trade. The Roman forum corresponded to the agera, or market place, of the Greeks, and no Roman city was without this important centre of judicial, political and commercial life.

WASHINGTON IS JUBILANT

Huerta's Exit May Bring Forth Peace

WASHINGTON, July 16.—Naturally the resignation of Gen. Huerta caused great jubilation among Constitutionalist Junta members and in Administration circles when confirmation of the news was received here last night. Senor Rafael Zubaran chief confidential agent of the Constitutionalists, received direct information last night from Mexico City that Gen. Huerta resigned at four o'clock in the afternoon, and that Francisco Carbajal was sworn in as Acting President last evening.

Washington is now awaiting the announcement by President Carbajal of his attitude toward the Constitutionalist movement in Mexico. Whether there will be more battles between the Constitutionalists and Federals will depend, it is asserted, upon whether Carbajal intends to offer further resistance or is willing to surrender the Government to the Constitutionalists upon the proper guarantee from the latter as to the protection of lives and property of Mexicans and foreigners.

The Wilson Administration is hoping that Carbajal will indicate promptly his decision not to further resist the Constitutionalists. The Constitutionalist agents express belief that Carbajal has merely taken over the executive power to hold until taken over by the Constitutionalists and that there will probably be no more fighting.

French School Raided.

WASHINGTON, July 16. — The killing of the director and the inspector of the school of the Christian Borthers of Zacatecas, Mexico, and the imprisonment of eleven other members of the order, all French citizens, were reported to President Wilson yesterday in a telegram laid before him by Brother Clementius, a member of the order. The President was asked to take immediate steps to have the imprisoned men set free and to prevent threatened similar occurrences at Saltillo, Acalzinco, Mexico City, Miscoac, Morelia, Puebla, Queretaro and Toluca, where other schools are maintained.

NO EXTRA ISSUE

C.P.R. Has Plenty of Capital for Present Requirements

MONTREAL, July 16.—In order to set at rest rumors that any issue of new stock and other disquieting stories about Canadian Pacific Railway affairs, Sir Thomas Shaughnessy yesterday issued the following statement:

"After the payment of all fixed charges and dividends, the company entered upon the new fiscal year, July 1, with $36,000,000 in cash and $4,000,000 in equipment securities after having spent upwards of $20,000,000 on railway and steamship construction, for which four per cent. consolidated debenture stocks have been authorized, but not offered on the market.

"The end has nearly been reached with all the important works of construction and improvement that were in progress, and only a comparatively small portion of the money in hand will be required for their completion.

"No new works of any magnitude are contemplated at present, and therefore no necessity exists for the further issue of capital stock.

"It is not unlikely, however, that the directors will, at the meeting in October, recommend to the shareholders that the authorized ordinary share capital be made to conform to the amount for which the company has legal warrant, so as to provide for the future capital requirements, as and when they arise."

WOMAN DIES FROM HEAT.

Montreal, July 16. — Montreal's first death from the heat this summer took place yesterday afternoon, when Mrs. Annie Alexander, 81 years of age, dropped dead in her garden at the rear of her residence, 29 Arcade Street. The body was taken to the Morgue, and the physician reported that the excessive heat was the cause of the woman's death.

COPY OF SHIP COLUMBUS USED

One of the Exhibits for Exposition at Frisco

The copy of the Columbus flagship Santa Maria has arived in Toronto on her way from Chicago to San Francisco via the Lakes, the St. Lawrence, and the Panama Canal.

This quaint and ancient-looking craft was launched at the navy yard, Cadis, on June 26th, 1892. She made her first sea voyage July 29th of the same year, sailing to Palos, Spain. Her dimensions are: Length at the water line, 71 feet 3 inches; length over all, 94 feet; beam, 25 feet 8 inches; depth of hold, 12 feet 5 inches; draft, 8 feet 2 inches; freeboard, 5 feet; displacement, 233 metric tons, or 96 gross tons.

Fifteenth Century Rig.

From the deck arrangement it is noted that the ship is built for the purpose of attack and defence, and she is very staunchily constructed throughout. She was the only one of the trio that had forecastle and cabin. She is rigged with a bowsprit and three masts. The mainmast is 90 feet high and carries a mainyard 60 feet 6 inches in length, and a topsailyard 23 feet 6 inches in length. Her spritsailyard is 26 feet 6 inches; foreyard, 39 feet 9 inches; and mizzen lateenyard 63 feet 6 inches. At the top of the mainmast is a crow's nest. When under sail she carries 5000 feet of square canvas. Her spritsail was set underneath the bowsprit.

Ship's Armament.

The blocks are of the Columbus period, and in their many shapes and sizes, from the tiny single-wheeled ones to the mammoth ones of several wheels, they make a very interesting study. The armament of the vessel consists of four Lombardia cannon of 2⅓ inch bore; six falconets, 1 inch to 1¾ inch bore. On the cruise of 1492 the Santa Maria carried a total in officers and men of from 56 to 70, according to different historians, and these people were cared for on this small boat for a period of seventy days. One may well ask: "Where did the find quarters?" and "What were their provisions, and where were they stored?" Fresh water was carried in wooden tanks, but the narrative of the eventful voyage is silent regarding the food supplies.

No Pleasure Cruise.

It will be recalled that the first Santa Maria was wecked on the reefs off shore at Hayti on Christmas Eve, 1492, and that the contents of the boat were saved by Indians; that Columbus built Fort Navidad from the timbers and lumber of the Santa Maria; that he mounted the cannon from the boat, and that he left forty men there while he returned to Spain in the Nina, a sister caravel of the Pinta. The Nina was only 55 feet long on the deck line, and had a displacement of 48 tons, so that a trans-Atlantic trip in her was no pleasure voyage by any means.

The Admiral's Cabin.

The cabin occupied by Columbus on the Santa Maria is situated under the poop deck and extends across the ship, and here is presented a very realistic picture of the original voyage. The great admiral is seated at the side of a table, and is apparently in the midst of an animated discussion with one of his officials. On the table are maps and instruments such as were used daily by Colon in his calculations. The costumes of both figures are true to the period, and the head of the admiral is taken from the Lotto portrait. The Spanish sea chest in the corner of the cabin is of the period, and the crucifix on the wall was made in the early part of the fifteeath century.

Old Maps and Compass.

The flag of Castile and Leon, and the Royal pennant, which were taken ashore by Columbus when he first landed in the New World, have a place in the cabin. They have been correctly reproduced in every detail. The map feature is of intense interest, and includes the Genoese world map, 1457; Portolan chart of Roselli, 1468; and world map of Juan de la Cosa, 1500. There is also the Martin Behaim globe, 1492, Columbus' anchor, a stove, and an azimuth compass to indicate the vast difference there is in the science of navigation as between the two periods. The horrors of the ship's prison can be better imagined than described, more particularly as many of the crew were the offscourings of Spanish jails. Other exhibits are bow guns and arrows, boarding spears and battle axes, stone and lead cannon balls, and other parts of the armament of the carack.—Toronto Telegram.

MARTIN AGAIN

Montreal's Stormy Petrel Clashes With Depaty

MONTREAL, July 16.—Yesterday Mayor Mederic Martin wired the assistant city clerk, Rene Bauset, from Toronto not to lay any official document before Acting Mayor Blumenthal.

Ald. Blumenthal was wrathy when shown the telegram and instructed the clerk that he was the mayor and declared that if officials did not fulfil their duties and lay all documents before him he would suspend them.

Trouble is looked for when Mayor Martin finds that not only has the acting mayor signed many documents but in addition has sworn in 17 new recruits to the fire department, which the mayor considers his own especial privilege.

SAVED BY BUTLER

Secretary for Scotland Attacked by Mititants

LONDON, July 16.—Two militant suffragettes yesterday made a violent attack on the Rt. Hon. Thomas McKinnon Wood, Secretary of State for Scotland, as he was leaving his residence. The women were both armed with heavy horsewhips, with which they struck Mr. Wood several times across the shoulders. They were both arrested.

Only for the timely intervention of his stalwart butler, it is very probable that the Secretary would have been soundly thrashed. He was just leaving his residence when a woman rushed up, horsewhip in hand, exclaiming: "You Scottish pig, if you don't stop the forcible feeding of women we shall smash you."

The militant lashed him across the chest, but before she could deliver a second cut the butler, who was standing on the steps, seized her and threw her sprawling to the ground, leaving him free to tackle the second woman, who was shouting: "Let me get at the Scottish pig."

She made a rush with her whip at the Secretary for Scotland and was still struggling in the butler's grip when the police arrived and bundled both women to the police station. They were later sentenced to fourteen days in jail.

DOUBLE DROWNING IN OTONABEE RIVER

Austin O'Toole and Chas. Bergoine Are the Victims While Paddling to T.A.S. Park — Elmer Fowler Swims to Shore—Accident Followed Carlessness in the Canoe

Within hailing distance of hundreds of people attending the retailers picnic at T.A.S. Park, yesterday afternoon, Austin O'Toole, aged seventeen, son of Wm. O'Toole, 95 Hunter Street, and Charles Bergoine, aged seventeen, and son of Charles Bergoine, 514 Water Street, were drowned in the Otonabee River.

Elmer Fowler, a third occupant of the canoe, swam to safety.

The accident happened shortly after three o'clock. It is said that the young men had not been too careful in the management of their boat and this no doubt was responsible for the accident which brought about their death and caused sorrow and gloom to enter into the lives of parents, brothers and sisters.

As is usually the case, the vim and vigor of youth called for considerable nonsense and several persons on the water noticed that they were taking a number of chances.

When the canoeists were about 300 yards this side of T.A.S. Park and about seventy-five feet from the Otonabee side, Bergoine went to speak to O'Toole, who was sitting at the rear, but in turning moved too close to the side and the three were thrown into the water. Fowler headed for shore and looked back once and saw Bergoine holding the upturned boat and O'Toole with his arms clasped around Bergoine. Fowler swam on and when he reached the branches of an overhanging tree he caught them and looked back for his companions. Evidently they had lost their hold on the boat for they were nowhere to be seen. In a few seconds they came to the surface and reached out as if they were trying to catch the boat again but it had drifted down a few yards and the two young victims sank again for the last time.

When people at the Park heard of the accident, every effort was made to locate the bodies. Many men gave their assistance but it was some time before their efforts met with success. In the meantime word had been sent to the fire station summoning the pulmotor, and Chief Howard made the best possible time, in response. The pulmotor was utilized but the bodies had been in the water too long. The Fire Chief thought he noticed some sign of life in the body of Bergoine but the combined efforts of the workers were unavailing.

Bodies Recovered.

Grappling irons and pike poles had been used in the search for the bodies. Geo. Buchanan recovered Bergoine's body with the aid of a pike pole and that of O'Toole was recovered by Walter Metheral, Geo. Buchanan, Vincent Heenan and a couple of other men. This was about forty minutes after the accident.

A call was sent to Comstocks and the bodies were removed to their undertaking parlors. Constable Archie Moore who assumed charge in the absence from the city of Coroner Greer, considered an inquest unnecessary. The funeral of the late Chas. Bergoine will be held tomorrow afternoon from the family residence to the Little Lake Cemetery.

The funeral of Austin O'Toole will take place Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock to St. Peter's Cathedral and Cemetery.

Fowler's Story.

Interviewed by a Review man this morning Elmer Fowler was not by any means over the effects of the fatality. He stated that they had been tipping the canoe purposely and a few seconds before the accident a man named Feeley, who he understood resided in the south end, passed them and remarked that they were taking a big chance. The answer he got was "We should worry." When the canoe went over Fowler thought that the other two could make the shore easily and he started out. When he looked back O'Toole was clinging to Bergoine who had hold of the canoe. The next time he looked back they both had disappeared and came to the surface but once

Fowler claimed that both O'Toole and Bergoine could swim fairly well and why they grasped one another he could not understand. The story circulated that they were intoxicated was absolutely false.

ATTENDANCE NOT SO LARGE BUT ALL HAD GOOD TIME

Second Annual Picnic of the Retail Merchants — The List of Prize Winners

Although not graced with as large a crowd as the year previous, the second annual picnic of the Retail Merchants' Association held yesterday afternoon at T.A.S. Park, was a fine success. Over three thousand people enjoyed the cool breezes of the river and the extensive program carefully prepared by the energetic gentlemen in charge of the various features of the big outing, which has proved to be the biggest event of the season. The steamers Stoney-Lake and Rainbow, also a scow attached, carried the three thousand people in excellent time and made regular trips during the afternoon. Several large boat loads came down in the evening for the dance which delighted the large number of people on the grounds. The Opera House Orchestra supplied the music for the occasion assisted by both bands.

Great credit is due to Messrs. McNabb, Leck, Belleghem, McFadden and Bond for their efforts to make the dance a most successful one. The various other committees in charge are also deserving of more than considerable credit for their zealous efforts to push the Association's picnic to the highest zenith possible. Secretary Cameron was the busiest man on the grounds assisted by his able lieutenants.

Conversation with various members of the committee was to the effect that they were highly satisfied with the result. The crowd was not as large as last year due to the hot, sweltering weather and other attractions including the ball game and the large number of city people summering at the lakes. Everything had been carried out in a business like manner and nothing more of a success could be desired.

The 57th Band and Maple Leaf Band supplied music assisted by the Temple Band, which visited the Park in the evening.

The feature of the afternoon was the manner in which the energetic ground sports committee handled the extensive program of sports, all of which afforded more than considerable amusement for the spectators. The various events were well contested.

The 100 yards open was keenly contested, when over twenty men started. Wood, one of the old timers around the various athletic meets ran first, with Bill Morris of R.M.C. a few inches behind. Both runners showed class, with Morris looming up good for a promising future. In the 220, Morris captured first when he outdistanced the field by fully thirty yards. Morris also

OLD ACQUAINTANCES MET AT POLICE COURT

This morning at Police Court was easy for some of the culprits when Alex. Ross, one of the old timers was dismissed on the charge of being drunk.

"It's a long time since I saw you here," remarked the Magistrate.

Henry Thornton or Lindsay, drunk in a public place, was requested to leave the precincts of this fair city for Kent Street which is slightly wider than our main hike.

SERVING NOTICE ON BLACKLISTERS

Interdicted Ones Say They Are not Served

It is understood that Chief Thompson may call for an investigation in connection with the serving of notices on blacklisters. A number of the listers claim they never receive their notices and the investigation may solve this matter which has been a bone of contention for some time.

The matter was brought up this morning at Police Court when Chas. Healey claimed he had never received his notice from License Inspector Stewart.

Healey's evidence was taken and the matter will probably be looked into.

EDWARD KEMP DIES SUDDENLY

Took Weak Spell While on Load of Hay

WAS WELL KNOWN

Edward Kempt, aged 56 years, one of the most widely known farmers in this vicinity was overcome by heat while working on his farm at Lot 2, Concession 9, Douro, yesterday afternoon about 3 o'clock and passed away before medical aid could arrive. The late Mr. Kemp was on top of a load of hay and fell as if in a faint. The men who were working with him lifted him from the load and took him to the house where he expired in a few minutes. Dr. Amys was called and pronounced his death to be caused by heart trouble.

His wife, an aged mother, four brothers, John and William of this city, and Lance and Thomas of Douro, also Mrs. Stenton of Badaxe, Mich., and Mrs. John Hamilton of this city are left to mourn his loss.

The funeral will take place on Sunday afternoon from his late home to the Little Lake Cemetery.

THE "APPOINTMENT."

The Review is informed that the report in the local press to the effect that an "appointment" has been made to the office of collector of inland revenue at Peterboro, is incorrect. Also the statement appearing in one of the papers that recommendations are made to the Minister by others than the member is incorrect. Members are held responsible to the Government and by the electors for what they do and not the electors, although, as in the case of West Peterboro, it sometimes transpires that the advice of the bodies is sought.

GRAND LODGE AT THE FALLS

Masonic Assembly is Marked by Peace Celebration

OFFICERS ELECTED

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., July 17.—With nearly 1,000 school children singing the National Anthems of Great Britain and the United States, and prominent men from both countries delivering addresses on peace, the Masonic Grand Lodge, Canada, held its centennial peace celebration here yesterday afternoon, and last night in connection with the annual communication of Canadian Grand Lodge, which closed last night.

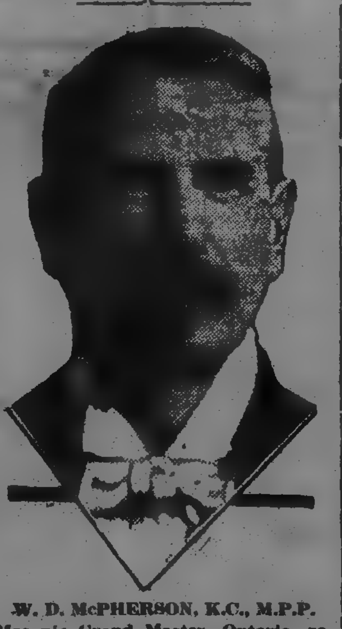
The celebration was one of the most noteworthy in the annals of Canadian masonry. It was attended by members of grand lodges of nearly all English-speaking nations in the world.

W. D. McPherson, M.P.P., Toronto, grand master of Canada, was the principal speaker. He spoke of the important part masonry has played in maintaining peace throughout the world, asserting that the craft was mainly responsible for the century of uninterrupted peace between Canada and the United States.

Rev. E. Y. Phillips, St. Louis, Mo., was the principal American speaker. He replied to the address of the Canadian grand master, and spoke upon the subject of international peace. He assured Canadian masons that their brothers in the United States were heartily in accord with these sentiments for the continuation of peace among the English-speaking peoples.

Hamilton was selected as the next convention city.

These officers were elected: Grand Master, W. D. McPherson, Toronto (re-elected); deputy grand master, H. Luke, Ottawa (re-elected); grand senior warden, S. D. Warner, Niagara Falls; grand junior warden, John Tanner, Toronto; grand chaplain, Rev. G. A. Woodside, Brantford; grand treasurer, E. K. Malone, Toronto (re-elected); grand secretary, B. L. Gunn, Hamilton (re-elected); grand registrar, R. J. Gibson, Toronto.



W. D. McPHERSON, K.C., M.P.P.
Masonic Grand Master, Ontario, re-elected at Niagara Falls.

DETECTIVE SHOT DEAD

Vice District at Chicago was Being Raided

THREE OTHERS HURT

Gang of Toughs made Trouble for Officers

Canadian Press Despatch.

Chicago, Ill., July 17.—Plainclothes detective Stanley Birnes was shot dead and his partner John Sloop shot in the thigh and Joseph Merrill and Fred Amart, detectives of the morals squad were wounded last night during a raid in the levee district or vice district which is supposed to be closed.

Merrill and Amart had made a raid on a disorderly house and had sent a load of prisoners to the station. A gang of toughs followed the officers yelling and throwing stones and bottles. The detectives drew revolvers and just then Birnes and Sloop came up and attempted to disperse the mob. Merrill and Amart being new policemen did not recognize the plainclothes men and the shooting which followed was promiscuous. The two squads happened to be in the same district through confusion of orders, or jealousy at headquarters.

STRANGE CAR ENTERS TAMWORTH MYSTERY

No Trace is Found of Miss Yorke—Dr. Robinson Has Also Disappeared

Canadian Press Despatch.

Toronto, July 17.—A telephone message from Tamworth to-day says the search for Miss Yorke has been abandoned and the theory of suicide is now accepted, although the community is completely non-plussed.

Tamworth, Ont., July 17.—Residents of Tamworth and vicinity are beginning to wonder if the presence of a mysterious touring car, seen in this vicinity last Wednesday night, might not have had something to do with the strange disappearance of Miss Blanche Yorke, who, since that evening, has not been seen.

The car was a strange one to those who saw it, and there seems to be no clue to its identity or that of the owner. The presence of a strange car in the locality is, in itself, enough to attract notice, and, coupled with the disappearance of a well-known and popular young lady, has assumed an even more momentous aspect.

May Be in Hospital.

Another rumor in town which is more or less startling, is that Miss Yorke is in a hospital in Kingston, though no one can suggest the nature of her illness, unless it were the throat trouble from which Miss Yorke was known to have been suffering.

A search failed to reveal the whereabouts of Dr. Robinson, who seems to have disappeared just as mysteriously as his erstwhile patient. No one is able to tell whether he has gone, or, if able, no one will tell.

Case Still Baffling.

The search still continues for the missing girl, but still the case seems absolutely baffling.

Her parents were unable to add anything to information which might suggest where she has gone. Mrs. Yorke, while telling of the tragedy, burst into tears. Mr. Yorke would not permit himself to discuss the matter at all.

In order to ascertain for certain whether anyone answering to the description of Miss Yorke left by train during the past week inquiries have been made at every railway station within a radius of twenty miles, but without success. Train operators and station agents are unanimous in declaring that no such person boarded a car at their depot.

Lakes and streams throughout the whole surrounding district have been searched for the body, and a constant patrol will be kept up in case, if the girl has been drowned, the body may wash ashore. Woods and thickets have been combed, but all to no affect. Nothing even faintly suggesting a trace of the girl has been discovered.

It is mentioned that a bottle of bichloride of mercury tablets were found missing from a shelf in the doctor's office after the girl had left about nine o'clock Wednesday evening, but friends scoff at any suggestion of suicide. Miss Yorke was known familiarly as "Happy," and was just as happy as ever when last seen on the evening of her disappearance.

Meantime, Detective Miller, who is on the case, has not given up hope, and nothing is left undone which might lead to the discovery of trace of the missing girl. Detective Miller, it may be mentioned, was one of the detectives engaged on the famous Kinrade case.

MR. F. H. DOBBIN WRITES FROM CITY OF HIGH RENTS AND NUMEROUS OIL HOPES

Mr. F. H. Dobbin, who is touring Western cities, sends The Review the following interesting article:

I was leaving Calgary on the night train scheduled to run out at 11.50. After stowing my grips and locating a berth, I went out to buy fifteen cents worth of biscuits. Despite the fact that there are said to be lunch counters at intervals along the line across the boundless prairie, and diners hitched to the trains, your father, you will observe, takes no chances. Things do happen, and any sort of eatable is better than none in extremity. I walked around the street frontages of four blocks before I found a place to attack the biscuits. I could have bought oil stock in any one of three hundred and twenty places in the same area.

Talk about publicity. We are only on the edge of it in the East. The placards, banners and show cards in thousands not only announce—they fairly scream. Places where offerings of stock are made are fairly covered with immense sheets, shouting in letters three feet high and riotous in blazing red, the claims of the oil site and its opportunities. Buildings along the streets, half a mile from the scene of carnage, are slashed across the street front with placards, besides which the yellow circus poster is not worth considering. Offers are the most extravagant. Assurances of untold wealth are given to the spectator if he will only buy and come in while the water is fine.

When the lot and land boom petered out in Calgary, it left a whole raft of speculators—so far as doing business—practically stranded. As they had been consuming a passionate public for some time previous, the appetite has only whetted. The cessation of the boom was a great deprivation. The fraternity did not die off, it became dormant. The first burst of the oil discovery was as a reviver. Out they came. Leaving whatever employment they had, they flocked to the engagement. Oil speculation began in a riotous carnival of haste. Here was a chance to gain some money. The gamblers came, and finding at hand an eager and willing public, the fun commenced.

I listened to a friend who had been drawn into the maelstrom of speculation. He said, "I stood outside that place less than a week ago and waited in line to get in my bid for a hundred shares. After a time he took my money and the company I am in are sure to strike it rich." "What have you got for your money?" I asked. He showed me a receipt for the amount. The certificates, he said, would come afterwards.

So far as I can learn, there is only one that has really found oil. Not exactly oil, but a rather crude gasoline. This product indicates that there must be oil in the neighborhood and the gasoline has been strained through the strata. To find the oil reservoirs is the critical thing and well drilling is going on on the chance. Experts in large numbers have given reports and opinions. The final test is to drill.

The City of Oil

Being within ten or twelve miles of Calgary, that city is the centre of operations. While the first frantic craze of the speculation mania has

HEARST IS DESTROYED BY RAGING BUSH FIRE

Five Hundred Residents of New Ontario Town Are Homeless and Destitute After Despairing Effort to Save Their Houses From the Flames.

JOHN E. WRIGHT
Masonic Grand Master, Quebec.

Relief Train Takes Most of Them to Cochrane Where They are Cared For.

COCHRANE, July 17. — Their homes, even their town, destroyed by fire, three hundred refugees from Hearst, 134 miles west of Cochrane, on the N. T. Railway, reached here yesterday afternoon in their flight for food and safety. It is the old story of a pioneer hamlet of wooden buildings caught in the swath of a forest fire and speedily reduced to ashes because of its combustible nature and lack of fire-fighting apparatus.

The residents have been fighting bush fires for the past two or three days, with the very scanty appliances at hand. Fanned by a strong wind, the flames gradually ate their way towards the town Wednesday, and about two o'clock the fight became hopeless, and the inhabitants fled for their lives to the nearest place of safety, which was the track. Here they found refuge, and no one was hurt. About four or five hundred people have been rendered homeless, and most of them are quite destitute.

On the relief train which arrived here yesterday afternoon from Hearst there were from two to three hundred homeless people, and they are being taken care of. They all tell stories of a two or three days' and nights' fight with fire, nothing but a bucket brigade being available. Several times they thought that the fire had been conquered, but each time it sprang up again, and the weary fight was resumed. Wednesday the wind almost blew a cyclone, and men who had been through the Porcupine fire began to make for the tracks, fearing for their lives. At three o'clock it got beyond all control, and everyone took refuge on the Transcontinental Railway tracks. Mr. M. J. O'Brien, of the firm of O'Brien, McDougall & O'Gorman, who have their construction headquarters at Hearst, took all the homeless people to his camps at Pit 7, where they were all fed, and the women and children housed.

They passed the night and the next day till the train arrived in the middle of smoke and flame and torrid heat.

About a month ago a bush fire invaded the town and destroyed nineteen houses. Wednesday it finished its work. All the houses were of wood, with the exception of the roundhouse and station of the Transcontinental, which are both saved. The only other buildings saved are Jamieson's meat store and Hayworth's store.

National Manufacturing Plant is Gutted—Blaze in Paint Shop.

BROCKVILLE, July 17—Spontaneous combustion among materials located in the japanning room and paint shop is blamed for the serious fire which gutted the most easterly building of the local plant of the National Manufacturing plant Wednesday night. Shortly before 12 o'clock yesterday morning the fire which had been smouldering broke out again with renewed force in the building damaged Wednesday night, and with a strong wind blowing the fire brigade found themselves faced with a much more difficult situation.

The blaze worked its way from the storeroom to the paint and carpenter shop, which were gutted with their contents. Only the good work of the firemen saved the greater portion of the foundry. People living in the fire zone worked assiduously with bucket and garden hose. The damage by fire and water to [illegible] will make the loss run [illegible] $50,000, which is [illegible] insurance.

BORDEN SHOULD FORGET REAUME.

THE LATEST RUMOR is that the Hon. Dr. Reaume will not be taken into the Cabinet of Sir James Whitney, but will be elevated to the Senate. Why the Conservatives should make a Senator out of Dr. Reaume is no clearer than the grimy surroundings of the new Ontario Government House.

Most men that are honoured with a Senatorship have some claim to the distinction for services rendered the public. On that score, Dr. Reaume is distinctly out of the list. As an indifferent Minister of Public Works he received pay, large pay, for every day he presided in his ministerial office. In his own constituency he has split the Conservative party. His endorsation of the building of the new Government House is deserving of a reprimand rather than the reward of either further office or Senatorship. Always a weak man in the Whitney Administration, he would be no support to the Conservatives at Ottawa, and, on the naval policy of Sir Robert Borden, which is one of the main issues in the Conservative policy, it is more than likely that he would be lined up with his compatriots in opposition to the Borden policy.

For the Senatorship that is vacant in Wetsern Ontario there are many candidates who have a better claim to the appointment than the Hon. Dr. Reaume. There are men who have rendered better public services and not smashed the party in their own constituencies.

The electors in Dr. Reaume's constituency, which, it is claimed, was made over to his own specifications, turned him down. While it is admitted that no government is entirely perfect, it has generally been recognized that Sir James Whitney had a strong Cabinet in every particular save that of Public Works. That the conduct of this department did not show up worse than it has is due to the strong hand Sir James Whitney has kept on the policy of his party. But, as for Dr. Reaume, the voice of the people was against him, and the circumstances of his whole case unmistakably preclude him from public office for the future. As we said that Premier Sir James Whitney would be well advised to leave Dr. Reaume out of his Cabinet, so we say that Premier Sir Robert Borden would do well to leave Dr. Reaume out of the Canadian Senate.

CANADA SHOULD PROTECT BRITISH INVESTORS.

GREAT BRITAIN has loaned for the half year just ended the huge sum of $760,000,000. $193,852,000 of this huge sum came to Canada. The figures indicate the substantial manner in which Great Britain is assisting Canada in her wonderful development. While Canada has profited largely from England, which in turn has received returns from invested funds, and owes much to Britain as a consequence, Canada should be careful not to disturb the confidence that brings so much capital to the Dominion. Away back in the 'teens of the last century, in discussing the necessities required to make Upper Canada prosperous, the two things most emphasized were capital and emigrants. Emigrants came in plenty in the 'thirties, but not until the 'fifties, when railroads began to be built, did capital come in large quantities, bringing concomitantly with it prosperity, high wages and high prices. Over-railroading brought depression, which was not dispelled until Sir John Macdonald proposed his National Policy. Since then Canada has been more careful in treating British investors, with the result that more British capital has come to Canada. She should not forget that she owes this caution to herself and to Britain, if she wishes to progress without serious periods of bad times.

A FREE GIFT THAT WAS VALUABLE.

WHEN THE LAST farm or townsite on the C. P. R. is sold, the company will have realized something like $400,000,000 from the grants originally bestowed upon it by the Government in return for a transcontinental line, linking the new provinces together. When the company began to build the line, that 25,000,000 acres which was given as a free gift, were absolutely valueless. By the coming in of the road the settlement by it of the vast new and unknown country, the company gave it and all other lands their first value. That free gift seemed so negligible at the time that nobody thought of it as potential wealth. The price per acre now is from $15 to $30, according to location. The land sales will not show any more in the general accounts; but the sales will go on; the values will increase; and the amount which the company will pocket will be larger than the capitalization of the entire system.

A MATTER FOR THE MINISTER OF LABOR.

A YOUNG MAN in Montreal, twenty-one years of age, jumped into the Lachine Canal because he was unable to find work. His attempt at suicide was unsuccessful, since he was seen by two men, who rescued him in an unconscious condition, after considerable difficulty. He will appear in the Recorder's Court, charged with attempted suicide.

This brief, tragic story comes from a Canadian city. It arises in Canada, which is continually saying that there is work for all. From the West comes the cry for hands, where it is said there are not enough men to harvest the fruit of the soil. From the East comes the demand for jobs, where factories are on short time and finding difficulty in keeping their men at work for the short time their factories are in operation. In England and on the Continent of Europe are appearing advertisements telling of the advantages of Canada, and inducing people to come to this country, yet there is little or no organization in this country to adjust the supply of labor to the demand.

What the result of the case in Montreal will be we cannot say. Possibly he will be given a term in jail for trying to end an existence that had become intolerable. That would certainly be unjust. This man tried to find work, and could not. It costs money to advertise for work, and often the necessary small amount of money is not on hand. At other times, searchers for work, particularly foreigners, do not understand the methods of getting work through the agency of a newspaper. But this fact stands out prominently beyond all others, that a man tried to end his miserable life in a country where there is work for all. That fact shows that some machinery is necessary to assist labour to flow where it is in demand. In Great Britain, Labour Bureaus or Labour Exchanges have been established. In Canada, we adopt the magnificent policy of sending a man to jail for thirty days or to death, for a circumstance over which he had no control, or at most in which he was unfortunate. The matter should receive the serious attention of the Minister of Labour in the Dominion Parliament.

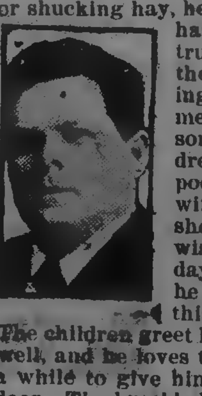
THE SOREHEAD
By Walt Mason



When Grouch goes home, at close of day, from sawing wood or shucking hay, he's in a frame of mind; he roasts the work he has to do, he roasts the housewife, good and true, and says things most unkind. He roasts the grub he has to eat, he roasts the milk for being sweet, the slaw for being sour; and when the meal is done, he sits in gloomy state, and throws some fits, and growls hour after hour. The children hush their laughter glad, for if they worry poor old dad, he knows where there's a club; the wife goes round with weary tread, and wishes she had never wed that sort of dismal dub. A wiser man is Billiam Bunn, who, when the long day's work is done, goes home in cheery mood; he chortles, and he cries, "Gee whiz! How good this nifty supper is," as he throws in the food. The children greet him with a yell; they love their daddy passing well, and he loves them some more; his wife's been waiting for a while to give him welcome, and her smile is wider than the door. The humble home where gladness dwells, where kind eyes smile and laughter swells, is heaven, simmered down; but home is like the other place if on disgruntled father's face there hangs a chronic frown.

RAINBOWS

SOMETIMES when thar's a summer shower the clouds'll split and one half of 'em will roll away as though satisfied with the drenchin' they have given the thirsty earth and the other half'll stick to their guns and keep on rainin' like all possessed. Then the old sun peeks about the edge of the breakin' cloud and laughs out at the sulky, morose one thet refuses to quit rainin', and the echo of that laugh flashes down across the drippin' world in a grand, vari-colored rainbow.

Do you remember them rainbows! How close they seemed to us and how beautiful. Remember, we uster think thet there was a pot of gold at the foot of the rainbow and thet if we journeyed to the end of the glorious arch it would be ours. Funny, eh! And still when ye come to think on it the world is full of rainbows and we believe thet a treasure lies underneath 'em, and we're everlastin'ly tryin' to attain the impossible feat of gettin' across to the end of the illurin' arch in the skies. Foolish? Yes, it's foolish, but isn't the world the better for it's rainbows?

AUNT SARAH'S MONEY

By M. QUAD

No one ever spoke of her as the Widow Tyler, although she had been that for years and years. She was always referred to as Aunt Sarah. She was called queer and odd and a little off in her head, and nothing particular happened to her till a brother died and left her $1,000 in cash. Even before the money came into her hands everybody was wondering what Aunt Sarah would do with it. The lawyer who arranged matters started in to tell her of a good investment in real estate, but she cut him short with:

"You tend to your business and I will to mine!"

Several weeks after receiving her money the woman walked into the local bank one day and said she'd like to look around. There wasn't much to see outside of the brick vault with its iron door. According to the president, the best ten burglars in the country couldn't get into that vault if left alone all day.

"It looks risky," she replied, "and I don't want to run no chances with my thousand dollars."

The matter was gone over again and again, and, though still unconvinced, she finally decided to deposit her money. Every morning she used to walk down to the bank to inquire if anything had happened during the night, and after this had become monotonous the president finally said:

"Look here, Aunt Sarah, you know I've got money outside of this bank and that I'm a man of my word. I don't like to have you worrying about your money, and I promise to give you five times the amount if the place is robbed."

"I've allus heard of you as an honest man," replied Aunt Sarah, "but if you put that in writin' I shan't worry so much."

It was put in writing and duly witnessed, and for a few weeks the woman felt easier in her mind. One day a stranger came to town with a patent churn. Aunt Sarah happened to be in the house of a neighbor when he called, and half an hour later she went down to the bank to say to the president:

"You just keep your eyes open. I never seen a bank burglar in all my life, but if that feller with the churn ain't one then I don't know black from white!"

She had been told that bank burglars generally began operations about midnight. At midnight that night she left her house and took a walk down to the bank. She fully expected to find the doors standing wide open and a wagon backed up to the curb and was rather disappointed when she made no discovery. After a look around she returned home, but on her way she said to herself:

"I shan't give it up this way. I know that churn man is a bank burglar, and if he ain't burglarizin' tonight it's because he ain't ready. I'll come again tomorrer night."

That was what she did, and although disappointed again she was there on the third night at the same hour. This time she met with better luck. The rear of the bank was on an alley, and as Aunt Sarah quietly appeared she discovered a man crouched under one of the windows. The iron bars which had protected it had been filed and wrenched off, and a barrel had been rolled up to give somebody a lift into the opening.

All of a sudden, without planning it at all, the woman sprang forward with a scream, or a succession of them. The man in the alley uttered a shout of alarm and fled at the top of his speed, and as he went clattering away a man who had been working inside the bank appeared at the window and jumped for the barrel beneath. He landed on it, but it went over and gave him a fling, and when he came down on the cobblestones of the alley his hip was broken and he lay helpless. Aunt Sarah's screams brought a sleepy watchman, and he soon had half the town out of their beds.

When the bank president reached the scene after a run of five blocks the first person to salute him was Aunt Sarah, and she called out:

"Didn't I tell you so! I knowed this bank would be robbed some day. I've got your written agreement, and now you'll hand me out them $5,000!"

The bank president tried to crawl out of his agreement by claiming that the bank hadn't actually been robbed but Aunt Sarah had a lawyer, brought him to time, and he paid her $5,000. A public purse of $1,000 was made up for her, and when she had the snug little fortune in her possession she determined to be her own banker in future. With a watchdog, a bear trap a shotgun and a kettle of hot water always on the stove, Aunt Sarah managed to keep tramps and robbers on the outside for the next five years and then one day she found death in bed. She had died a natural death and there was lively curiosity about her money. The coroner and a couple of constables hunted high and low for a week without finding a dollar. Then others were brought into the search and when all were in despair the money was found. There was a pan of flour sitting on a shelf in the pantry and it was knocked down quite by accident and the $7,000 found underneath the flour. Had a robber searched the house for a month he would never have thought of looking there.

Another Painful Blunder.

A Cleveland man went to a reception the other night, and as the crowd was somewhat large he was delayed in reaching the receiving line.

Being in a hurry to get away, he grew impatient and spoke to a little girl in a flounced frock and short curls and considerable white neck, who was directly in his path:

"Won't the dear little girlie stand aside, please, and let me pass?" he inquired.

The dear little girlie didn't stand aside. On the contrary, she whirled about and gave him a look that froze him to the bones. She was sixty if a day!

And the Cleveland man was so painfully shocked that he dived into the crowd and hustled home.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Passing It Around.

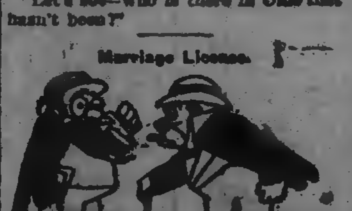
"Who do you think will be the next president?"

"How should I know?"

"Make a guess."

"Let's see—who is there in Ohio that hasn't been?"

Marriage License.



"I am out looking for trouble."

"Trouble!"

"You bet."

"Right over there."

"Some there?"

"County clerk can prepare you to annex it."

Too Partisan.

"I suppose you would vote for a yellow dog on your ticket."

"I certainly would."

"How do you justify yourself?"

"Well, I am not around scratching yellow dogs."

Certainly.

"What's the use in worrying?"

"If somebody didn't worry, what would justify all this don't worry and cheer up stuff that is piling up so high that you can't see the sun over it?"

Old Fashioned Kind.

"What is the price of corkscrews?"

"Five cents straight."

"I want a crooked one."

ARMY POST HAZING

A Very Raw Recruit Who Got a Very Warm Reception.

HIS CLASH WITH "OLD BULL."

After the Quite Informal Introduction to the Colonel Was Effected the Tables Turned and "Corporal Suds" Got a Dose of His Own Medicine.

General E. V. Sumner, who was long colonel in command of the "Fighting Seventh" cavalry, was known to the rank and file of his regiment as "Old Bull." His gruff manners may have had something to do with the nickname, but it came to him fairly by inheritance. His father, General Sumner, bore it before him.

When the Seventh was stationed at Fort Grant, Arizona, a very raw recruit was sent on from Kansas City. As usual, the men persecuted him from the start. He returned meekly from the ordnance stores with the information that "left handed ramrods" were all gone; without batting an eyelash he reported that the sergeant in charge of the post exchange swore at him when he applied for his "butter checks." They took his last two bits away from him in the canteen in some hocus pocus game. After supper he was "blanket tossed" until the arms of the tossers grew weary, and three times that night his bunk collapsed amid roars of merriment. The recruit then gave up the struggle and lay shivering upon the floor until morning.

He neither murmured nor complained. In fact, he seemed to be so unsophisticated that when he asked his room corporal where he could have some washing done the corporal, with a jerk of his thumb, indicated the commanding officer's house on the corner of the parade. "Go over to that big house," the corporal directed. "Take your bundle with you and ask for Old Bull. He takes in all the washin' at this post."

Grasping his little bundle, the green lad from Kansas City shambled across the parade, mounted the colonel's front stoop and innocently pulled the doorbell. The joke was an old one, as Old Bull had never been known to answer the bell in person, and more than one recruit had learned the way to "Soapsuds row" after a tongue lashing from the commandant's dusky maid of all work. And as she had threatened to scald the next man who bothered her about his washing the tip was passed along from troop to troop, and the men swarmed out on the verandas to see the fun.

But just as the recruit pulled the bell who should step out but Old Bull himself, booted and spurred for his morning ride.

"What do you want here?" he thundered, surprised to see an enlisted man at his front door.

"I—I—I wanted to see about gettin' these sh-shirts and socks done up, m-mister," stammered the frightened recruit. "They told me to come over here and ask for Old Bull," he added.

"Well, I'm Old Bull!" roared the colonel. "You come along with me and point out the man that sent you over here," he went on as he grasped the astonished youth and hurried him toward the troop quarters.

The crowds upon the verandas melted away as Colonel Sumner approached, but the guilty corporal was found lurking in the troop barber shop. Some heated language ensued, and then at the end of the painful interview Old Bull delivered himself thus:

"Corporal, I ought to have you court martialed. I could have your stripes taken away and see that you got about thirty days into the bargain or I could have you fined. But you've been one of my best noncoms. You're always sober and a good shot, and so I'm not going to take your chevrons, your liberty or your money away from you. But since you're such an expert on laundry matters I order you to do this man's washing on the front porch of these quarters every Monday morning at guard mount.

"And you," he bellowed, turning to the recruit and shaking his gauntlets at him, "you see that you have at least two suits of underclothes and seven pairs of socks for him every week. And if he don't wash 'em clean you report to Old Bull, that's me!"

And thereafter for several months, until a band of Tonto basin Apaches went on a rampage and gave them more serious things to think about, the men of the Seventh looked forward happily to Monday morning guard mount. The noncommissioned laundryman became known as "Corporal Suds" and was teased about the affair until the day a piece of Spanish shrapnel cut short his existence.—Youth's Companion.

Consistent.

"The people who say that women are inconstant and inconsistent," declares the philosopher of folly, "are dead wrong. A few years ago a girl told me she was just twenty-two and she sticks to the same figures today."—Cleveland Leader.

A Happy Man.

Halifax Much Perturbed.

HALIFAX, July 17. — Steps were taken at the meeting of the Board of Control to bring to the attention of the Nova Scotia Government, the Prime Minister of Canada, the Minister of the Interior and the Minister of Labor the text of a despatch received from Vancouver stating that negotiations were under way by the secretary of the America-India Colonization Co. to charter a steamer to bring five hundred Hindus through the port of Halifax.

"We do not want anything to do with this problem," said Mayor Bligh. "The city is strongly against the entry of any Hindus into Canada through Halifax."

Department Not Worried.

OTTAWA, July 17. — The Department of Labor is not disposed to view very seriously the action of the British Columbia Federation of Labor in suggesting a general strike of all labor in that province because of the Vancouver Island mining trouble.

A copy of the resolution has been received at the Department, and, curiously enough, one of its clauses is a criticism of the order-in-council excluding all classes of labor from the province. A referendum of the unions is to be taken on the strike question, and it is believed here that the proposition will be voted down.

Heat Killed Fireman.

MORRISBURG, Ont., July 17.—As the Hudson Bay terminal lighter No. 1 was approaching Morrisburg yesterday evening en route from Toronto to Hudson Bay, under command of Captain H. O. Jones, one of the firemen suddenly died, being overcome by excessive heat. His name was Thomas Morris, and his age about 30 years. He shipped with the boat on Tuesday, at Toronto, but his home is said to be in Belfast, Ireland. Captain Jones says he knows nothing of the man's antecedents.

Contentment.

The storm outside may play a tune
  Upon the window pane,
May be a blizzard bearing snow
  Or just a winter rain,
But little cares the man inside
  How bitter and how rough
The tempest through the town may tear
  If he has coal enough.

He knows that somewhere in the blast
  Are men who must perform
The work that lets him sit at ease,
  Regardless of the storm.
But still he sits him down to rest
  And elevates his feet
To smoke his pipe or take a nap
  Till it is time to eat.

The gentleman who has enough
  The passing show can view
Without a feeling of distress
  For those whose joys are few.
He may express a wish perhaps
  That they were better clad
And sometimes raise his eyes and say,
  "It really is too bad."

That's how he feels when fortune comes
  In answer to his beck,
When he can make his troubles fly
  By writing out a check,
But when misfortune comes around
  And camps upon his trail
He wants to turn things upside down
  And send the trusts to jail.

They Way They Did at Home.

The kindergarten class had been making grandfathers' clocks out of heavy cardboard. After the hands were painted on and the pendulums swung the teacher gave the class a talk about the evolution of instruments for marking time. Without mentioning the hourglass she asked if any one in the room knew how people found out what time it was before clocks were invented. One little girl raised her hand.

"Well, Margaret," said the teacher.

"They called up central."

Even if a man does lift his lid when he meets a woman he may not be her inferior.

LETTING HIM DOWN EASY.

It Doesn't Cost Anything to Be Polite In Declining to Do a Favor.

THERE is an old question, "Is it ever right to break a commandment that good may result?" The variation is, "Is it ever right to break one commandment in order to keep another one?" In other words, are some commandments of less account than others?

Good people will tell lies to save a murder. Fine men have committed homicide to avoid the breaking of one or two other commandments. Saints have committed suicide rather than steal. Here is a modern instance of more doubtful efficacy:

Last Sunday a clergyman's housemaid came into the house and said:

"Your next door neighbor has sent over to see if we have a lawn mower we'll lend him."

"What!" cried the minister. "Does he propose to cut his grass on a Sunday? Well, he shan't have our lawn mower to do it with. Tell him so! Stop, though! He's a parishioner of mine, and I shouldn't like to offend him. Just tell him that we have no lawn mower."—Exchange.

NEWLY WEDS USE AUTOS

Helps Them Escape Usual Showers of Confetti

"A bride of to-day does not consider she has been officially married unless she is whisked off to the station in an auto," said a well known auto livery man to-day. He also stated that the pre-marriage oath was delivered by the bride, who instructed her intended to obey to the letter the order regarding the auto for the purpose of conveying her to the church and from it. Where the cab and Dobbin used to have the proud distinction of starting the newlyweds on their first journey of life, the gasoline wagon with its chuck, speed, and sometimes obnoxious odor, does the trick.

During the past six months many of the married couples have used the auto or the taxi. One feature of the machine is that a newly wedded pair who wish to avoid a shower of rice, confetti, etc., at the station can possibly kept the time of their departure and that station from which they will depart a secret, by a little speedy manouvering on the part of the gasoline waggon.

The auto in this city has not invaded the funeral processions as yet, but a few nights ago a car from the Pulkinghorn garage conveyed a coffin to an outlying district. The casket was empty though.

Another thing about the local auto livery service is that the owners have not as yet got together or combined, as it were, to arrange a rate list. However, they all charge about the same, and the tariff is reasonable considering the charges in other places. It is $2 per hour, which is not much either for joyous or pleasure purposes. In most Ontario cities it is $3 for the first two hours and $2 for each hour afterwards. Other cities ask $4 for the first few hours. The taxi cab rates are the same as the fee charged by the ordinary cab.

There are six auto livery and garage establishments in the city and all report success, which goes to show that it is action the public demand. Indications are that before the end of the year the auto will have increased in popularity and use.

BURGLARS AT CAMPBELLFORD

Took Safe but Found no Money

Campbellford, Ont., July 17. — Housebreaking of late has been quite common here, but last night burglars, evidently amateurs, stole an iron safe from Mr. John Harris' feed store, carried it up the railway on a handcar, and broke it open. Finding no money the marauders burned Mr. Harris' books, entailing a loss of $2,000. They also took the safe out of the G.T.R. station, but were evidently frightened away, and left it on the platform.

ARMY WORM IN BRANT

Invasion of Pest Threatens Serious Damage

BRANTFORD, July 17. — Brant County is being swept with an invasion of the army worm in millions, and unless the farmers can keep them in check by fire, trenches and poison, it is feared that a great amount of the crops will be entirely ruined. Falkland, Burgessville, Burford, Hatchley, Northfield Centre, Fairfield Plains and Paris all report that the pest has been keeping the farmers at work almost continuously for two days.

Yesterday morning the pest made its first appearance in Brantford Township in numbers.

Reports from Burford state that worms are hatching out all along the banks of Whitman's Creek, as the low lands have been flooded and hatching conditions are favorable, while the same wet has exterminated the natural enemies of the worm.

The farmers are digging trenches between the worms and the fields and digging postholes in the trenches.

FUND IS INTACT

Flemming Denies he Profited by Campaign Money

ST. JOHN, N.B., July 17—Premier Flemming was the principal witness at the Dugal inquiry yesterday and vigorously denied extorting money from the lumbermen, directing that extortion, or receiving any of the money. He said he had selected E. R. Teed to take charge of the fund, which he described as a campaign fund. The Premier said, he told W. H. Berry that he, Berry, must not receive the money, and that he told Berry he himself could not receive it; but, said Mr. Flemming, if the lumbermen are going to pay it, E. R. Teed is the man to handle it. He therefore assigned Teed to the job. Subsequently, he said, Teed, when very ill, sent him the keys to the safety deposit box containing the funds, but Mr. Flemming never used the keys, never went near the money, nor got any of it, except a loan of $15,000 which was repaid and $9,000 for a block of Gould stocks which be transferred to the fund.

Mr. Flemming explained that he did not know Berry was taking part in the levying of the graft, much less that he was using threats in doing so. The Premier said that if he had known compulsion or threats were being employed he would have put a stop to it.

E. R. Teed was the first witness at the morning session, and his evidence was largely an amplification of that given on Wednesday. He submitted a statement showing that he still holds the entire amount, except for the $200 paid to Mr. Brankley, and $1,000 he took himself for expenses.

PROVISIONAL PRESIDENT WILL RESIGN IN FAVOR OF CARRANZA

Informal Message to Washington From Huerta's Successor Says That He has no Personal Ambitions But is Merely Bridging the Gap.

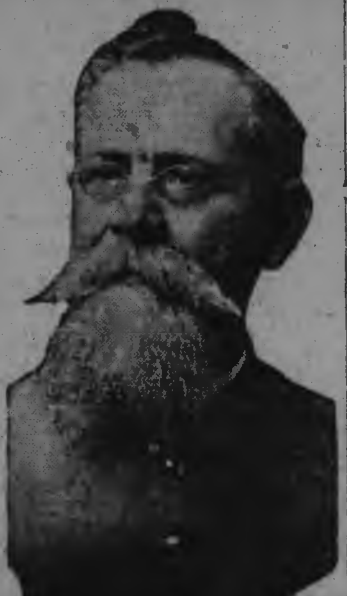
WASHINGTON, July 17. — Francisco Carbajal, successor to Gen. Huerta, as Provisional President of Mexico, yesterday advised the United States Government informally that he intends to retire in favor of Gen. Carranza. Senor Carbajal wishes only that a general amnesty be proclaimed and protection given to the property of those who opposed the Constitutionalists

This statement of the attitude of Huerta's successor, together with the announcement from Monterey that Carranza was willing to enter into negotiations with Carbajal relative to transfer of authority at Mexico City was regarded here last night as practically assuring a cessation of hostilities and the restoration of peace in Mexico

The views of Senor Carbajal were explained in detail to Secretary Bryan yesterday by Jose Castellot, former member of the Mexican Senate, who called at the State Department with a personal telegram which he had received through the Mexican embassy.

The communication was dated Wednesday night and follows:

"I have just taken oath of office as President of the republic. Generals Huerta and Blanquet departed to-night for Europe. I desire to make it known with emphasis that my only purpose is to facilitate a solution of the grave problems which weigh upon our country. I have not the slightest ambition for myself and merely wish to terminate the internal conflict of our country. Please give me your impression of the situation in Washington. (Signed) Francisco Carbajal."



GEN. VENUSTIANO CARRANZA.

This message, Senor Castellot explained, meant that Senor Carbajal had taken office only as a means of bridging the gap from Huerta to the Constitutionalists, that the new President had no desire to remain in office.

Secretary Bryan thanked Senor Castellot for the information, and told him that while recognition would not be accorded Carbajal, the United States was amicably disposed toward him, and would applaud his patriotic efforts to bring about peace in his country.

Senor Castellot telegraphed the result of his conference to Senor Carbajal.

Secretary Bryan himself was highly optimistic in the belief that peace at last was in sight in turbulent Mexico, and he told his friends that he believed the policy of "watchful waiting" and patience had been a success. In order to assure a transfer of authority without further bloodshed, however, the American Government began yesterday to use its good offices with Gen. Carranza.

Making Them Sign For Winter.

KINGSTON, July 17.—Geo. Hunter, J.P., who acts as immigration agent, does not intend to have any of the men he has placed in positions from the old land, living on charity. Mr. Hunter is having all recent arrivals sign documents with their employers for the winter.

Her 250 passengers were transferred to another Allan liner

WAR HAS CHANGED

Destruction of Inaccessible Fort is Easy

PARIS, July 17.—How two military aeroplanes destroyed with bombs the inaccessible mountain stronghold of the Rita tribesmen in the Tazo region of Morocco is described in despatches which have just been received here. The attacking parties carried four bombs each. They speedily discovered the hiding place and dropped the bombs with such precision that the camp was destroyed, many tribesmen being killed. The aviators then made maps showing the position of the fastness, which enabled Gen. Gouraud to round up the natives who had escaped death by the bombs.

Falls From Roof.

TORONTO, July 17. — While engaged in shingling a house at 275 Waverley road, Robert Clark, of 14 Dixon avenue, lost his balance and met instant death by falling 30 feet to the ground. He was 50 years of age, and leaves a wife and one child. It is thought that he had been affected by the extreme heat, or had lost his balance while in a precarious position on the roof the house. A broken neck was the cause of death. The body was taken to the morgue, preparatory to an inquest being held.

Lake Captain Dies on Vessel.

COLLINGWOOD, Ont., July 17.—Captain W. G. Cox, 45, master of the Northern Navigation Co.'s Majestic, died on board his steamer while passing Killarney to Parry Sound. NOT ACCEPTABLE

Redmond Scoffs at Lords' Effort for Peace

LONDON, July 17.—Dealing with the amendments to the amending bill by the House of Lords in Reynolds' Newspaper this week, T. P. O'Connor says that there remains only one course for the Government to follow. The amending bill is to be put back to its original shape so far as the area of Ulster is concerned. Each county is to have its full right by its majority either to exclude itself or to the Irish Parliament are to be restored those inalienable rights of every self-governing country of the appointment of its judiciary and the control of its policy.

"But I would close no doors if the Orange leaders will substitute for these impossible demands other claims which are reasonable and fair to both sides," he says: "Then they will be considered, for there is as passionate and honest desire among Irish Nationalists to settle this question peacefully as there is in any body of politicians to-day."

William Redmond stated at Tottenham last night that the demand for the total exclusion of Ulster had never been seriously made. The demand for Ulster's total exclusion was made because the Lords knew that it could not be accepted and because they were out, not for peace, but for war. The original Home Hule bill, which will become law in a few weeks, provides ample safeguarding for the people of every part of Ireland.

C. N. R. RESPONSIBLE.

Company Will Bear Burden of Temporary Loans.

OTTAWA, July 17. — In a statement issued by the Minister of Finance yesterday, the Canadian Northern trust deed executed Wednesday is briefly explained. By the mortgage the company is empowered to float bonds, guaranteed by the Government to the extent of forty-five million dollars. In return for this the Government receives thirty-three millions of the common stock of the company, which is deposited in the treasury in trust for the people, and which, added to the seven millions given last year, makes forty millions of common stock.

The statement declares that Mackenzie & Mann shall be responsible for the temporary loans of the company, amounting to some twenty millions. It is also provided that the company shall not increase its capital stock without the consent of the governor-in-council. In addition the time and price at which the bonds shall be offered are to be approved by the Minister of Finance.

LIKE MANNA FROM HEAVEN QUOTH THE MAGISTRATE

When Blacklister Tells How He Got Liquor

$10 FINE IMPOSED

A rather unusual blacklister's case was fought in Police Court this morning before Magistrate Dumble when Chas. Healey charged with being drunk while on the blacklist was fined $10. C. R. Widdifield defended.

After a few preliminaries in which the defendant said he had not received his notice of being on the list Magistrate Dumble cut further excuses short by ordering the accused into the box.

"I am not going to be humbugged by such rotten evidence as this," remarked Magistrate Dumble indignantly.

Healey told practically the same story as last week when he claimed he found the three bottles of whiskey in a yard.

"Almost like manna from heaven," remarked the Magistrate.

Questioned by the Chief, he failed to remember if he had been served a notice by License Inspector Stewart. He also failed to remember having been refused liquor at any of the hotels. In fact he emphatically denied any knowledge of being on the list.

He admitted being arrested on the 4th of July and being fined $2.

"Didn't you tell Detective Newhall that you had put one over on them and stated to him that you were on the list?" asked the Chief.

"Do you remember Newhall telling you that you were on the list and you asked him to say nothing about it?"

"No, sir."

"Well, we have positive evidence while you have only negative," said Magistrate Dumble in imposing the fine.

passed, there is ample opportunity. Any land within seasonable or unreasonable distance of the oil field is offered for lease. A plot is secured, possibly half an acre. The ground is not purchased. If oil develops, the owner will not want to sell. If the venture prove worthless the speculator does not want the land. So a lease suffices. On paper a company is at once organized, possibly registered and the development stock in shares of from 25c to $25.00 offered, ostensibly to riase funds for exploration and a test.

Nothing like the excitement has been seen or heard. The palmy days of the land boom were quiet in comparison. Now business cannot be consummated outside on the pavement. The details may be arranged. But there must be some place to take in and store the money. For, observe, when you buy oil stock, you do not settle with a check. Cash is the rule and not the exception. During the height of the excitement, one place and one company did a business that made the whole city envious. Crowds thronged the store front and overflowed out on the pavement. The eager buyers fairly threw their money at the clerks, who took the bills thrusting them into a waste paper basket and tramping it down so that it could hold more. No time to even count the receipts until long into the night.

The farther away from the field the bigger the inducements offered to buyers. Shares named as at $1.00 are reduced (sale price) to 60 cents. All are buying. Business men, clerks, stenographers, all are in the swim. The subject is the stock, on, over and behind the counter. It is an even gamble for the man who can spare a hundred, but a distinct jeopardy for the workman who plunges to that amount of his savings.

High Rentals.

Some idea may be had of the state of affairs when relation be made of things. A man who had rented a single store was to open out with a stock of boots and shoes. The stock was on hand, but the fittings had not been delivered. The rental charge was $25.00 per day, $150.00 a week, a fair rent for a store in the business district and on an important street. Finding the store empty a brand new oil company manager suggested a lease for three days, and asked what the price would be. The store man said he could have it for $50.00 per day. The oil man let an S.O.S. yell, and the store man remarked that if he felt that way about it, he'd charge him $75.00 per day, and did so, and a bargain was made. Monday he renewed the lease at $100 per day for a week. The next week he was held up for $1,000 per week, and is now paying a rental of $7,000 per month for the premises. It may be respectfully asked "how is that for high?" The store man has cancelled his orders for stock, stored the fixtures and is enjoying a much better income than he could hope to gain in the way of trade.

And further. A furniture company were making alterations in their double store, putting up some sort of a gallery. An oil stock man, noticing the general disorder, proposed to add to the gaiety by renting a part of the store, the stock having been removed. He secured equivalent to the space in Clarke's Jewellery Store at Peterboro, for $2,000 per month and a bonus of $3,000 to hurry matters up. And yet we wonder at the increase of crime.

Adjoining a popular hotel, frequented by cattle men, there was a small piece of the frontage not occupied. A shack was run up, 8 x 12 feet, and eagerly snapped up at $250 per month. Another lean-to in a better locality is rented at $25 per day and will be raised August 1st to $40. The porters in an uptown hotel pooled their funds and landed $6700 inside of three days. No one expects to keep the stock bought, but to pass it on to some one else at an advance.

It is hard to say what the prospects really amount to. An expert called in from the Smithsonian Institute, Philadelphia, to pass on the indications, says the field is directly in the line of oil and that it will be found in good quality presently. Others are expressing a favorable view of an ample yield, but are farily cautious. Many newspapers are refusing to insert oil stock advertisements, and already several cases have got into the courts, brought by those who say that they were induced to subscribe on false claims.—F.H.D.

OBITUARY

DR. GEO. GLADMAN.

A promising career has been cut short in the death of Dr. George J. Gladman, eldest son of the late Henry Gladman of Lindsay, who expired suddenly at his residence, 143 West 71st street, New York City, at the early age of fifty.

After attending Lindsay High School, Dr. Gladman entered McGill University, Montreal, graduating in medicine in the famous class of '86. He started his professional career in New York State, but for the last ten years had built up an extensive practice in the city of New York as an electro-therapeutist and specialist in disorders of nutrition.

The late doctor was a keen humanitarian. He was engaged on the institution of a number of health hotels, where patients could receive treatment for obesity and allied disorders, and had already established one of these in Connecticut, where his useful career was cut short.

The deceased leaves a mother and three brothers in Toronto, besides his wife and two other brothers in New York.

The remains will be interred in the Forest Lawn Mausoleum in Toronto today.

Dr. Gladman was very well known in Lindsay, having spent nearly all his younger days here. He was a graduate of the Lindsay Collegiate Institute and was prominent in many other circles throughout the town.—Lindsay Warder.

came through with several good jumps, winning the running hop, step and jump and finishing third in the standing broad and running jumps, also the standing three jumps from over twenty participants.

The events for the ladies afforded much amusement, while the fair sex demonstrated beyond a doubt that despite tight skirts and other various impediments they could do some tall sprinting. Miss Jean Cunningham was easily the best lady sprinter on the grounds and demonstrated that fact by winning three firsts. The married ladies also exihibited considerable "pep."

Best looking young lady on the grounds—Miss Madalene Hickey.

Three evidently competent gentlemen charmed the spectators in their efforts to pick out the best babies on the grounds under one year of age. These gentlemen, Messrs. John C. Kells of Milbrook, Jos. Kerr of Kingston, and a most efficient looking lawyer in the person of Mr. Tom Allen of Millbrook, after viewing the white hopes of scores of mothers, decided that the babies belonging to Mrs. Hickey and Mrs. Martin were above average and awarded their verdict accordingly. The event was the star feature and mothers with their babies could be seen gathering from all quarters while others even borrowed babies. Babies were the reigning power and the judges after much shaking of heads and silent consultation declared all babies good.

The matter of picking the prettiest girl in the gathering was also left to these honored ones, with the result that Miss Madalene Hickey was chosen.

In the water sports Dunford easily demonstrated his ability by winning several events, showing prowess as a paddler. The motor boat race resulted in A. W. Patterson winning the first race and E. M. Turner the second. Led by Max Schlueter of Cressmans', his crew was successful in carrying off the smokes against all comers. Apparently without the assistance of the above named gentleman a picnic would be pretty tame.

Other winners in the water sports were:

Boys' swimming race—Stan. Robertson and Harold Gollop.

Boys' swimming race, sr.—Lawrence and Thorndyke.

Duck race—Devins.

LAWYER SAYS TIMES ARE HARD; HE HAS EVIDENCE

The butcher, the baker, the candle stick maker, the grocer, the tailor, and almost everyone else feel the slow pulse of hard times, but the lawyer feels it in a different manner. All but the lawyer regret the depression, and possibly the dispenser of legal dope regrets it too, because lawyers have hearts the same as everyone else and many of them have tender hearts. Hard times, however, make business for the lawyer. A well known Peterboro lawyer speaking with a Review reporter this afternoon, said, "By gosh, but times must be hard."

"You bet they are," said the scribe.

The lawyer turned over numerous papers on his desk and said that he thought conditions were worse today than they were a couple of months ago. "Do you know, I have had more people come to me and ask me to write letters demanding payment on loans, and asking for evictions than I ever had before," he added.

"It's tough, too," he continued, "because most of the people are honest cusses and would pay dollar for dollar if they had the cash, but I guess they are very short. Anyway when a man comes into my office and asks me to represent him, I have got to do it, because that is business. But times are hard, no doubt about that."

Might Have Been Killed.

discussion. The real issue is, why does President Fitzgerald provide the double umpire system in every other city and overlook Peterboro altogether? Kindly take notice J. P.

The Hamilton Spectator and London Advertiser are predicting numerous changes in the circuit 'ere the flag falls in 1915. London, Detroit, Toledo, Erie, Hamilton, Toronto, Ottawa and Montreal is the latest idea. Well may the moguls worry. Every club in the league except London, Ottawa and Hamilton are losing money at the present and the Hamilton club will lose all it has made if the teams fails to buck up. The other teams are so far behind financially at the present, according to a Canadian League president, that great gates could not produce a balance. Who is to blame? The moguls themselves. They knew this year was a bad one financially when they took the jump into "B" class ball. The boost was heralded by even such a small town as Brantford whose sporting writers scored the Review for venturing to remark that it would be better to go easy. The Review also expressed its doubts as to the possibility of Toronto and Erie being paying propositions. We venture to say now that Erie and Toronto have proven the rankest failures. A little more caution, less ambition and a good look before you jump would have at least cut down the deficits, as the jump to Erie and the "rotten" patronage at Toronto have cut big holes in the moguls' bank rolls. Ambition is alright, but the Canadian League was too ambitious under the circumstances, much to the sorrow of those who invested their cash.

Experts who were at the ringside during the Smith-Carpentier battle yesterday which was won by the Frenchman in the sixth on a foul, join in saying that the blow was unintentional. Carpentier missed a swing and lost his balance, going to his knees. Countering Carpentier's swing, Smith's right shot out and before he could control or draw it back it had landed on the Frenchman's neck. Smith was hooted and jeered which leads us to believe that the English sport of which so much has been said and written about is just an ordinary human being after all and will direct his cheers or jeers towards the point which pleases his own mind best. Yesterday his cheers went for Carpentier because the Frenchman is an idol in London, and his jeers were directed against Smith who is an American. If experts are correct in saying the blow was an unfortunate one Smith did not deserve the jeers and hisses. One expected better control of feelings, especially from the English sport.

Consistent Performer.

"You say you are a prohibitionist?"

"Yes."

"And yet you always vote the Republican ticket."

"That's true. When I was a boy I used to get into the circus by carrying water to the elephants and I have never gotten over the habit."

JIMMY DIRECT IN SECOND PLACE

Jimmy Direct, Frank Montgomery's speedy stallion, was second to Gifford Boy in the 2.15 pace at Orillia yesterday. Jimmy Direct captured two heats, was third once and second twice. Gifford Boy won three heats and ran fifth and third. The last heat was run in 2.28, a very slow performance for 2.15 eligibles and indicates that the local entry was either not ready for the post or broke badly in the race. Undertaker was fourth. The fastest heat of the race was run by Jimmy Direct, the mile being negotiated in 2.18.

ONE HAPPY MOMENT.

A SORRY lot I must confess,
That even now is comfortless,
Ere love has lost its newness,
For, though she's dear as life to me,
My love and I cannot agree.
I cannot live—oh, dire distress!—
In unison with Eunice.

For her I'd seek the wide world's end;
On weary pilgrimage I'd wend
From Ecuador to Tunis.
I'd gather all the gold of Nome
To bring her for a hecatomb
If so my days I might but spend
In unison with Eunice.

I treasure each assenting word
That from her lips I've ever heard
Because of very fewness.
I say a thing; she laughs to scorn
My thought and leaves me quite forlorn
I cannot be—it seems absurd—
In unison with Eunice.

There's just one moment I'd not miss—
A moment of such double bliss
As quite dispels my blueness,
For when I rise to get my hat
And start to leave her mother's flat
I osculate a good night kiss—
In unison with Eunice!

Blindness.

She—How much do you love me?

He—Every way.

She—Tell me all about it.

He—But I have.

She—Tell me all over again.

He—Oh, my darling—

She—Tell me all the ways you know. Besides, you may have missed something. And I like to hear it all over again.

He—I love you!

She—But how?

He—Why, for the moment I can't quite think—but—I love you.

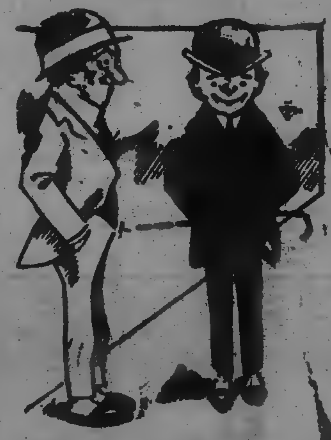
She—But can't you tell me how you feel?

He—Oh, I feel, I feel—why, I love you. What more can I say?

She—Oh, dear, it seems so dreadfully unsatisfactory!

He—Never mind. If I could tell you about it in just the way you want me to it wouldn't be love.—Life.

Grim Reality.



"And so you are married?"

"I told you I was going to be."

"But I thought it was a joke."

"It isn't."—Cincinnati Commercial-Tribune.

Smoke Nuisance.

The family doctor was paying a semi-social, semi-official visit. As he took a leisurely departure he paused to discuss with Margaret's mother the general health conditions of the city.

"We're not so badly off—comparatively, that is," he said. "For one thing, there are only two uncontrolled, unmitigated smoke nuisances in town."

From the sofa in the corner Margaret spoke:

"Yes, doctor, I know," said she—"papa and Uncle Jim."—Delineator.

Nellie's Wisdom.

"Mamma, I's got a stomach ache," said Nellie, aged six.

"That's because you've been without lunch. Your stomach is empty. You would feel better if you had something in it."

That afternoon the minister called and in the course of conversation remarked that he had been suffering all day with a severe headache.

"That's because it's empty," said Nellie. "You'd feel better if you had something in it."—Chicago News.

Staging a Trial.

"It would help some if you had a pretty wife."

"Alas, I am a bachelor," said the malefactor of great wealth.

"I have an idea. You plead illness and I'll have you go on the stand with an attractive trained nurse in attendance."—Kansas City Journal.

BIGGEST FLOATING DOCK ON PACIFIC READY THIS YEAR

It is expected that the Grand Trunk Pacific authorities will have the big dry dock at Prince Rupert in operation before the end of the present year. The completion of this great work will mean much to Northern British Columbia and especially to Prince Rupert. That rapidly growing city will have a new industry this coming winter. Many of the big coast steamers that have hitherto been compelled to make their headquarters elsewhere will be overhauled in its harbor. It will be able to boast of the largest floating dock on the Pacific with an equipment including every up-to-date device for handling ships up to 20,000 tons. There are four large buildings to house the various sections of the ship building and repairing plant and practically all the machinery to equip the shops has been made in Canada.

The yard will have a 45 ton locomotive crane. Other machinery includes an 80 foot lathe, capable of turning a steel shaft 50 feet in length; a plate bending machine with a capacity of bending a sheet of steel twenty feet by three-quarters of an inch thick; a big steam hammer and four air compressors. The machine shop, boiler shop and blacksmith shop will have the most complete set of modern tools on the coast.

Adjoining the dock along the face of the harbor are the big new wharves and the railroad has large freight yards here.

For a city that dates back only to 1906, when the Grand Trunk Pacific's staff of engineers made a landing and clearing for the location of their camp preparatory to making the preliminary survey, this is a record of progress that it would be hard to equal.

Senoras Huerta and Blanquet and Other Refugees at Puerto Mexico.

PUERTO MEXICO, July 17.—Senora Huerta and her two sons, Jorge and Victor, and their wives and her two unmarried daughters and Senora Blanquet, wife of the former War Minister, and other distinguished refugees, arrived here by special train from the Mexican capital yesterday morning. The women of the party boarded the British cruiser Bristol shortly before noon, and should there be the least indication of a disturbance — something which now appears remote—the men of the party will be quartered either on the Bristol or the German cruiser Dresden.

The railway yards were filled with soldiery, the pick of the army selected by Gen. Huerta months ago, when the train arrived. Preceding the special was a military train with troops, and a second military train guarded the special from the rear. Gen Camarena is in command of the forces, which number 400, and include a detachment of the crack 29th regiment.

BOYCOTT ON BELFAST.

Manifesto From Carrick-on-Shannon Makes Announcement.

LONDON, July 17. — A manifesto signed by two magistrates, county councillors, and the principal Nationalist traders of Carrick-on-Shannon, has been issued, in which it is stated that the merchants and traders of this important commercial centre have unanimously decided to sever all connections with Belfast merchants if Ulster persists in her attitude of opposition to the Home Rule Bill.

The decision has caused much discussion among trading circles in the west, as a big trade is transacted with Belfast, both in banking and commercially.

Carrick-on-Shannon is the capital of Leitrim, in which country every parish has its company of volunteers.

This ultimatum to Ulster is being taken up in nearly every town in Leitrim and Roscommon, and commercial travelers from the north are already finding it difficult at present to secure orders.

Cat Left Empress.

LONDON, July 17—After a lecture at the Occult Club Wednesday night on "Psychic Experience," a woman speaker referred to a reported strange behavior of the ship's cat of the liner Empress of Ireland.

When the vessel was about to leave Quebec for the last time, she said the cat came hurrying down the gangway, bearing two of her kittens in her mouth. Efforts were made to get her to return, but nothing would persuade her to go back.

In shooting off the tie Mr. Armour took the cigars. The next league shoot will probably be held in Stirling, next month. Following are the scores:

ALL RUNS MADE IN FIRST FRAME

Catcher Kelly Overlooked the Situation and Made Trouble for the Homesters in One of the Best Games of the Season---Score 2-1

A momentary failure to realize the situation on the part of Kelly, the local catcher, cost the Petes the first game of the Brantford series yesterday, and Rube Deneau's shifted Red Sox meandered off with one of the best games played on the local lot this season, by a score of 2-1. The Brants shoved two across in the first, when Kelly, thinking there were three on, slapped his toe on the home plate when he should have touched Long, who was rushing towards the pan when Belting fielded Ivers' grounder and heaved it to "Kell." The play should have made it two out, and Nelson went to third on it. A second later, on what should have been the third out, but which turned into a sacrifice fly, Nelson scored when Blount caught Roth's long fly to deep centre. It was regrettable in one sense, and in another bad baseball, as the two runs decided the game. The Petes got their lone tally in the first. The game was a pitcher's battle from the start and some good baseball was provided the half-holiday fans.

Enter Mr. McPartlin.

As an added attraction, McPartlin made his debut as an umpire. His decisions were hooted by the crowd, but every home team :s impartial. At any rate, the umps robbed Welsh of two hits by poor decisions at first base, as the writer was in a position to see the plays. One thing is certain, McPartlin is not a "homer," but there is a chance he is a "boner." At least the fans thought so. His work was a good argument in favor of the double umpiring system.

To get back to the excitement again, Chase hurled one of the neatest games shown on the local lot this year. He had smoke, a nice break, and good control, and was good in the pinches. He passed one man and fanned six, including Miller, who walloped for Rooney in the ninth with Blount on third.

Knute Belting was just as good as the big portsider from Brantford when it came to a pinch, although Knute was not as steady. He had good wares, however, and delivered his choicest assortment at the right time. Only a break in the first innings beat the eminent Swedish heaver. Six hits were gathered from his offerings, he passed one, and fanned five. Chase yielded five hits, but he heaved one wild, which allowed Blount to tango home in the first frame.

The work of Curly Blount was an outstanding feature of the battle. He doubled in the first, and lost no time getting around the sacks, while in the ninth he singled and went to second on a bunt by Welsh, and went to third when Wilson caught Dolan's fly close in. It was as neat a piece of work as has been pulled this year, and showed that the little fellow is the best man in the league on the paths.

Long, released by London, picked up by Doc. Yates of Hamilton, released by the eminent tooth carpenter without a chance poled out two hits for the Red Sox, as did Fried, the diminutive short fielder whom Rube Deneau secured from Ottawa. Apparently Rube's newcomers helped a lot. The team looked somewhat better than before, but it had good pitching in front of it, and you never can judge a ball club until you see it behind average pitching.

The fielding of both teams was snappy and accurate at all times, and after the first innings, when both teams threatened, sharp fielding and good pitching choked off the efforts. A great stab by Dolan off Lamond's bat in the ninth was one of the features of the battle, which, as said before, was won and lost in the first. After that the fans had no occasion to become uneasy or shout, and in the latter instance the chance came in the ninth, with two out and Blount on third, but Mully Miller, smoting for Rooney, fanned, and the supper bell rang.

COMMENT

As You Like It

A Hamilton sport writer suggests that the Burns Detective Agency be employed to find out "why is the Hamilton ball club." While the sleuths are on the job we might suggest that they find out why is Umpire McPartlin.

Unless the London Blokes take an awful slump the flag is theirs. London got away well at the beginning of the season and it was thought they would be pulled back. They were in the greatest shape of any team in the league for the fall of the flag and much credit is due to Dr. Reisling for keeping the gang at it. It must be admitted that the dental surgeon is one of the quietest and wisest managers in the league as he has got the very best out of his team when they did look as though they would crack. Reisling is a silent fighter and a striking contrast to "Shag."

And by the same token some bouquets are due to Curly Blount. Curly had a hard task ahead of him and went to it until today the Peterboro club is just as good as any team in the league, barring London, and we cannot vouch on that point until London and Peterboro clash again, as it is two months since we last seen them in action. Some schedule.

The work of Umpire McPartlin, a former International League player, when that organization was known as the Eastern League, at yesterday's ball game was questioned by the crowd. On two occasions, when he robbed Welsh of infield hits, he was very bad as the writer was in a position to see. Any umpire will make mistakes. The mistakes of McPartlin are not the real issue of

CARPENTIER WON ON FOUL

Gunboat Smith Lost Through Unintentional Blow

London, July 17.—Georges Carpentier, the young French champion and the only pugilist of premier rank France has ever contributed to the game, was awarded the decision last night over Gunboat Smith, the American fighter, on a foul in the sixth round of the fastest heavyweight fight Londoners have seen in many years.

The match between the two heavyweights was fought at Oylmpia and was scheduled to go twenty rounds. To Smith and his supporters the finish was a tragedy, because the blow for which the American was disqualified was neither studied nor intentional. It was launched in the heat of the whirlwind fighting, when the Frenchman had slipped to his knees, and the spectators saw the gaunt sailor recoil and attempt to draw back almost as his arms flew out.

Nevertheless, the ending of tonight's fight adds another to the unfortunate chapters of international sport, because it has kindled bad feeling and is likely to be followed by long drawn out arguments.

Great Confusion Reigned.

When the French contingent carried Carpentier to his corner in the sixth round the utmost confusion reigned. The ring was crowded with excited officials and seconds, and thousands of spectators were on their feet shouting and groaning. In this round Carpentier, after playing for an opening, while keenly watching the American's right, had feinted cleverly with his left and then brought a powerful right across Smith's jaw.

The punch did not land squarely, but glanced off, and carried by the force of his blow, Carpentier swung round and slipped to his knees.

Quickly Smith's right shot forth. He drew back, and plainly would have withheld the blow on second thought. Then he stepped back and waited for the Frenchman to rise.

A REMARKABLE MOVIE TRIUMPH

Atlantis, a Wonderful Photo-play at the Princess Next Week

Montreal Daily Mail, Saturday, March 21, 1914.

"Atlantis" the photo-play adopted from Gerhart Thauptman's novel, to be shown at the Princess next week holds the witness spell-bound as the story unfolds on the screen in a succession of unique dramatic situations.

Wonderful Movie Triumph.

The story begins in Berlin, Germany, and takes its audience to New York via Southampton, England, and back from New York to Berlin, a realistic shipwreck occurring on the first half of the journey. Dr. Kammacher, the individual around whom the story is written—he hardly poses as a hero—is advised to go on a holiday owing to his nerves being badly overwrought by the care of his wife who, at the beginning of the story, develops insanity. He meets a dancer, Ingigerd, first in Berlin at an Artists club, and afterwards on board the steamship "Roland," bound for New York.

The scenes in Berlin are all the chief objects to the tourist—the Cathedral, Tier Garden and Unter den Linden all being traversed by the doctor before he leaves on his holiday. At Southampton the passengers are seen embarking for the voyage on a tug. The scene "Towards a new world" is most realistic representing the bow of the boat cutting through the water.

A Realistic Shipwreck.

The big scene of the whole play takes place when a derelict is sighted by the officers on the bridge, too late to avoid a collision, owing to a fog. The action during the shipwreck scene that follows is a wonderful piece of Cinematographic work—passengers struggling among themselves to get to the boats, the awful possibilities in the stoke holes and the sinking of the vessel need to be seen to be appreciated.

MRS. CARMAN IS INDICTED BY THE JURY

Freeport, L.I., July 17. — Mrs. Florence Carman was indicted for manslaughter in the first degree yesterday afternoon by the Nassau grand jury sitting at Mineola. The jury reached a decision after two hours' deliberation.

Mrs. Carman will be arraigned tomorrow, and will plead not guilty. Her trial will be fixed for the September sitting of the Supreme Court of Mineola. Her cousin will straight away ask for her liberty under bail, and unless present indications miscarry the request will be granted and bail will be fixed at something not exceeding $15,000.

Manslaughter in the first degree is punishable by imprisonment for a term not exceeding 20 years.

It will be possible, however, for the jury that tries her to bring in a verdict of manslaughter in the second degree. Such a crime is punishable by imprisonment for a term not exceeding 15 years or a fine not exceeding $1,000.

Cop Made Arrest When Silence Might Have Been Golden

Russia may be colder than Peterboro climatically, but judging by a local police officer's actions last evening it has nothing on this burg so far as police surveilance and work is concerned. A well known resident of a neighboring town, we do not mention name or address for respectability's sake ,was proceeding east on Simcoe Street in charge of a friend. The out of town resident was intoxicated. Of that there is no doubt as he had a breath stronger than a motorman's glove and a step as wobbly as the popular gelatine pudding or the Farmer's Bank. His friend was steering him to a place of rest for the evening. He was steering him towards a local hotel. From the shadows stole one of the stalwart blue coats who plod the streets of this fair city. The out of town resident, who by the way was a professional man, was taken to the cells regardless of the protestations of his friend. If a police officer is so narrow minded as to make an arrest under those circumstances, it is little wonder that the police in general are unpopular.

TO OPEN NEW HOTEL ON GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC

Two vice-presidents of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, Mr. Morley Donaldson and Mr. J. E. Dalrymple, have just attended the opening of Canada's largest and most modern summer hotel. This is the Minaki Inn, situated on the Winnipeg River one hundred and fifteen miles east of Winnipeg; three hundred and thirty-four miles west of Fort William, on the main line of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. The railway officers were accompanied by many prominent bankers and business men of the city of Winnipeg. Previous to the building of the Grand Trunk Pacific, the site where the big hotel now stands was a favorite camping ground of the Indian tribes, who called the surrounding country in the Ojibway language "Mee-naw-kee" meaning "Beautiful Country." The big wigwam of these wise Indians has been superseded by a hotel that accommodates 350 guests in surroundings of elegance and comfort. The Indian took a bath when he fell into the river, but the present day Minaki guest has a bath attached to his room; in place of the camp fire, there is a fairy land of electric lights; the bark canoe pulled up on the sandy beach has given place to a modern steel constructed two-storey boat house, filled with craft of stout timbers and safe construction. Mr. W. P. Hinton, Asst. Passenger Traffic Manager of the Grand Trunk Pacific, told the guests at the formal opening banquet that the aim in building the hotel was to supply a holiday home for Winnipeg business men and their families, where all the comforts and conveniences of the metropolitan hotel could be obtained. The hotel was to be managed by the Canada Railway News Company. A novel feature of the opening was an exhibition of moving pictures depicting scenes in connection with the building of the Grand Trunk Pacific and the linking up of steel on the Mountain Division this spring.

BRITAIN'S FOREMOST TRAGEDIENNE AGAIN IN THE LIMELIGHT

Made Her Start in an Amateur Dramatic Club.

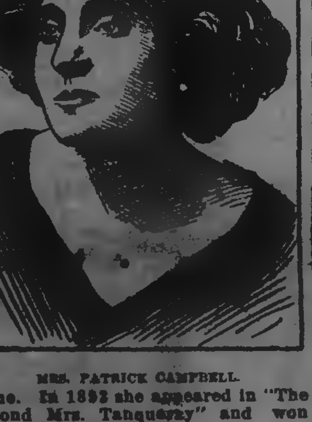
Mrs. Pat Campbell, who, as Eliza the flower-girl, in Bernard Shaw's new play, "Pygmalion," made use of a "sanguinary adjective," and who, just before the production of the play, married Mr. George Cornwallis-West, has been in the limelight for a good many years. To use a printer's phrase, she "lives in large caps."

In appearance she is of medium height, with great, wonderful eyes, a high, white forehead shadowed with black hair, and an eerie voice. Temperamental to the extreme, she cannot be lukewarm nor tolerate half-measures in anything she undertakes.

Her father was a John Tanner, member of a well-known Anglo-Indian family, and residing in Bombay. One day Romanini's Grand Circus visited the town, and young Tanner, falling in love with one of the Italian proprietor's pretty daughters, married her. A year or so later the young couple came to England and settled down, and at Forest House, Kensington Gardens, a daughter, Stella Beatrice, was born to them.

Educated at Brighton, Hampstead, and on the Continent, Stella soon showed talent, and won a scholarship at the Guildhall School of Music. Whilst still in her teens she ran away from home, and became Mrs. Patrick Campbell. The marriage took place in 1884. Before she was twenty she was the mother of two children.

In 1886 she join the West Norwood Dramatic Club, proving such a success that the following year she toured the provinces as a professional actress. "I had to decide between becoming a governess or going on the stage," she has confessed. Her salary was $10 per week, and she played leading lady. After further provincial experience, her chance came. In 1893 she appeared in "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray" and won instant and world-wide fame.



MRS. PATRICK CAMPBELL.

Before the play was staged, when rehearsing her part of Paula Tanqueray in her own drawing-room, she was utterly dissatisfied with her rendering of the poignant scene in which she says, "Give me another chance!" as she appeals to her husband. Again and again she tried to win her effect, but without success. Then it occurred to her to give a thin, withering cry of pain as she uttered the words. Her dog sprang up, and, howling horribly, flew to her side as if to protect her. Britain's premier tragedienne knew then that she had struck the right note.

After her first great success she appeared in various other modern "problem" plays, and then tried Shakespeare with Forbes-Robertson, playing Ophelia to his Hamlet. A caustic critic said of her performance: "Mrs. Patrick Campbell is thoroughly suited with the part of the mad Ophelia, as she can now make an idiot of herself throughout the whole performance, instead of only in parts, as she has done in previous plays."

A story is told that whilst playing with Forbes-Robertson at the Prince of Wales' Theatre she made a practice of going to rehearsals through the royal entrance. One day she wore such an enormous hat that its feathers were crushed as she passed through the doorway. In a great state she sought out the manager. "Really, you must have the doorway altered," she complained.

"But, my dear Mrs. Campbell, only consider what an expense it would be to heighten the entrance!"

"It must be done. I shall not come to rehearsals until the royal entrance has been heightened at least a foot."

And she kept her word.

A Protest.

Dolly—We had to practice Chopin for three hours to-day, mamma.

Mrs. Parvenue—Really, my dear, shoppin' is all very well, but your papa sent you to the ladies' hacademy to learn music an' that sort o' thing."—London Mail.

Once an Inland Sea.

It is the contention of geologists that the Mediterranean was once a great inland sea and that the mountainous rocks separating it from the Atlantic were in the course of ages worn away by the force of the water.

No One Is Perfect.

Each one has his own burden, his own faults; no one can do without the aid of others. Therefore we must assist each other by consolation, advice and mutual warnings.—Leo Tolstoy.

ILLUSION IN WEIGHT.

Blunders That Simply Prove a Person's Good Judgment.

Take a sofa pillow in one hand, balance it carefully until you think you have a right sense of its weight. Hold a large glass in the other hand and have some one pour water into it until you think it weighs about as much as the pillow. Then weigh the two and see how far out of the way you are.

Or take a cap in one hand and put in the other as many coins as you think may be needed to balance it. You will find your judgment far from correct.

Take two stone jars. Fill one with hot water and the other with cold and ask a friend to say which is the heavier of the two. The bottle with hot water will seem 25 per cent heavier.

Take three articles weighing the same. Put one on the ground, one on a table and one on a high shelf. Ask a friend to lift them and determine which of the three is the heaviest. He will pick the one on the shelf as the one which weighs the most every time.

The laws of illusion in weight are quite exact, and it is marvelous to see what a large proportion of people will make exactly the same mistake in exactly the same way. Thus the pillow seems lighter than it is because its appearance suggests lightness. Of two similar weights the one that is the larger in size will always seem the lighter. That is why the weight of the cap will be underestimated in the experiment just described.

Any change from normal temperature, either hot or cold, will appear to increase the temperature. A piece of ice the same weight as a glass of water will seem to weigh twice as much.

The extra exertion needed to sustain the weight of an object either above or below our natural reach seems to make it heavier, and for this reason the weight on the shelf will seem to have the advantage.

Does this show what poor judges we are? Not at all. It only proves our good judgment. It is like the sad case of the college student in a class on optics who could see through the illusions, so that matters which appeared crooked to the rest of the class, although they were really straight, appeared straight to him. Instead of complimenting him on his discernment, the professor promptly expelled the student from the class on the ground that he was drunk. And he was!—New York American.

TRAGIC LAUGHTER.

Vibration and Nitroglycerin Form a Perilous Combination.

An accident, said to be the most extraordinary on record, occurred at some oil fields in the Baku district of Russia, on the borders of the Caspian sea. One of the big "gusher" oil wells became choked, and, with a view of blowing it clear, a number of iron drums full of nitroglycerin were brought down by rail from Derbend and deposited overnight in a large shed which was used by the men as a sort of canteen.

The steward of this establishment, a Greek named Darios, opened one of the drums for some reason best known to himself and decanted a small quantity of the dangerous liquid into a long, thin glass used for mixing vodka. This he placed on a shelf behind the bar. Shortly afterward there entered a workman named Borkovitch, who was famous for the boisterous hilarity of his manner and especially for his loud, resonant laughter.

The sight of nitroglycerin in a vodka tumbler so excited his risibility that he gave vent to a series of stentorian guffaws. This set the half filled glass "ringing," and the treacherous contents immediately exploded.

The concussion sufficed, in its turn, to explode the rest of the stuff in the drums, entirely demolishing the shed and killing five persons, all who were in it at the time. The barman escaped through having gone down into the cellar just previously, whence he distinctly heard the laughter, followed by the musical "ringing" of the thin tumbler and the two explosions.—Pearson's Weekly.

Expansion.

A very stout fellow once presented himself to Sir Francis Burdett and asked him if he had a situation to give him.

"I do not know you," said Sir Francis, looking at him.

"Why, have you forgotten me?" said the fellow. "I was formerly a page in your house."

"My dear boy," said the baronet, "you have become a volume!"—Pearson's Weekly.

Minuteness of Molecules.

Molecules are so minute that there are about a sextillion of them in a cubic inch of air. These at freezing temperature oscillate back and forth at the rate of 1,470 feet a second. The average length of their path between oscillations is about one two-hundred and seventy-seven thousandth of an inch. Each comes into collision with its fellows about 5,000,000 times a second.

PRESS GALLERY BURLESQUE GUIDE GAVE HITHERTO UNKNOWN DETAILS

The Annual Dinner of the Newspapermen at Ottawa Was Marked by Some Pointed Sketches of Canadian Notables.

The Parliamentary Press Gallery dinner, which is always anticipated eagerly by Ministers of the Crown, humble members, and press men, took place recently, and some unique features were staged. The chief of these was the issue of a burlesque edition of the Parliamentary Guide, containing many a biographical thrust at some of the leading members on both sides, and no one enjoyed reading his own obituary more than Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who has attended Press Gallery dinners for the past twenty years, and shares with Hon. Colonel George Ham the distinction of the longest term of continuous attendance.

Sir Wilfrid's biographical note was as follows:

LAURIER, SIR WILFRID: An athlete. Specialty, fancy skating on thin ice. Cobden medal for high hurdles in international tariff sports. Launched Canadian navy for defence of Drummond-Arthabasca. Wept for Niobe September 21, 1911. Favors free food, especially taffy, ginger, and emergency rations. Crowned King George and lost his own in the process. Opposed to prohibition of ospreys, aigrets, and other white plumes, also to all anti-betting legislation as affecting "les vieux coqs." Arms: A free reaper rampant, on a Jones couchant, on a field rouge.

The Prime Minister was greatly amused at the life-like portrayal of his career, as follows:

BORDEN, ROBERT LAIRD: Cabinet maker in basswood. Refused to annex the United States. Never looks for trouble, doesn't have to. Delivered Canada from the Tuppers to Bob Rogers. Essay: "How I Monkeyed Monk." Promised Andy Broder to put Windsor uniforms on the free list. Promoted amalgamation of Orange Order and Nationalists. Now combining Manufacturers' Association with Grain Growers. Favorite book "Job." War Cry, "Let me finish Laurier's work of reforming the Senate."

F. B. Carvell, the grim Grit fighter from New Brunswick, who is really the best of fellows outside the House, was sketched in as follows:

CARVELL, FRANKIE. A semi-mythical personage, believed by many to be the reincarnation of the gentleman who cut off Lady Jane Grey's head. The name is obviously a corruption of Carve well. Elected official executioner of the Liberal party in 1904, and is noted for the genial way in which he performs his gruesome duties. Cut off A. B. Morine's head 1912. Lifelong abstainer from all intoxicants except human blood.

Hon. George E. Foster, who was at the dinner, and smoked his historic annual cigarette, was the only man who was libelled in verse. The little ode ran:

FOSTER, GEORGE EULAS. It is said he could talk before he could walk, and his words were never few, and he'd made a name at the Temp'rance game, before his whiskers grew. So Sir John took him in to tally the tin, and sit on the Treasury lid, and he made good there, and everywhere; and at everything he did. He could make men cheer, or dribble a tear, and would wallop the Grits kerflop; but do what he could and try as he would, he never got quite to the top. For as Rufe said slow—one night below, when the boys were having a smile. "Say, George, old man, you could run dis land, if you'd licker up once in a while."

The one on "Billy" Maclean was also much admired. It ran as follows:

MACLEAN, WILLIAM FINDLAY: Emigrated to Canada after the "North Briton" suspended publication, 1770. Became laird of Donlands August 10th, 1854. Brought about Confederation 1867. Thrice refused the Earldom of Earlscourt, April, 1914. Invented the National Policy 1878. Created the "World" 1880. Appointed editor of the "Toronto Telegram" by Sir Hugh Graham 1915. Successfully fought injunction on part of "Munsey's Magazine," which claimed his speeches impaired its Canadian circulation. Has been a consistent member of the Big Eyes party since he formed and composed it in 1896. Motto: "Here to-day and gone to-morrow."

Captain Tom Wallace, son of the late N. Clark Wallace, was dealt with in a gentle manner.

WALLACE, TOM G.: Born May 7, 1879, and joined L.O.L. 24 on May 8, 1879. Got mixed in procession to Orange Free State 1899. Boers gave up unequal struggle 1900. Received signal honors including medal with three bars, to wit, Paardeburg, Driefontein, and New Russell. Rode to Ottawa on King Billy's white horse, 1908, and 1911. The horse died. Induced to join Papal Zouaves because their pants fit his figure. Led the Woodbridge Band of Hope into Ulster and was frequently mentioned in despatches during the taking of Guinness.

Prohibition in Canada.

Out of 535 contests in Canada during the seven years, 1906-1913, the liquor interests had majorities in 147 only. In the last five years only 81 out of 770 possible contests in "dry districts actually took place, and in only five cases out of the 81 did the electors vote "wet".

Plenty of Means.

Dinks—I see Rouge has bought an automobile. I didn't think he had sufficient means to do that.

Winks—Oh, he has all sorts of means of borrowing money and just as many means of spending it.

HINTS FOR FARMERS

THE FARM LANE.

On many farms a lane is necessary on account of the arrangement of the buildings and fields. The lane should answer the purpose of a driveway, but should not mar the appearance of the farm, as many of them do, and there should be as little loss of land as possible, but it is not advisable to practice economy too far in this direction. Just the other day we saw a lane built with the sole idea of economy. It was very narrow, too narrow to pass through with a large load of hay; and hogs in going to and from a pasture had stopped at various wet places and rooted wallows. A rail fence lined each side against which snow drifted in winter almost as high as the fences.

Another lane we recently saw was 24 feet wide, with a smooth wire fence on either side. A grade 12 feet wide was covered with gravel wide enough for a waggon. On each side of the grade a ditch had been cut several years ago, and it is now well sodded, as is the space between it and the fence. This lane is treated as a permanent pasture and the grass is always kept short. There are no wet spots in this lane to tempt the hogs to root out a wallow, and no fences to catch the snow. There is a gate at either end of the lane so that stock can be kept out during wet weather when the animals would injure the graveled roadway. Recalling some other farm lanes, this lane is of pleasing appearance, and adds to the value of the farm, since a lane is necessary.

Recreation in the Country.

Thousands of country boys and girls pouring into the cities, the labor market of which is already overcrowded, and every paper containing advertisements for workers to help on the farms! There are just two reasons why the majority of young people seek the city. The first and perhaps the strongest is that they think they can have more fun there; second, they fancy they can make more money with less work in town. If you expect young people to think the farm is one of the best spots on earth to live, you must see to it that there are plenty of means for them to have wholesome fun. Every neighborhood should have its baseball nine, its tennis court, a girls' domestic science club, corn, potato and poultry clubs for the boys — in short, any kind of a live organization which will provide an excuse for the young people to meet together and enjoy themselves. It has been wisely said that it is not the hours spent in work which shape a man's character, as much as the way he spends his leisure hours.

POULTRY IN SWITZERLAND.

Search as one will, it is not likely that a hen, fat or lean, young or old, will be found in the local markets, says an American Consular report from Switzerland. The only chickens prepared for the market are the young cocks, the surplus of which are killed. The pullets and hens are kept for brood purposes. If a hen, through age of service, should cease to be prolific, she, too, might be killed, after being fattened and offered for sale, but no one actually thinks of raising chickens for profit, and no one knows anything about scientific or profitable methods of raising chickens. Such a practise as killing hens after their first season of laying is unknown. In fact, so little is known about chicken raising that it is generally believed hens improve with age in their laying proclivities, hence they are kept until they become as familiar and endeared to the family as the horses and cows. Next to nothing is known of raising chickens by the incubator and brooder methods. Upon enquiry it was ascertained that there is only one incubator in Basel, and that is a baby incubator.

IS SHE THE OLDEST?

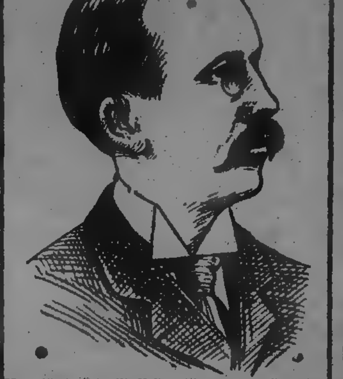
What is thought to be the oldest living hen is owned by George J. Bertch, of Kane, Pa. The hen, which is a black Minorca, is 16 years old. At the time the hen was hatched it was owned by Fred Burgess, formerly of that city, but who is now residing in Olean, N.Y. When Burgess moved away he gave the hen to Ernest Rietter, who sold it to Bertch. The hen has been a pet in the Bertch home for several years. The hen is very tame and occasionally lays an egg. It is the opinion of many residents of this city that the hen is the oldest that ever lived. The present owner has received several good offers for the hen, but refuses to part with it, and is going to keep her as long as she lives. The hen is as well and healthy today as she was 15 years ago, and weighs 12 pounds.

RAILWAYMAN IS HONORED

J. D. Fraser is Vice-President of Trolley Association.

J. D. Fraser, secretary-treasurer of the Ottawa Electric Railway, has been elected vice-president of the Canadian Electric Railway Association for 1914.

Mr. Fraser spent his early life in Martintown, County of Glengarry, and came to Ottawa in 1871 and first entered the employment of McClymont & Co., of New Edinburgh, as telegraph operator and bookkeeper, remaining in that position until 1882, when he became secretary of the Ottawa City Passenger Railway Company, a position he retained until the company passed into the hands of the Ottawa Electric interests in 1891. He was then appointed secretary-treasurer of the Ottawa Electric Company and has held that position ever since. He is also secretary and treasurer and a director of the Ottawa Car Company.



J. D. FRAZER.

Mr. Fraser represented Rideau Ward in the Ottawa Council from 1891 until 1897. He is a life member and past president of the Ottawa Amateur Athletic Association and a member of the Rideau Club and the Ottawa Golf Club, and has hosts of friends in the capital, being a man of genial, kindly personality and a staunch friend.

After Fifty.

One gets tired of hearing that this is a "young man's age." It is not. Young men do great work nowadays and always have and always will. But one does not often see them at the head of the financial or educational or literary world.

After so-called "middle age" most of the world's great men have done their best work. Here are one or two instances:

Darwin, author of Origin of Species, written at the age of 50.

Immanuel Kant, writer of Critique of Pure Reason, at the age of 57.

Herbert Spencer made a rough outline of his Sympathetic Philosophy when 40 years old, wrote Principles of Psychology when 52 years old and Justice at 71 years.

Richard Wagner accomplished more after the age of 50 than before. The entire Nieblungen Ring appeared when he was 60 years old and Parsifal was written when he was 64.

Haydn composed The Creation at 67 years of age and The Seasons some years later.

Christopher Columbus was 56 when he discovered America.

Goethe did most of his literary work after he had reached 65. Probably his greatest work was Faust, the second part of which was written when he was 80.

Among others who did brilliant work between the ages of 40 and 70 were Humboldt, Lord Kelvin, Faraday and John Fiske.

Pitt as a Talker.

Who set the fashion in the House of Commons of long speeches? It was the elder Pitt, of whom Lord Brougham said: "He was prolix in the whole texture of his discourse, and he was certainly the first who introduced into our senate the practice, adopted in the American war by Mr. Burke and continued by others, of long speeches—speeches of two and three hours—by which oratory has gained little and business less." Pitt's ability amounted to a vice. He himself confessed that he did not like to take part in a debate when he had an important state secret on his mind, "for when once I am up everything that is in my mind must come out."—London Spectator.

Told of a Poet's "Maid."

One would like to think that Eliza Crawley, Browning's old housekeeper, was "the maid" in a story told by Browning to Grant Duff. While the poet was away on holiday in the summer of 1879 a man called at his house and, telling "the maid" that he was connected with the press, asked if it was true that Mr. Browning was dead. "I have not heard so," was the answer, "and I am sure my master is not the kind of man to do such a thing without letting us know." "Oh, I assure you," said the inquirer, "people of that sort often die in that way. Dickens did so and Thackeray likewise."—London Chronicle.

Quite So.

Mr. Downright—I don't believe Swallow's tale about his extraordinary capacity for eating. Mrs. Malaprop—Oh, you can believe all he says. Mr. Swallow's tales of his appetite are quite voracious.

CANADA'S COAL SUPPLY MUST BE CAREFULLY HANDLED SAYS CONSERVATION REPORT

Canada's dependence on the United States for its supply of anthracite coal is a point strikingly indicated in the report just issued by the Commission of Conservation, on the "Conservation of Coal in Canada." Practically all of the most populous portion of Canada lying between Montreal, Que., and Moose Jaw, Sask., relies solely on the United States for its supply of anthracite coal. Further, there are indications that the United States may, in the comparatively near future prohibit the export of anthracite, and, as the only anthracite deposits thus far discovered in Canada, are confined to the area near Banff, Alta., it is of great importance that suitable substitutes be found as soon as possible.

Such a situation makes it clear that Canada should carefully husband her coal resources and, so far as possible, check all wasteful methods of mining and handling coal. With this end in view, the report suggests greatly needed changes in the form of coal-mine leases, the provisions of which should be carefully enforced by a competent engineering authority. This would go far towards preventing the careless practices followed at present in many coal mines. In addition to this, it is urged that the Government should carry on investigations with a view to determining the suitability of slack and low-grade coals for use in gas producers for generating power, and their adaptability for the manufacture of briquettes for domestic use. By utilizing these inferior products in this way, not only would there be less waste, but the value of the public coal lands would be considerably increased.

Again, it is pointed out that central power stations situated in the vicinity of many of the lignite fields of Western Canada, could develop electric power for transmission to neighboring manufacturing centres. This would mean a great saving, especially in the case of lignites.

The chief deficiency of the lignites which prevents their widespread use as household fuel is that they will not bear transportation. In the first place their heat producing qualities do not justify the cost of freighting, and in the second place they will not stand shipment and weathering. In addition to these defects, lignite in its crude form is scarcely suitable for stove and furnace use.

In this emergency the coal briquette gives promise of being the salvation of Canada's vast prairie districts so far as cheap fuel is concerned and the Commission of Conservation is bending its efforts towards ascertaining the commercial possibilities of the various fields of lignite in the west.

In the case of bituminous and anthracite coal it is possible to manufacture briquettes on a commercial basis only where supplies of pitch can be secured for binding purposes. In the case of lignites, the quantity of pitch required is far less and it has been shown by experience that briquettes can be made without the use of a binder at all. In Germany, where the greatest advances in the industry have been made, an enormous quantity of low grade "brown coal," or lignite, has been utilized and the handiness and uniform size of the little bricks has made them very popular in the cities, where they form the greater part of the fuel used. The uniformity of size makes the briquette burn more freely and they give off less smoke, which in a city residential district is a strong recommendation.

While crude lignite is extremely brittle and is reduced almost to dust on a journey, the briquette made from it can be transported long distances with very little deterioration either from the jolting or the weather, and when kept under cover will remain in perfect condition for several months.

At the present time in the Crow's Nest country, where most of the coal in the west is being mined, the practice is to make it into coke which is sold to neighboring smelters. The high cost of carriage makes it impossible to market the slack coal to advantage.

The organization of the manufacture of briquettes in large quantities, however, must be retarded until a sufficient quantity of binding material is put upon the market. The most desirable binder is tar pitch, and recent surveys of the Athabaska river reveal the fact that there are enormous deposits of tar sand there which when developed will supply a huge supply of pitch for the briquetting industry. For the present, however, coal tar pitch, may be considered as the base for the development of briquette manufacture.

Another method of utilizing the immense lignite deposits is in the development of electric power and on this the commission sets considerable store. The report points out that the fields are so situated that the large quantities of lignite could be used to run steam plants from which the power could be exported for great enough distances to serve the greater number of the present manufacturing centres in the west as well as creating new ones within easy reach of the generating centre.

The by-products of the lignite beds are manifold and give promise of great industrial wealth. The chief of these is gas, which can be produced in large quantities, and where a market is near at hand can be profitably sold for domestic and lighting purposes. It can also be used to furnish power for the mines.

TENSION LIKELY

French and German Editors Imperil Peace

PARIS, July 16.—An acrimonious controversy which is going on between Paul and Guy Cassagnac, editors of Autorite and I. Fuchs, correspondent of The Berlin Lokal Anzeiger, and Carl Lahm, correspondent of The Leipsic Tageblatt, appears likely to cause diplomatic tension between France and Germany.

Guy Cassagnac recently challenged Fuchs to a duel, which the seconds decided need not take place because Fuchs had nothing to do personally with an article, which was the original cause of the controversy, approving a sentence of one year imprisonment imposed by the Leipsic courts on the Alsatian cartoonist, Hansi.

Paul Cassagnac challenged Lahm because he did not leave the country in 48 hours, as had been demanded by Autorite.

It is understood that the German Embassy in Paris is prepared to uphold what it conceives to be the rights of German correspondents.

Liked King's Clothes.

The critical Parisians greatly admired the taste of the King and Queen in matters of dress, and in many of the shops models of the King's coat, trousers, and hat are now being largely displayed. King George has very pronounced ideas of his own, yet he has always exhibited excellent taste in dress. There is one thing his Majesty will not tolerate however, and that is the crease down the front of his trousers: and he has certainly never attempted the horrible crease down the side, which was about the only form of dress in which King Edward failed to find any imitators.

Discovery of Ancient Tunnel.

In the progress of the excavations made preparatory to the erection of the new buildings for the National University College, Dublin, a curious discovery has just been made. At a depth of twenty feet below the surface a spacious and well-constructed tunnel has been brought to light. It is some nine feet in diameter, and is apparently of considerable antiquity —dating from a couple of hundred years back at any rate. The workmen who discovered it walked into it, and found that it extended fully one-third of a mile under the city. What its original use was is not clear.

FEWER "VAGS" IN LONDON.

Insurance Act One Cause, Says the Government Report.

From a report issued by the Local Government Board, it is evident that the scheme devised for dealing with the homeless people who made the Embankment their dormitory is proving successful, says The London Express. It commenced about eighteen months ago, and the system is to give the vagrants tickets for a centre whence they are distributed among casual wards and charitable shelters. The police now issue from 1,000 to 1,500 tickets per month. About nine-tenths of the recipients apply at that Central Office on Waterloo Pier; half of these are sent to the charitable agencies, and practically all avail themselves of the shelter provided. Of those sent to the casual wards forty per cent. disappear, and it is significant that the numbers accepting this hospitality are decreasing.

"Evidently," says the report, "the casual wards are not looked upon with favor by those who sleep out, and the possibility that the labor task and compulsory bath may be in some degree responsible for our figures cannot be ignored."

Since February, 1910, when the number of men and women in the streets and sitting up in shelters rose to 2,780, the figure has fallen to 692 (last October). It is admitted that other factors besides improved administration may have influenced the decline, which may be partly due to improvement in trade.

"Other probable factors," it is added, "to which variations may be due are the coming into operation of the Old Age Pensions Act, the National Health Insurance Acts, and the institution of Labor Exchanges."

One important result of the scheme is that the homeless ones are brought under the notice of those who can deal with them and put them in the way of earning a livelihood again. Two cases may be mentioned. A civil servant who through illness came down to the Embankment was put into a situation at a well-known caterer's; a chauffeur who tramped to London to enlist, but was unable to do so, having no references, was put on his feet again.

Sterner measures are recommended for those vagrants who have not yet become amenable to the scheme, and the report concludes with a warning to the public of the evil of indiscriminate charity.

A CHANGE OF PROGRAM

A Story for Memorial Day

By CAPTAIN F. A. MITCHEL

General Hassett, commanding the —th division of the —th corps of the Army of the Cumberland, was a military man from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot. He was a colonel in the regular service.

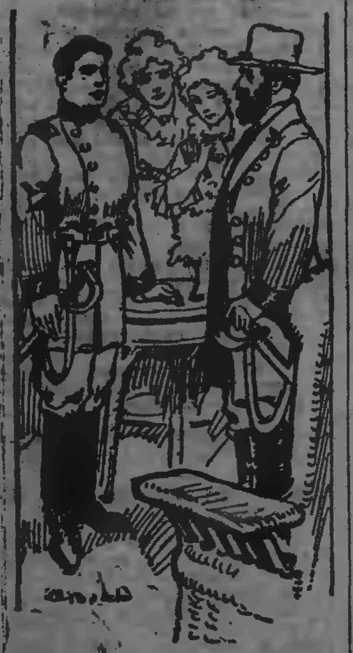
It was the general's personality that insured obedience to his orders. He was born to command. He was nearly twice the age of those to whom he gave orders, and this, with the double star on his shoulder strap, insured him great respect from them. If he had ordered a soldier to commit harakiri the man would not have consulted the army regulations to learn if the order was legitimate. But the strongest hold that the general had on his troops was a real kindness of heart that underlay his external sternness.

Captain Garland of General Hassett's staff was twenty-two years old and handsome as a picture. Moreover, he was a favorite with all who knew him. The country girls along the line over which he passed, who had never seen anything above those indigenous to the soil on which they lived, wilted before him like flowers under a hot sun. The captain had nothing to do with this except to smile, and he smiled on them all alike. Indeed, he was unconscious of the blights he was leaving behind him. One day the general said to him:

"Captain, we will march from here soon and proceed to M., thirty miles south. I desire that you proceed in advance and find a site for our headquarters camp. Take a couple of orderlies with you and set out at once."

Within half an hour the captain was riding along the turnpike headed southward, the two orderlies riding at the regulation forty paces to the rear.

Garland selected for his general's headquarters a vacant lot on the southern extremity of the town next to a residence. But before appropriating it he dismounted before the house to ask if it would be agreeable to the occupants to have a camp there. He was received by a middle aged lady, who heard his request—one made simply through politeness, for he could camp where he liked—and seemed uncertain what to say in reply.



"HOLD YOURSELF IN READINESS TO ACT AS BRIDEGROOM."

"We are to have a wedding here before long," she said at last. "Do you suppose that a camp on the lot beside us will in any way interfere with it?"

"Not at all, madam. On the contrary, the presence of the general commanding the troops which are to occupy this point will be a protection to you."

"In that case you have my consent."

The young man rose, bowed and was about to leave when the lady asked him when the troops would arrive. He replied that they would come in a few days. When she asked where he would stay in the meantime and he replied that he would bivouac on the lot he had chosen she was moved with compassion and invited him and his men to stop at her house. Garland accepted the invitation, but his men preferred the lot. They had their rations in their haversacks and were soon engaged over a fire, while the captain supped in the house.

It was at supper that Garland met Miss Lucile Rutlidge, the bride expectant. She was one of those willowy southern girls with peach complexions to be found only in the southern states. Southern ladies during the war whenever they would come in contact with their enemies almost invariably treated them with politeness, often with consideration. Miss Rutlidge made a slight inclination to Garland, though it was her mother who caused him to feel at ease by conversation.

During the chat Garland asked if music had been provided for the wedding, whereupon Mrs. Rutlidge informed him that no music was to be obtained. There had been an amateur orchestra in the town before the opening of the war, but the players were now all in the Confederate armies.

"In that case," said Garland, "our general will, I have no doubt, be pleased to direct the band of one of his regiments to furnish music for the occasion. One of our bands, that of the —th regulars, is the best in the service and if you prefer an orchestra one composed of the players can easily be made up by the bandmaster."

At this Miss Rutlidge looked at Garland to express her appreciation of the offer, and for the first time their eyes met. Whatever of antagonism for a Federal officer had been with the young lady went out like a candle and was replaced by something very different. It was impossible for antagonism to exist under the gaze of the captain's eyes, which expressed only kindliness and admiration.

Garland took his meals and slept in the house, waiting for the arrival of the command. Having nothing to do, he sat during the day on the veranda, entertained either by Mrs. Rutlidge or her daughter, usually by the daughter, for the mother took upon herself the preparations for the approaching wedding.

One day while Garland and Miss Rutlidge sat on the veranda a man rode up on horseback and handed the latter a letter. She tore it open and read it hastily. Then she arose and went into the house. Garland could hear her talking with her mother, but not what was said. Mrs. Rutlidge was evidently much excited, not to say angry. The young lady did not appear again on the veranda, but sent a note by a negro to the messenger who was waiting without.

Garland did not see either of the ladies again till supper time, and then only the mother. She sat with a stormy brow till the meal was ended not speaking a word, then revealed the cause of her irritation. The wedding for which she had been waiting for weeks, months even in some respects, was indefinitely postponed. The bridegroom wrote that owing to the approach of the Federal army his affairs were in a deplorable condition and he must remain on his plantation to take care of them. "But this is not the real reason," added the lady—"at any rate, not the only one. We have heard recently that a widow has been setting her cap for my daughter's fiance, and we suspect that she has captured him."

Communications had been kept up between Captain Garland and the army to which he belonged. He had written a brother aid-de-camp of the approaching wedding, that he had offered music for the occasion and that he hoped the command would reach M. in ample time for him to redeem his promise. The matter had been talked over at the mess table in presence of the general, who evinced an interest in it, saying that Garland's offer must be made good and if the command did not march in time for the wedding half a dozen musicians should go anyway.

But one night an order came from the department commander to move the next morning at daylight. When the sun rose every regiment and battery was in the road ready to move, and the order "Forward!" was given.

It so happened that General Hassett reached M. on the day before the wedding was to have taken place. Garland was sitting on the veranda with Mrs. and Miss Rutlidge when he heard a clattering of horses' hoofs and the general with staff and escort came down before the captain could vacate. Seeing his aid, the general rode up to the house, dismounted and tramped to the jingling of spurs and rattling of side arms to where the three sat.

"Happy to meet you, ladies," he said, removing his forage cap and bowing low. "I presume this young lady is the bride to be. Captain, I was about to send the music when the order came to move."

All this, of course, was very embarrassing. Mrs. Rutlidge, thinking it better to have the changed conditions known and over with, spoke up:

"General, there is to be no wedding."

"No wedding. Why not?"

"There is no bridegroom."

"But there is a bride."

"Yes; there is a bride, but her fiance has deserted her for another."

The general looked sympathetically at Miss Rutlidge.

"There shall be a wedding," said the general decidedly. "I command here, and since the preparations are made and the music provided the wedding shall take place."

All looked astounded at this, and the general proceeded:

"Captain Garland, hold yourself in readiness to act as bridegroom on this occasion. When was the marriage to have taken place?"

"Tomorrow at noon," replied the captain, a smile breaking over his face.

"Very well. You will report here in person tomorrow at 12 o'clock for duty —I mean"—

"You're not going to force me on the bride, are you, general?" asked Garland.

"The bride! Oh, I forgot that. Of course not. All is subject to the will of the bride."

Now, if there were not cases in which love acts like lightning this story would have a very abrupt and unnatural ending. The little god had begun his work at the first meeting of Captain Garland and Miss Rutlidge and had been galloping on ever since. Garland looked at the young lady, and the young lady looked at Garland. And these looks were a mute proposal and acceptance.

The next day the wedding took place, the band playing both the "Star Spangled Banner" and "Dixie." And this is how one southern girl was brought north as a wife by a Federal army.

Alice Muriel Astor Modest and Sweet.

At the recent wedding of her brother, Vincent Astor, to Miss Helen Huntington, Miss Ava Alice Muriel Astor was one of the flower girls. Alice, as she is called, is twelve years of age and is said to be a sweet and winsome girl. By the will of her father, the late John Jacob Astor, who was lost in the Titanic disaster, Alice is to have the income of $5,000,000 until she is twenty-one years old, when she will come into possession of the principal. Quite a lot of money for a small girl to be heir to. At the wedding Alice wore a frock of corn colored chiffon and net, with blue sash and garden hat, the same as the other flower girls. An interesting feature of the wedding was that the dogs of the Huntington estate, a dozen in number, were running about in the house, their collars decorated with white satin ribbons

About Umbrellas.

That the umbrella can lay claim to a history probably never has occurred to you, yet as a shade from the sun the umbrella is an implement of great antiquity and can be seen in the paintings and sculptures of very ancient Egypt. From Africa it passed, as an object of distinction, to Greece and Rome.

During the middle ages umbrellas ceased to be used in Europe, but during the sixteenth century horsemen, of all people, revived the fashion in Italy. And in the next century the umbrella found its way to Britain, but it did not become popular until, during the reign of Anne, a covering of oiled silk was substituted for feathers. Even then only ladies used umbrellas. The eighteenth century had half elapsed ere a man was seen carrying one in London, and that brave fellow bore the name Jonas Hanway.

Game of Shadow Buff.

To play shadow buff a large white sheet is hung securely on one side of the room, and on a table some distance behind a very bright lamp must be placed, other lights being extinguished. One of the party takes a seat on a low stool between the lamp and the sheet, but nearer the latter than the former. One after another the company pass behind him, their shadows falling on the sheet as they pass, and the person sitting down tries to guess who each one is. The players are allowed to disguise themselves to a slight extent, and gestures of any kind may be practiced.

Within the Pale.

When a thing is within the proper bounds or limits we speak of it as "within the pale."

That part of the kingdom of Ireland in which English rule was acknowledged after the conquest of 1172 was called the Pale. It included Dublin and the counties of Meath, Louth, Carlow and Kilkenny and was so called because the conquerors inclosed or impaled themselves within these limits as a safeguard against the enemy. Only such laws as had their beginning within the Pale were recognized as legitimate, and hence the meaning of "within the pale."

Diogenes' Tub.

The tub in which Diogenes, the cynic, made his home was a great earthen jar, discarded from the Cybele temple. It had been used for wine or oil for the sacrifices of the temple and was sufficiently large to allow the philosopher a reclining place.

The truth of this tale has been called into question, although it is said that during the Peloponnesian war the Athenians dwelt in just such vessels and that even after the death of Diogenes such receptacles were used as dwelling places by the poor.

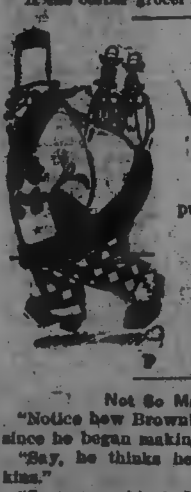
Some Consolation.

Life is not a barren desert
  By a wild storm beaten shore
When you still have left some credit
  At the little corner store.

Though the world may frown adversely
  While as hills your trouble piles,
There is still some consolation
  If the corner grocer smiles.



Certainly.

VACATION.

THE skies outside are dull and gray,
  The wind is in the west,
And in the ancient chicken coop
  No eggs are in the nest.
And can you blame the patient hens
  If for a time they miss
Their daily task so underpaid
  In weather such as this?

Would you, were you a speckled hen,
  Go forth and freeze your feet
When Peary weather was on tap
  That other folks might eat?
Or would you hunt the tallest perch
  And say: "Ah, lackaday!
If you'll excuse my classic slang,
  This is no time to lay?"

Just like the warbler on the stage
  Who at the public sings,
A hen may, too, have temperament
  And moods and all those things,
And for her reputation, too,
  She may have some regard
When she's aware she can't compete
  With snowballs in the yard.

Then let us calmly bide our time,
  It will not help the case
For us to tell her what to do—
  We are not in her place—
But meanwhile saving here and there
  A dollar or a dime
In hopes that we will have enough
  To buy an egg some time.

Her Condition.

"Is she happily married?"

"Well, something quite as desirable."

"What?"

"She is happily widowed."

Small Consolation.

Thomas Edison, having focused his long distance eye on the future, comes down out of the tree and reports with some excitement that he sees a pink Utopia with blue stripes on it for the people of the world 200 years hence.

In the year 2110 there will not be even so much as the photograph of work anywhere in sight. The machine will feed itself raw material and turn out garments, rocking chairs and Christmas presents, and doubtless there will be an endless belt attachment to carry them around to the ultimate consumer and dump them at his door. He will probably have to carry them in the house unless he feels that his wife needs exercise.

The trouble with these hot Utopias is that they are so far ahead that few now living will be around enjoying the scenery and kicking on the weather when they arrive. Why can't the world speed up and hand every one his own vine and fig tree and automobile while they will do us some good?

Something Lacking.

"I hear you went up into the woods for the first time since you were a boy."

"Yes; I took a brief hunting trip."

"Things must have changed. Did you miss anything?"

"Just a bear, and it was one of the prettiest shots you ever saw too."

Satisfied.

"But Edith said she would marry the best man on earth."

"She didn't."

"But how did she ever come to marry at all?"

"She found something just as good."

Getting at the Facts.

"I regard Napoleon as the world's greatest general."

"And why?"

"Well, he fought many a pitched battle."

"Who was his pitcher?"

Afraid of a Broom.

The housemaid did not do her work,
  And now she is at large.
The cause for letting her depart
  Was just a sweeping charge.

MAKING WIRE.

Rolling and Drawing a Bar of Iron Into a Fine Thread.

Bars of metal four inches square are heated and passed while hot and plastic through rapidly revolving rolls, reducing them to wire rods which vary from one quarter of an inch to an inch or more in diameter, depending upon the finished size of wire wanted.

These rods, which are formed into coils as they pass through the rolls, are dipped in acid baths to remove loose scale and provide a lubricant for drawing. Drawing consists of pulling rods while cold through holes of gradually increasing diameter drilled in steel plates. During this process the particles of metal become elongated and strained, making the wire harder and more brittle. To restore it to a proper temper it is necessary to heat or anneal it.

When a fine diameter is required there must be repeated annealings and drawings. This may be done until the bar, which originally was four inches square and four feet long, becomes reduced to a diameter of a single thousandth of an inch and extended 13,000 miles in length. Before so fine a size is reached the wire will cut into the steel of the die plate, so the usual die plates must be discarded and the drawing continued through holes drilled in diamonds, the diameter of these diamond dies decreasing by fractional parts of a thousandth of an inch. This wire affords a striking illustration of a material made more valuable by the application of labor.

From the time the bar of metal enters the furnace nothing is added to it. All the work is done with one article, which is passed through rolls and drawn through die plates until it is finished.

How to Make Homemade Scents.

Lavender Water.—Put into a bottle and shake well one-eighth of a pint of spirits of wine, one-eighth of an ounce of oil of lavender and a quarter of a dram of essence of ambergris.

Eau de Cologne.—Half an ounce each of oils of lemon and bergamot, sixteenth of an ounce of oil of orange peel, quarter of a dram of oil of rosemary, twenty drops of oil of neroli, five drops of essence of musk or ambergris. Reduce this amount of ingredients in half a pint of rectified spirits of wine.

Numerous perfumes may be made by adding to a small quantity of rectified spirits of wine oils of geranium, sandalwood, rosemary or essence of bergamot, musk or ambergris, adding it drop by drop until the desired perfume is obtained. These ingredients may be obtained from any drug store.

Magnet Mountain

The Story of Its Power of Attraction

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Linn Ellison looked at his compass for a long time before he reached out and held it up to his companion's eyes.

"What did I tell you, Baker?" he asked quietly.

Baker rubbed his red hair perplexedly. "It certainly does act cantankerous," he admitted. "If any one should ask me I'd say that there was a very powerful magnet close by; but, as for making me believe that Magnet mountain is really and truly magnetic, it can't be done."

"What is the matter with my compass and your watch?" demanded Linn.

"Don't bother me with batty questions," answered Baker loftily. "Permit me to pursue my study of the classics in peace." And he folded back the pages of his paper backed detective story, propped his elbows on the ground near the bright firelight and read absorbedly.

Linn laughed and stretched his long limbs.

"Surely McOlin must have had some authority for his statement that there existed in this vicinity a mountain with strong magnetic powers," he mused, turning over the pages of Dr. McOlin's "Wanderings In Out of the Way Places." "Here he speaks of the peculiar behavior of his delicate instruments and of his visit to the mountain and how his suspicions were confirmed. He sends his book to his publishers in New York and thenceforth drops out of sight entirely. No one knows what has become of Sandy McOlin. I wonder."

Baker looked up and grinned.

"Still wondering about the mountain?" he gibed.

"They call it 'Magnet mountain,'" contended Linn, scowling earnestly.

"They named me Percy Rollo Baker, but do I look like it?" demanded the strong featured giant sarcastically.

Linn stretched himself again, arose and sauntered out from the trees into the moonlight.

"I'm going for a walk," he called back.

"Don't get too near the mountain!" sang Baker, his nose deep in the book.

Across the open patch of moonlight and into the narrow trail that wound through the spruces on the hillside Linn Ellison found himself undergoing strange sensations. A new and powerful vitality seemed to possess him as he mounted upward. At the top of the hill he paused for a moment, looking up at the majestic grandeur of the snow capped peak of Magnet mountain. Bathed in moonlight, the peak glistened like polished silver, and somewhere below, among the black pines that clothed the sides, there gleamed a yellow light.

"I wonder!" muttered Linn again.

Now he plunged down the trail and crossed a little valley, to climb steadily up the opposite slope toward the silver peak of Magnet mountain.

He lost sight of the yellow light immediately, and his way up the mountain led through untracked forests of pine and fir and spruce. His feet slipped on the fallen needles, and in his nostrils was the sweet pungency of balsamic odors. He was panting a little when he paused to rest. Throwing himself down under the low spreading branches of a giant spruce, he gave himself up to the weariness that oppressed his eyelids.

He slept.

Linn Ellison awoke with a start to find that the moonlight had invaded his resting place. He sat up and looked dazedly at the apparition that flitted across the space and hovered in the shadows.

It was a girl clad in a short skirted khaki costume. Her little feet, in high tan boots, were plainly visible, while her face was in deep shadow, but Linn saw that she was slender, lithe and graceful and that her slim fingers were clasped about the barrel of a shotgun. There was a tantalizing uncertainty about the face that could not be seen.

"Who is there?" he asked sharply.

A quick little sigh answered him, followed by a sweet, quavering voice:

"Who are you? Oh, who are you?" she inquired.

"Then you are alive after all!" exclaimed Linn joyously, for no reason that he could explain. "Upon my word, I thought you were a ghost!"

"Who are you?" repeated the girl more steadily, as if reassured by the sound of his voice. "Please tell me what you are doing here."

"I am here for the shooting. Surely this isn't private property?"

"Oh, no! Only I needed help, and I wondered if you could be trusted." She came forward then, and the moonlight revealed the secret of her face.

Linn Ellison stared speechlessly at her.

"I need help," she repeated, with a quiver in her voice.

"Forgive me," cried Linn. "I can be trusted, be assured of that. What can I do?"

"My father is ill. We have a little camp up yonder, and I need brandy and medicines for him. There is no one to send, and I cannot go alone."

"I have a small medicine case in my pocket," was Linn's prompt reply. "Take me to your father, and I will do what I can for him. After that you may call upon me or my companion for any aid you need. Baker can ride back to Red Fork for anything you require."

"Thank you," she said briefly. "Follow me, please."

Soon they emerged into a small cleared space, where the embers of a fire glowed sullenly in a stone faced hole before a small group of tents.

The girl tossed a pine knot on the fire and fastened back the flaps of one of the tents. She lighted a lantern and hung it from the tent pole.

"Come in, please," she said hurriedly to Linn.

He bent his tall head and entered. It was sparsely furnished with a narrow cot, some empty boxes, covered with rugs; a folding camp table and some leather traveling cases piled in one corner.

On the cot was the gaunt form of an old man. His white hair framed a delicate, wrinkled face, whose black eyes stared piercingly at the stranger.

"Joyce, who is that man?" he demanded feebly.

The girl laid her hand on his forehead.

"He is a friend I found in the forest, father," she soothed him. "He has a medicine case, and I'm sure he has something that will do you good."

Linn came forward, tossed his cap aside and sat down by the bed.

"My name is Linn Ellison," he said frankly. "I'm here for the shooting. My guide and companion is down at my camp across the valley. Your daughter tells me you are ill and in need of medicine. I will do what I can for you, sir, and Baker will ride to Red Fork for anything else you may need."

"You are very kind," said the old man tremulously. "It is all my fault, this predicament. Not a word, Joyce, my dear. Let me tell Mr. Ellison how I decided to prolong my stay here and how I persuaded you to spend the winter here and how I have been ill with fever and how all my men have deserted me and taken money and supplies with them, and"—

"Take some stimulant first and tell me the story afterward," urged Linn, opening the medicine case and taking out quinine and some compressed beef tablets.

Joyce brought a cup of hot water from a small spirit stove, and presently the sick man was gratefully sipping the strong beef tea.

When he had finished he said with a faint smile:

"Mr. Ellison, if I told you that I was Alexander McOlin would you be any the wiser for that information?"

"Dr. Sandy McOlin!" cried Linn incredulously. "Why, sir, your wonderful book is my closest companion, and only this evening I was wondering over your disappearance. What good luck!" He clasped the thin hand in both his own strong brown ones.

Dr. McOlin struggled to sit up, and Linn placed an arm under the bowed shoulders.

"The book!" repeated the doctor excitedly. "Is the book really out? I haven't seen it yet."

"If you will compose yourself to sleep, sir, I will have my copy of your book here by daylight."

When the regular breathing assured them that Dr. McOlin was indeed receiving the rest that he needed the girl and the man who had met only a brief hour ago passed out of the tent and stood before the campfire. In a moment the girl spoke:

"You are the first one who has happened this way for six months. I have had to depend upon my gun for much of our food. My meeting you tonight was the most wonderful blessing that could have happened. Many of the people hereabout are afraid to come to the mountain. There is a tradition that it is strongly magnetized, and of course father's investigations have in a measure confirmed the story, only there is nothing alarming about the fact; it is merely interesting. But after father had sent the last pages of his book manuscript to New York he conceived the idea of remaining here for the winter and pursuing his investigations. The result is that we have been here alone ever since the first month, when the six men who composed the party robbed my father of money and provisions and deserted us, leaving us with few stores and not even one pack horse. You can imagine our plight."

She smiled bravely into Linn's eyes.

"I am most happy that it is now over," said Linn, dizzy with the glance of her wonderful eyes.

The pink dawn was breaking above the distant ranges when Baker, pale and anxious, saw Linn Ellison come crashing through the thicket into their camp.

"What in thunderation"— he was beginning heatedly, when Linn held up a protesting hand.

"Magnet mountain did it," said that happy young man as he threw himself down before the fire.

"Magnet mountain!" repeated Baker, staring at him. "Do you mean to say you've been up on the mountain?"

"I've been there," returned the other.

"And found the magnet, I suppose?"

"And discovered the greatest attraction in the world," said Linn dreamily.

"Crazy as a loon!" muttered Baker. "All on account of that magnetized mountain. I do believe there's something in it after all."

And when he heard the whole story from Linn Ellison's lips and after he had seen Joyce McOlin herself the skeptical Baker had to admit that Magnet mountain did possess a powerful attraction.

"And I might have been the lucky fellow instead of you if I'd only gone prowling up the mountain and not pored over the classics," he grumbled, tossing his dime novel into the fire. "I always said that a taste for literature was a drawback sometimes."

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

It is very often the person who doesn't talk very much about it who is most set upon accomplishing a thing.

We never can tell what is going to happen, and it probably would be monotonous and irritating to such a degree if we could that we would sit up nights to get a change in the program.

People who do a vast amount of bragging are always putting a hypothetical case. They have no time to do anything else.

Silence is a good thing to have in your possession when things are warming up and other people are getting angry.

More people would hear the call of the soil if it didn't call to heavy lifting.

Pleasant Lapse.

"How is Charley getting on on the stage?"

"Very nicely. He hopes to be a star next year."

"Why not a comet?"

"Why a comet?"

"It would be so nice to have him come back in about seventy-six years."

Cured Her.

"She hasn't any faith in the doctors."

"Ever sick?"

"No."

"Just on general principles, then?"

"General principles nothing. She had to sue one for breach of promise."

Felt Safe.

"My son, look out for those girls. They have designs on you."

"Never fear, dad. The only designs on me are the tattoo marks on my arm."

His Great Need.

"He has a most remarkable memory."

"He isn't in any business that calls for it, is he?"

"Business! No."

"Then it is remarkable."

"No. You see, his wife believes everything he says."

A New Discovery.

We are starting in a way that promises great things. Right off the bat is the discovery of the fourth dimension.

A mere boy of eleven years has gone out with his gun, as it were, and brought the thing in. You cannot see it, but it is there. He says so, and he proves it by figures that no one but a professor can follow and the layman never can tell how much of it they understand and to what extent they are only looking wise lest they give themselves away.

We have to take his word for it. He can no more put it in a cage and exhibit it about the country than can the discoverers of the pole place on exhibition their find.

[illegible] the bright little boy. May he go on and on now that he has started, for we see no reason, since he has his hand in, that he shouldn't discover a fifth, sixth or seventh dimension.

Woman's World

Mrs. Pennybacker, Women's Club Leader and Philanthropist.

MRS. PERCY V. PENNYBACKER.

Mrs. Pennybacker is a southern woman by birth. She first saw the light at Petersburg, Va. Her father was the Rev. J. B. Hardwicke, D. D. She was educated at the high school in Leavenworth, Kan., and at the State Normal school in Huntsville, Tex. She taught school for fourteen years, an experience that was the foundation for her great interest in educational work. She was married in 1884 to Percy V. Pennybacker, a leading educator of Texas. The marriage was a very happy one, but in 1899 he died. Administering her home affairs and looking after her children did not occupy her time to the exclusion of intellectual interests. She has always been an enthusiastic clubwoman. Through the woman's club she believes much educational work may be accomplished and wide social service rendered.

She is a gifted writer and speaker. Her history of Texas is a standard work on that subject. If a lady of such broad interests may be said to have a special fad it is in increasing the efficiency of the public schools and bringing the advantages of state universities and technical schools within the reach of poor boys and girls.

Her home is at Austin, Tex., where she is the center of a distinguished social and intellectual circle.

SUMMER AWNINGS.

They Should Be Attractive as Well as Convenient.

The style and color of awnings should be studied so that a pleasing effect from a distance will be the result of their use. Striped awnings are generally popular, especially those of green and blue, with white and buff with red. These stripes are to be found in several widths. A brown and buff combination is a wise selection for the brown bungalow or shingled house in a rambling style of architecture.

A recent departure which promises to be more than popular, even though it is more expensive, is the plain white canvas on which the stripe or design is painted. This style allows a chance for individuality of taste. When the design on white or cream is used the under side is usually painted over with a restful soft green. Authorities say that these painted canvas shades last longer than the ordinary coarsely woven awnings.

In ordering awnings one is apt to decide on a stripe and not designate the width. If a house is of extensive dimensions and stands at the end of a long avenue, drive or walk and is well surrounded with foliage a wide stripe is most effective, while a smaller house with a limited approach calls for a narrow stripe or even a plain material.

Several new awning devices have been brought out. One for use with the casement window which opens outward has a frame with an extra rib or rod near the top, which holds the canvas high and gives freedom to the window.

Dyeing White Shoes.

One way of prolonging the service of white shoes after they have been cleaned many times is to make them tan colored. They can be made a pretty brown by applying saffron. Mix ten drops of saffron with three teaspoonfuls of olive oil. Clean the shoes well before applying the mixture, as all dark spots will show. Apply with a piece of flannel, and after two coats they will look equal to new.

A Sanitary Grater.

The glass grater is new. It is a roughly pebbled slab of glass screwed to a flat back of wood, making it very convenient to handle, as the wood does not slip in holding it. It washes very easily and is pronounced much more sanitary than the old fashioned tin grater.

If, as scientists are now claiming, there really is life in the moon, how the folks there are enjoying the sights down below!

French peasants are moving into the cities, preferring motion pictures to posing for great painters as the men with the hoes.

One of the discouraging features of everyday life is to have to hurry a good story in order to allow a man time to catch a train.

Every time a man tries to show off something gets his goat.

Humor and Philosophy

TOO CAREFUL.

YES, caution is a splendid thing
To have about the place,
And many blunders we would miss,
And oft 'twould save our face,
But many of the things we do
Would fail and come to naught
If we would never push ahead
Except on second thought.

'Tis by the reckless rushing in
Where angels fear to tread
And pulling through by accident
That makes us get ahead.
If we should sit and cogitate
And figure on the cost
Before we made a single move
Our chances might be lost.

A fool for luck, the saying goes,
And, while it isn't true
That only persons win the prize
Whose brains are shy a few,
There's something in the ancient saw,
For some have won success
Who didn't have a single plan,
But rushed ahead by guess.

The man who hesitates is lost
Declared some geezer wise.
The winner doesn't stop to think;
He takes things by surprise.
For when you study doubts begin
To form and multiply,
And if you wait for second thought
You drop the scheme and fly.

Blighted Industry.

Up in the land of polar bears and polar romances one of the leading industries of the simple minded but complex garbed natives has been pointing out the direction in which the pole was supposed to be to the wayfaring discoverer.

For this slight service the simple Eskimo was wont to receive the everlasting gratitude of the explorer and his winter supply of pemmican, with Christmas gumdrops on the side.

Now, this promising industry has been wiped from the face of the frost bitten map, and the only thing left for the simple minded natives is to start a store in the shadow of Greenland's icy mountains for the sale of Andree relics.

Nor need the supply fail him so long as the good right hand of the Connecticut manufacturer holds out. There is no tariff in Greenland, and he can have a supply shipped up every season.

Courting.

"You are such a trial to me, Jack."

"Am I?"

"You are, indeed."

"I shall try to get you convicted."

"Convicted?"

"Being in love with me."

Bad Location.

"Wilson is always talking about his point of view."

"Anything the matter with it?"

"Just one thing."

"What is that?"

"It is only two inches away from his nose."

Only Explanation.

"Did you place your manuscript?"

"No; the editor returned it without reading."

"How do you know?"

"Because he didn't accept it."

NEW STORY OF NAPOLEON

LATEST TRADITION SAYS HE WAS SHOT IN AUSTRIA.

Amazing Tale Is Now Unfolded to the Effect That a Devoted Double of the Emperor Gave Himself Up and Died on St. Helena—Napoleon Himself Died Visiting Son, It Is Said.

Every student of Napoleon is ready to declare on oath that the emperor died on May 5th, 1821, in his narrow chamber at Longwood, St. Helena. A storm was rolling over the island prison, and on its wings, muttering "France—Army—Head of the Army—Josephine!" the most dazzling genius of the modern world passed out of life. To this history posterity has adhered.

We have another and far stranger one to unfold.

Napoleon died, not at St. Helena, but in Austria. He died, not in his bed, with the faithful remnant of his followers beside him, but shot by an Austrian sentry. He died, not as Napoleon, but as an obscure refugee from Italy.

How can we make good a tale so extraordinary?

Napoleon had a double. This double, his very image, had more than once been employed by the emperor to pose for him in one situation or another; sometimes to test the truth of some new story of plot against the great man's life—plots more numerous than history in the main is aware of. To the imperial police the double was known both by sight and by name, though they were not always, of course, in the secret of his comings and goings.

Well, the day comes when, after Waterloo—and the drums of the Old Guard have rolled the dirge of the last march of the last army of Napoleon—the fallen emperor, the cup finally at his lips, must sail, an exile, to the rock in the Atlantic. But he does not sail! It is the devoted double who gives himself in charge to Captain Maitland of the Bellerophon (the Bully Ruffian of the sailorman); the double who settles down with Bertrand, Montholon, Las Cases, to the appalling dreariness of St. Helena.

And Napoleon? What becomes of him? Napoleon, more or less transformed in style and appearance, withdraws secretly to Florence. In Florence he purchases the shop and little business of an optician, and forthwith enters on the most extraordinary phase of the most extraordinary career in Europe. He gains the esteem of the neighbors. The disguise of the Man of Destiny must have lacked something, for they perceived in him a notable likeness to Napoleon, and familiarly bestowed on him that name which had shaken empires. Then, one day, on a sudden, Signor "Napoleone," optician, disappeared. The little shop was closed and shuttered; the little man so curiously resembling the victor of Austerlitz, the victim of Waterloo, no longer stood behind his counter or gossiped in his doorway. Florence, in brief, beheld him no more.

To the new King of France, however, Signor "Napoleone," before departure, had addressed a letter, the contents of which filtered somehow from the throne, and to buy the silence of those persons who had become aware of this missive Louis XVIII. distributed among them a large sum of money. Almost in the same hour a small and rather corpulent individual, fifty years of age or thereabouts, is fired at and killed by a soldier of the Emperor of Austria while attempting to scale a wall of the park of Schoenbrunn. It was at Schoenbrunn, readers will remember, that Napoleon's son and hope, the gentle young Duke of Reichstadt, languished—neglected by his careless mother, Marie Louise—in the most wretched of gilded captivities. Napoleon, always pining for sight and sound of the boy, had stolen to Schoenbrunn to see him.

Not unnaturally, the affair of the sentry's bullet made some stir at the French Embassy. Not unnaturally, the Embassy decided to say nothing whatever on the subject. There is yet a little to relate. The civil registers of the village in Lorraine where the emperor's double was born carry the following legend: "Died at St. Helena," and the date is precisely that of the death of Napoleon. Let it be added that an English lady of the aristocratic world, received in audience at St. Helena by the dethroned monarch of Europe (to whom, in his imperial days, she had been presented at the Tuileries), protested formally that she failed to recognize him in the prisoner of Sir Hudson Lowe.

This story has not, until to-day, been printed in English, and in only one other language in Europe has it ever seen the light. What a subject (were he still among us) for the pen of the elder Dumas, who gave us the most fascinating of all histories of the Man in the Iron Mask—though there is not a word of truth in it!

This most mysterious narrative of Signor "Napoleone," optician of Florence, and the Emperor Napoleon's thrice-attached double, who dies contentedly for his master on the rock in the Atlantic, is surely romantic enough for the most imaginative pen that ever yet has sought to transmute fable into fact. But there is at least one question to which, we fancy, the majority of readers would like an answer: Who, then, wrote the "Memorials of St. Helena"—Napoleon's testimony to mankind? Was it the work of his double?

Birds In Winter.

Though birds have a much higher temperature than a man's—man's is 98, while theirs is 107—they suffer cruelly from the winter cold. In a mutton country it is not uncommon to find sheep with dead birds fastened on their backs. The little, cold creatures snuggle in the sheep's wool to get warm, their feet become entangled in the fleece, and they starve to death.

Thaw To Get His Money.

PITTSBURG, July 16. — After six months of legal battle, Harry Thaw, in a decision handed down by Judge James W. Over in orphans' court yesterday, is awarded the income from his father's estate which has been denied him by the trustees since he was adjudged insane for the slaying of Stanford White. By the decision Thaw gets $160,773. Judge Over says Thaw is legally entitled to the money, despite the fact that alienists declare Thaw is suffering from an exaggerated sense of self, which would make it unwise to commit any large sums of money into his personal charge.

Lassen Peak In Eruption.

REEDING, Cal., July 16. — Black smoke belched a mile high from the crater on Lassen Peak yesterday and then drifted southward before the wind in a banner ten miles long.

The amount of falling ashes was small compared with the great eruption of June 14, although the volume of the cloud was fully as great and the duration of the disturbance longer. The first violence of the outbreak began to dwindle after two hours, though the mountain still boiled smoke. This is the eighteenth eruption since May 30.

To Fence In Italy.

Owing to the amount of smuggling of contraband goods from Switzerland and the consequent loss of revenue, the Italian Government has decided to fence the frontier with metal netting. The netting is about nine feet high, and to it is attached bells, which the moment the netting is touched or trodden on creates such a ringing that all the customs officials are immediately on the alert for some distance along the line.

It has also been decided to increase the number of posts and employes. These officials will be provided with police dogs, the animals being expected to attack and catch smugglers and to fight their dogs.

Punishment In Effigy.

Punishment in effigy was legally practiced in France and with great solemnity up to the time of the first revolution. If the man condemned escaped a dummy was put up in his cell and the entire routine of the law allowed to take its course. The warrant was read to it, and on the day appointed it was conducted to the scaffold in the presence of all the legal functionaries and with all the circumstances of the law. Sometimes the same person was executed in effigy simultaneously in several cities, but that did not exempt him from actual punishment should he be afterward caught. The scaffold was always ready.

Chlorine and Its Discoverer.

Chlorine is perhaps the most important of all gases in commercial chemistry. It is the great bleacher, without which we could have no white linen or white straw hats. It is also the best disinfectant known. It is essential to the manufacture of chloroform, and it is used extensively for the extraction of gold from its ores. Chlorine's value to the world has been incalculable, yet Scheele, the man who discovered it, lived hungry and died a pauper.

The Aurora Borealis.

The aurora borealis, or northern dawn, is an electrical phenomenon which in high northern latitudes, especially in winter, illuminates the skies with streamers of light. As the streams of light have a tremendous motion, they are called in many places the "merry dances." They assume many shapes and a variety of colors, from a pale red or yellow to a deep red or blood color, and in the northern latitudes they serve to illuminate the earth and cheer the gloom of the long winter nights. The connection of the aurora displays with the disturbance of the magnetic needle is now regarded as an ascertained fact.

JACK and Jill went up the hill

But took a chaperon along

When Jack fell down and broke his crown
Said Mrs. G.: "I'm thinking
That was a most suspicious fall—

"And as for Jill, that girl's a pill;
She couldn't well be dafter.

War Had No Terrors For Her.

"I can't understand how it is," said the natty lieutenant, "that you are able to be so calm."

"Why shouldn't I be calm?" replied the beautiful girl who had found a temporary refuge upon the mighty warship.

"I should think the firing of our guns would frighten you. Even men who are not used to them generally exhibit signs of terror, or, at least, of nervousness. They don't appear to disturb you at all."

"Oh, no. I don't mind them. You see, I have become accustomed to such sounds. That's one of the advantages of living where an automobile backfires every few minutes."—Chicago Record-Herald.

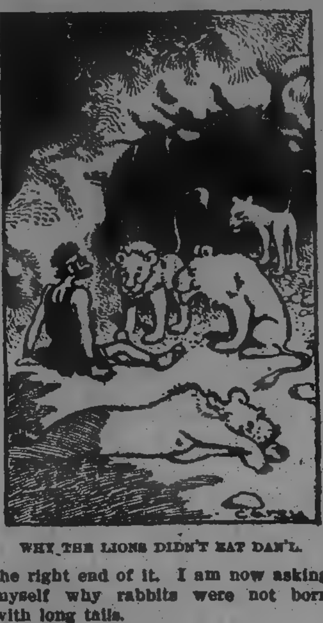
UNCLE LISHA SAYS

Women Would Rule the World If They Had Two Heads

By M. QUAD.

[Copyright, 1914, by Associated Literary Press.]

FOR ten long years I was puzzled to make out why the lions didn't eat Dan'l when he was cast into their den. Then it suddenly occurred to me that they could not have been hungry, and I have worried no more. If you keep at a thing long enough you can get the right end of it. I am now asking myself why rabbits were not born with long tails.



WHY THE LIONS DIDN'T EAT DAN'L.

One night my wife woke me out of a sound sleep to say:

"'Lisha, I forgot to tell you that one of the hens laid an egg this afternoon."

"You don't say?"

"Yes, she did."

"Then we can have fried eggs for breakfast."

"But there is only one."

"But it's seven hours to breakfast. If you will wake me up once an hour to tell me that a hen laid an egg this afternoon there will be six or seven eggs to fry."

Women would rule the world if they had heads at planning.

When Farmer Brown heaped up the measure in selling me a bushel of potatoes I made up my mind that this was an honest world. When Farmer Green sold me a barrel of cider that had been diluted with ten gallons of water I made up my mind that, while this might be an honest world, it was no place for a fool.

When you employ a doctor and he cures you he sends a bill. When you employ one and you die of it he also sends a bill. In the one case it is sent to you; in the other to your widow. It is simply a technicality and should not be taken too seriously.

Mathematics is a curious thing. At the end of last month I said to the man who cares for my horse:

"James, I owe you $30."

"Yes, sir."

"Minus the six dollars' worth of hay and oats you have stolen and sold during the month."

"Yes, sir, but there are two minuses in this problem."

"How is that?"

"Why, if you take out that $6 you are minus me!"

James still holds his job.

When I am awakened at midnight by the yeowling of a cat I wonder whether it is a female or a tom, whether the color is black or white, whether it is my cat or Smith's, and the first thing I know I am asleep and haven't thrown a bottle or a bootjack. There is most always an easy way out.

When I am telling the truth and nothing but the truth and yet am called a liar I get terribly indignant. When I am lying and know that I lie and am called a liar I find myself so mad that I want to kill the party who says I am. I wonder if other men are that way.

There are plenty of men who when in debt to a fellow man dodge him. This is not my way. On the contrary, I manage to meet my creditor two or three times a day and refer to the debt before he can dun me. This prevents him from saying a word and gives me continued leeway. I once stood off a creditor fourteen years by those tactics, and he daily had the happiness of thinking he was to be squared up with.

I saved a would be burglar half an hour's time by informing him from a window that there was no plunder for him in the house, and he went away mad instead of grateful. It disappoints you to meet up with such human nature.

The Reason.

He (teasing)—You married women are great matchmakers.

She (demurely)—Yes. "Misery loves company."—Judge.

Africa's Problem.

Sir H. Rider Haggard, the distinguished novelist and romance writer, who has been visiting South Africa as a member of the Dominions Commission, has had many interesting things to say about the great subcontinent, which he first knew nearly 40 years ago.

At a dinner given in his honor at Maritzburg the other day, Sir Rider in reminiscent vein, first recalled many of his adventures in the Natal of the seventies. Then he turned to the future and the ever-present question of the native population.

Anybody who knew Africa, he said, would feel that it would be most unwise to prophesy that there would be no more trouble ahead, because Africa without troubles would not be Africa. Undoubtedly they had got problems ahead. The white population was not increasing as fast as might be desired, and they had the question of the increase of the native races, which was a serious and difficult question.

A Long Message.

Participating versus Non-Participating Life Policies Again

FIFTEEN YEARS AGO a Publisher of this City at age 43 took out a Ten Pay 15 year Endowment Policy of $2,000, No. 81226 in The Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada paying therefore an annual premium of $187.20.

The Non-Participating Premium would have been $170.40.

The extra paid for profits per year (for 10 years only) was $16.80.

Had this man taken a Non-Participating Policy he would have saved $168.00 extra in premiums paid for profits during the ten years, but he would have lost $620.25 at maturity of Policy as he would have received only $2,000.00 instead of $2,620.25, as he did.

Where is there a man that would not like to invest money at such a rate and that too in the Largest and Strongest Life Insurance Company in the British Empire?

You are invited to call and investigate.

BAD MAN FROM PONTYPOOL

Holds up Three Men at Burketon and Lands in Jail

Bowmanville, July 18. — A clever arrest of Hubert Powell, giving several aliases and his home as Pontypool, was made at Myrtle station about 2 o'clock yesterday morning by John O'Boyle, under instructions from Chief Richard Jarvis, High County Constable, of this town.

A masked man appeared at Henry Jakeman's store, Burketon, about 10 o'clock at night, and held up three men at the point of a revolver, relieved the till of $15, and disappeared into the woods. Chief Jarvis was at once informed of the case and got busy by long distance 'phone with Myrtle.

Powell was brought to Bowmanville by O'Boyle without handcuffs, and appeared before Magistrate William Horsey, and was remanded. He is 19 years old and about five feet tall, and when searched Chief Jarvis found $15.52 in cash, including a marked bill, which was identified by Jakeman, a 32-calibre revolver (loaded) and 15 cartridges, a gold watch and chain with an engraving on the inside case showing it to belong to Pte. J. J. Powell, 2nd Batt. R. C. Regt., from the citizens of Galt, for service to the Queen and Empire in South Africa, dated Galt, Nov. 2, 1900. Two black masks were, with the bills concealed in his boots.

FORGET NONSENCE AND SPEND MONEY

Making Market Hall Fit for the Good Farmers' Wives

WHAT THEY SAY

The market by-law is taking effect. Many chairs were vacant this morning and from the conversation of some of the rural women, it looks as though the City Trust will be renovating the auditorium and hanging out a "Rooms to Let" sign. One woman from Otonabee came out very plainly within hearing distance of a Review scribe and claimed that if the nonsense called a by-law was forgotten and the city would spend a little money in cleaning the tables and making the place look like a market instead of an antique dining room, they would realize better results. The same lady informed a few of her cosufferers that Mary Ann wore a black satin dress to the scene of marketing and after holding down one of the chairs for an hour and a half the dress was "literally destroyed."

At that point the scribe butted in on the tete a tete and asked what they wree going to do about it. He was hastily informed that if the weighing of fowl and other nonsensical clauses in the new law were not struck out, they would send their produce out of the city via parcel post. "How about the eggs?" the Review man inquired. "Well, I'll just tell now," the speaker of the gathering said, "there are buyers around through the country, and I'll sell my eggs to them for two cents less than I would receive at the market in preference to abiding by every law some person who never saw a farm makes. The farmers are the only people who realize what would be the best manner to improve the local market, and why don't they let them?"

Very few of the ladies raised any objection about putting their names on baskets, but they do not like the weighing of fowl, and if they have to they will cease patronizing the local market. By the look of the room this morning they mean what they say.

LAD IN NEW HANDS.

The case of the twelve-year-old boy from Somerville township came up before Magistrate Moore again this morning. The parents of the boy paid the costs of the case, and the boy is to be sent to his aunt in Peterboro for one year. He is to be sent to school regularly and given proper care.—Lindsay Warder.

BY-LAW FOR FENCE VIEWER IS TURNED DOWN

City Dads Hear Mr. O'Connel but Take no Action

The matter of passing a bylaw appointing a fence viewer was laid over for future consideration by the City Fathers last evening.

Mr. Dan. O'Connell, representing property owners of the city, waited on the Council, and he suggested and asked that a fence viewer be appointed. He had written the Council recently in connection with the same. There was a provincial act in existence, and it was a very proper law, that neighbors should have an understanding and each bear his share of the cost in the construction of the various fences. This would be dealt with by the fence viewer. The act provided an inexpensive means for all concerned. The general property owners were anxious that such a law should be carried on in this city. The bylaw framed by City Engineer Gordon, after the same manner of London, appointing the City Engineer, Assistant City Engineer, Works Foreman, and Sanitary Inspector, and others, as fence viewers, could be carried out here.

"I object to the Sanitary Inspector being a fence viewer," said Alderman Green.

When this dissent arose, Alderman Duffus and Mayor Buller suggested that the matter be laid over.

"I have no objection to these men," remarked Alderman Anderson.

"Oh, get some one that is never busy, say, for instance, the plumbing inspector," smiled Alderman Anderson.

The matter was then dropped.

WINNERS OF THE WATCHES GIVEN BY MR. BURNHAM

The highest marks in the county entrance examinations were secured by the following candidates:

Ennismore, S.S. No. 4, Bernice Scollard.

Harvey, Lakehurst S.S. No. 3, Edith Hiscutt.

Smith, Young's Point, S.S. No. 8, Allan Robinson.

N. Monaghan, S.S. No. 1, Peterboro, Ernest A. Payne.

This is not taking into account the pupils in Monaghan who write in Cavan and those in Harvey who write at Bobcaygeon. They are few in number and may not alter the above standing. The result in North Monaghan has not yet come in. Unless some change is made the above are the winners of Mr. Burnham's watches. There has been considerable excitement among the boys and girls as to who would win, as the time-keepers are very much prized and they have been a remarkable spur to intellectual industry.

CUPID BREAKS BARS IN COUNTY JAIL

Ottawa, July 18.—Cupid fluttered in through the great iron gates of Castle Kehoe, Tuesday, and joined together in the holy bonds of matrimony the hands and hearts of Archibald Phillips, formerly of London, England, and Eliabeth Neilson, of Buckingham, Que. Phillips was apprehended about a week ago on a charge of attempting to rob the post office in Ottawa East.

Phillips came to Canada sixteen months ago, when he struck up a friendship with Miss Neilson, whom he met in Ottawa. This friendship grew into a courtship, which had been continued ever since without a break. Phillips strongly protests his innocence and Miss Neilson firmly believes him. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Dr. A. A. Cameron, former pastor of the First Baptist Church.

Following the wedidng ceremony, the bride and groom started off on their unique honeymoon through the corridors of the big institution, until they came to the office, where they received the congratulations of the governor of the jail and his staff of assistants. The honeymoon, however, came to a conclusion here, as the bolted iron door was a sign to the groom that he must proceed no farther until his innocence has been proven. The couple then embraced each other, bestowed the uniform number of kisses upon the lips and cheeks of each other and then were forced to part company.

PUBLICATION OF PRICES BANNED

Result of Quotations on Produce is to Raise Figures, Says Judge.

CHICAGO, July 18. — An injunction restraining the Chicago Butter and Egg Board from publishing prices on butter, eggs and other products was issued yesterday by Federal Judge Landis.

In a suit filed some months ago the Government charged that by publishing prices on the commodities in which it dealt the Butter and Egg Board artificially created prices higher than the market warranted, and violated the federal law prohibiting all acts in restraint of trade. The suit is similar to the recent action against the Elgin Board of Trade, which resulted in the entering of a decree directing that actual sales should alone be quoted and no attempt to fix prices should be made by what was known as the price committee.

OBJECTS TO THE LEVYING OF $100

Owner of Store May Lose Prospective Tenant

A BUSINESS TAX

The City Council were waited on last evening by Mr. McRoberts in regard to the Transient and Traders by-law recently unearthed, which is to the effect that any person carrying on a transient and traders business must take out a license for $100. Mr. McRoberts claimed that he thought this was an injustice. The matter will be dealt with at a future meeting. Mr. McRoberts outlined his claim, stating that he owned a store on Stewart Street. He rented the store to a Mr. Kennedy, who was to start up a grocery business. When he discovered that he must take out a license costing the amount, he refused to take the store and asked Mr. McRoberts to wait on the Council in regard to the matter.

Mr. Gordon pointed out that this amount was all credited to the man in his taxes, and that it was merely a business tax.

"Such a course is hardly just. Why not have the man deposit sufficient to cover his business tax," asked Ald. Langford.

"It was the merchants who resurrected that old by-law," stated Mayor Buller. "It is pretty much of a hardship on the small merchants."

The complaint of Mr. Glover, Knox Street, regarding the overflowing of a ditch was left with the Board of Works.

The communication of J. H. Burnham, M.P., regarding a formal celebration for the opening of the Trent Valley Canal upon completion in the near future was received.

The claim of Messrs. Robinette, Godfrey and Phelan of Toronto, for their client, the Toronto Free Hospital for Consumptives, regarding Bessie Montgomery, was referred to the Legal Committee.

The matter of placing a hydrant and several other small matters was left to Ald. Greene, chairman of the Fire, Water and Light Committee.

On the suggestion of Ald. Duffus, three more drinking fountain mouth pieces, similar to the one outside the Police Station, will be purchased.

"What about the stand pipes? We have no water for our streets in the south end," claimed Ald. Saunders.

The City Engineer stated he had reported that matter to the Water Commissioners some time ago.

"There is something radically wrong," said Ald. Saunders.

"If that is the case, I would suggest that the matter be given immediate attention," said Ald. Johnston.

The matter will be looked into at once.

The application for a grant on behalf of the Boy Scouts for their trip to Toronto Exhibition was left with the Finance Committee. Ald. Greene expressed himself that he did not think they could afford to give any money away.

MISS YORKE IS STILL MISSING

Some Believe Girl Has Been Kidnapped.

TAMWORTH, Ont., July 18.—With the failure of the search parties to reveal anything that would lead to the locating of Miss Blanche Yorke, whose mysterious disappearance has caused so great a sensation here, and because of the general trend of circumstantial evidence sifted from the wild rumors that have prevailed, the theory that the missing young woman is alive and held against her will has gained considerable headway yesterday. Indications point strongly to the girl having been kidnapped during the late evening of Wednesday last week, and taken to some near centre of population.

The story of the auto running up the main street late on the evening of the disappearance, and heading in the direction of the road leading to the girl's home, is being followed up as a clue.

The family is more strongly of the opinion than ever to-day that Blanche is alive, and the friends are optimistic in the hope that she will within a very few days be located. So many rumors are being circulated that it will be something untold of before if in the end one of them does not lead to a clue.

Searching for the body stopped yesterday, partly because the territory has been covered, and partly because the people believe that Miss Yorke is alive. It is understood that a search has also been made in Kingston, and surrounding towns have been asked to keep a lookout.

The first real action in the Yorke mystery took place last night, when County Chief Vankoughnet and a posse left for Brighton in an auto on the receipt of a telegram from that village to the effect that a man named Doherty in that town could give information about the missing girl. The result of the expedition is not yet known.

Resignation of Magistrate Edmison

It is understood that Mr. George Edmison, K.C., has resigned as County Police Magistrate, the resignation to take effect at the end of this month.

ALD. LANGFORD WANTS TO KNOW

Why Tenders Were not Asked for Concrete Pavement

ALD. DUFFUS FAVORS IT

Mayor Opines a Sample on Water St. Would Fail to Please

Evidently the City Council are not settled on the paving question yet. Alderman Langford started the barrel a-rolling last night when he inquired "How is it that the Board of Works did not ask for tenders for solid concrete pavement for the city." He furthered his remarks by stating that to his mind the concrete pavement was a good one. It had proved satisfactory on Chambers street. The city could easily do its own repairs. He could not see why the Council had not arranged for the construction of concrete pavement.

"We may try some of it on Water street, and maybe the residents won't like it so well then," remarked the Mayor. He pointed to the dust and extreme noise of the concrete pavement.

"Concrete is my ideal pavement," said Alderman Duffus.

"I have always been a strong advocate of concrete. Our road-bed is good for the same. I would urgently request the members to take the matter under their serious consideration when the next opportunity arises," was the suggestion of Alderman Johnston.

Mr. Parsons, City Engineer, pointed out that the concrete pavement wore out in a very short time. Various other cities which had tried it had found it a failure as a pavement. The concrete pavement between Walkerville and Windsor was deteriorating very fast.

"The Warren Paving Company refused to accept half of the paving, did they?" asked Alderman McIntyre.

Alderman McIntyre stated that he was greatly in favor of having some of the Warren paving in the city. They would be able to determine which was the best pavement then.

The matter was then dropped.

Bylaws Passed.

On motion of Aldermen Duncan and Saunders, the bylaw authorising the city to borrow $16,967.68 for paving was carried.

On motion of Aldermen Duncan and Saunders, a bylaw authorizing the city to borrow $9,566.20 on debentures was carried.

A bylaw was also passed accepting the contract of Foley & Gleason for street paving.

City Engineer Parsons reported that the northern part of Aylmer street between Brock and Hunter would prove satisfactory when paving, and recommended a few extra inches of concrete for a base.

After a few minutes' discussion it was decided that the extra cost of the extra concrete base would be general and added to the rest of the paving program cost.

FALL SESSION IN BRITAIN

Premier Announces That Commons Will Sit in December.

LONDON, July 18.—Prime Minister Asquith announced in the Commons yesterday that they had decided to hold an autumn session and fixed the date provisionally for the last week in November or beginning in December.

For the third time within a week the Cabinet had another meeting yesterday to consider the Irish situation and allocation of business for the remainder of the session. The Prime Minister, much to the chagrin of the Opposition, refrained from any reference to the lines along which he would aim at a settlement of the Ulster problem when the Lords' amendments came before the House at the beginning of the week.

The press in general are indulging in a great game of guessing as to the probable outcome of next week's debates, but even the Liberal back benchers confess they are entirely ignorant of the Prime Minister's plan.

SAD STORY AT POLICE COURT

Wife Says Husband Will not Support Family

Money for Bread Went for Drink, She Declares

Magistrate Dumble Says Lashes Are Too Good for Him

One of the most pitiful cases was aired in the Police Court this morning when Chris. Bell, an Englishman, was given one week to get work and support his family. His wife, unable to stand in the witness box because of weakness, due it is said to lack of nourishment, told with tears, how her husband had drank the last ten cents they had, to buy a loaf of bread. He had also spent the money they had towards the rent. He had been drinking for some time and during the past few weeks generally left the house in the morning, not returning until midnight, when he would be drunk. They had two small children, one aged eighteen months and the other eight months. Both were sick, due to lack of proper food. The evidences of the ravages of hunger were apparent in the appearance of the wife as she tottered from the box after telling the story of her life, which had been wrecked by the man.

The husband defiantly said that she had no appetite. He denied going home drunk.

"What business have people interfering in my private affairs?" he demanded in an indignant manner.

"Well, I will show you whose business it is," remarked the Magistrate.

"Did you not tell your wife and family that you would not go to work, and that you have refused a $1.75 a day job?" asked Mr. Gordon, who appeared for the wife.

The witness denied that anything of this sort passed between them. The wife recalled said that he had made the statement. Mr. Gordon suggested that three months would probably do the man some good and give the wife a chance to recover and do something for herself.

Magistrate Dumble expressed himself that lashes was too good for brutes of his kind.

Remanded to Jail.

A well known medical man whose appetite for liquor has caused him considerable trouble, was remanded to jail this morning by Magistrate Dumble for one week. The accused claimed that his wife had used the morphine needle on him considerably and that this and not drink was the cause of his downfall.

NEW FIRE ALARMS.

The two new fire alarm boxes for the corner of Park and Charlotte Street and for the corner of Lock and Princess Streets have arrived and the Chief is busy getting them installed. The one on Charlotte will be numbered 37 and the one in the south end 13.

ARRANGED SETTLEMENT ON THE IRISH QUESTION

Liverpool Post Makes Statement Adding That Details Have Yet to be Adjusted —King George Postpones Inspection of Fleet at Spithead

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, July 18.—His great interest in the Home Rule crisis has decided King George to postpone his visit to the monster fleet now lying at Spithead and it is understood when the opportune moment arrives His Majesty will throw his great influence toward the side looking for an amicable settlement.

The belief prevails generally that such a settlement is not far off and the Liverpool Post usually well informed goes beyond others in saying "there is really an arranged settlement of the Irish question. Details have yet to be adjusted but the broad facts can be regarded as fixed."

CABINET CHANGES IN ONTARIO.

THERE ARE various rumors and prognostications going through the press just now about the political situation in Ontario. In the interests of the Conservative party, we think the Tory papers should be heard from before Cabinets set the tune for future whistling. At this writing, the Toronto World and the Peterborough Review are the only Conservative papers in which we have discovered an expression of opinion. It is not a very high compliment to the Tory press of Ontario, that it waits to be bidden to bark like a lot of pupy dogs for a policy chosen by the political bosses that may be good, bad, or indifferent. So far as the Hon. Dr. Reaume is concerned, we have already expressed strong disapproval of his reinstatement in the Cabinet or of his elevation to the Canadian Senate.

Both in Manitoba and in Ontario the people have made two notable pronouncements on the educational policy in these provinces. Ontario has set itself dead against bilingual schools, and the French ridings showed that they entertained no gratitude for Sir James Whitney's policy. Whatever may be the outcome of the imminent Cabinet changes, a strong hand is required to maintain the vigorous policy of Sir James Whitney in educational matters, and, as long as he is Premier, we are content to leave the problem in his hands.

So far as taking men from the Ontario House to the Dominion Parliament is concerned, that has been done before, and, if deemed expedient, we can see no objection. But we emphatically are opposed to Federal Cabinet ministers taking the role of Warwick, the King-maker, in Ontario politics. Constitutionally, the Ontario and Dominion Governments are separate, with certain rules that uphold that principle, and, while some incidents in recent years tend to draw the interests of the dominating parties in each into the same boat, a safe distance must be kept between the two. Upset the balance by a too close relationship, and we have in Canada the beginning of a demoralizing political machine such as exists in the United States, and which enables yellow, Hearst newspapers, trust combinations and political graft to degrade in a great degree the national life of the country. Ontario has its problems, and must maintain its independence to solve those problems in its own way, not at the beck and call of a minister of the Dominion Parliament. The Toronto World seems to think Hon. Frank Cochrane has had too much to say in Ontario politics. Whether this criticism be true or not, we think the reproof should be heeded as a declaration that Ontario will not be led by the nose by any political party. In the meantime we can leave the matter in Sir James Whitney's hands, trusting that the Conservative leaders in the Province of Ontario will recognize the necessity of calling strong men to their councils, of leaving weak ones where they belong, and of running this Province as their own good sense dictates.

PROSPERITY IN SIGHT IN THE WEST.

FROM VARIOUS CENTRES in Alberta and Saskatchewan come accounts of renewed activity in industrial enterprises. In Edmonton a garment factory reports that in 1913 it doubled its 1912 business; it now employs 150 men and women and has a yearly payroll of $75,000. The output is shirts, overalls, pants, and workmen's clothing.

A Portland cement company states that plans are being made to enlarge the 1,500-barrel plant at Marlboro, Alberta, by installing a fourth kiln with a capacity of 500 barrels a day. The plant will be overhauled during the winter months. The company has 20,000 barrels of cement on hand with orders for delivery during the next ninety days.

In Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, a flour milling plant is being equipped with $50,000 of modern machinery.

In Medicine Hat and Radcliff, Alberta, nearly all the industries are running full, even under the adverse business conditions prevailing in various sections of the country. In cities like Edmonton, Medicine Hat and Radcliff, where manufacturing establishments have been built up under the stable trade policy which has existed for the last few years, the falling off in business and the problem of unemployment have been less in evidence than anywhere in the West.

AN ALABAMA NEGRO has been sentenced to death eight times, due to changes in a case of murder brought against him. One more sentence will be fatal if there is any virtue in the proverbial nine lives.

EVOLUTION OF INSURANCE.

IN AN ADDRESS before the American Association of Accident Underwriters by Insurance Commissioner Preus, of Minnesota, he said: "Insurance of every kind was initially a mutual system whereby a number of individuals agreed to reimburse each individual in the event of loss. Insurance today is systematized trusteeship. The same underlying principles constitute insurance as they did 1,200 years ago.

"The evolution of insurance has been different in various countries of the world. In one place we find that it is the belief of people that in the event of the death of a provider of a family the duty rests upon the state to care for his dependents. In another we find that a man who owns property should pay to his community a tax in order that he may rebuild his own property in case of fire. Again, we find in another country that the state assumes the duty of granting old age pensions. Again you find that industries are charged with the duty of caring for their sick and injured.

"But, insurance-wise, the highest morality has been reached in that one land where a man neither buys life insurance, fire insurance or accident insurance at the end of a stick, but as the result of his own regard for his dependents, his financial standing in the community, and his continued personal property."

LABOUR LEGISLATION IS NEEDED.

A CASE AROSE in Montreal the other day which has been repeated in other Canadian cities with varying degree. Some Russians stated that forty of them, a fortnight ago, paid $7 each to an employment agency in St. James Street as a registration fee for a job, although the card which they received in return from the proprietor stated that such a fee was limited to $1. Later, this gang of Russian laborers called at the agency and paid $2.64 each for their tickets to a lumber camp job, three and a half hours' journey from Montreal by C. P. R. They left shortly for the camp, and, on arriving, were jeered at and told to clear out.

It is stated that the fine for such cases, being only twenty-five dolars, enables the sharks who prey on these innocent foreigners, to break the law with impunity. It is notorious that foremen exploit foreigners ruthlessly, and the increasing number of cases of this nature shows the necessity of heavier penalties for offences of this kind, as well as more adequate government supervision of the labour market. How long Canada will be a sufferer under present conditions we cannot say, but we hope to see some labour legislation in the next session of Parliament that will provide a remedy.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THE RETIREMENT of H. Foster Chaffee from the Canada Steamship Lines, Limited, due to ill-health, will be regretted by a large number of friends he has made in the twenty-five years he has been connected with lake navigation. As passenger traffic manager, he became well known to the press as well as the travelling public, and all trust that the contemplated change of climate will restore his health.

Montreal's Shortcomings.
Montreal News.

Montreal has fewer parks and playgrounds than any other city on this continent—for its size. Its monuments are few and insignificant. It yet has to boast its public library—the first city in the Dominion! In other words the metropolis of Canada confesses herself soulless. Her public structures are tawdry and crude, and smack of gilt gingerbread, while, if there be anything simple, dignified and architecturally veracious, it is disgraced by its miserable jerry-like juxtaposition."

New Times.
James Russell Lowell.

New times demand new measures and new men;
The world advances and in time out grows
The laws that in our father's days were best;
And, doubtless, after us some purer scheme
Will be shaped by wiser men than we,
Made wiser by the steady growth of truth.
The time is ripe, and rotten-ripe, for change;
Then let it come; I have no dread of what;
Is called for by the instinct of mankind.
Nor think I that God's world would fall apart
Because we tear a parchment more or less;
Truth is eternal, but her effluence,
With endless change, is fitted to the hour;
Her mirror is turned forward to reflect
The promise of the future, not the past.

"Smiling Images."
Colliers.

We flayed—in a recent paragraph—the man who is nothing. But, even with the aid of Rolland's "Jean-Christophe," we made no more complete job of it than Stevenson once did in four sentences

It is better to be a fool than to be dead. It is better to emit a scream . . . . than to be entirely insensible to the jars and incongruities of life, and take everything as it comes in a forlorn stupidity. Some people swallow the universe like a pill, they travel on through the world, like smiling images pushed from behind. For God's sake, give me the young man who has brains enough to make a fool of himself!

Here is one of the most tremendous indictments ever penned against the human zero. Remember this: a corpse is the only absolutely blameless thing in the world—and the least effective. Dante dedicated a special circle of his Inferno to such as these. The one unforgivable sin is—not to sin—but to lead a posthumous life.

THE OLD PRAYER

By Walt Mason

When the evening shadows fall, oftentimes do I recall other evenings, far away, when, aweary of my play, I would climb on granny's knee (long since gone to sleep has she), clasp my hands and bow my head, while the simple lines I said, "Now I lay me down to sleep, I pray the Lord my soul to keep." Journeyed long have I since then, in this sad, gray world of men; I have seen with aching heart, comrades to their rest depart; friends have left me, one by one, for the shores beyond the sun. Still the Youth enraptured sings, and the world with gladness rings, but the faces I have known all are gone, and I'm alone. All alone, amid the throng, I, who've lived and journeyed long. Loneliness and sighs and tears are the wages of the years. Who would dread the journey's end, when he lives without a friend? Now the sun of life sinks low; in a little while I'll go where my friends and comrades wait for me by the jasper gate. Though the way be cold and stark, I shall murmur, in the dark, "Now I lay me down to sleep, I pray the Lord my soul to keep."

JOY RIDING

JOE O'CONNOR says that everybody is born with an Adam's apple and a speed mania, only they don't jest show up on everybody. Maybe Joe's right but I'm doubtin' like fury if some fellers would travel faster than a dog-trot if they had the means ter do it. I ain't sayin' as this is general but there are cases sech as I peak of. The only time Bill Jones ever rid on a railway train he complained of gettin' to his destination too soon which was characteristic of Bill 'cause he figgered thet life consisted pretty much of seein' all ye could and takin' yer time in doin' it. I don't know which is best to go too fast or go too slow, but I dinged-well know which is safest.

TO OPEN NEW HOTEL ON GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC

Two vice-presidents of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, Mr. Morley Donaldson and Mr. J. E. Dalrymple, have just attended the opening of Canada's largest and most modern summer hotel. This is the Minaki Inn, situated on the Winnipeg River one hundred and fifteen miles east of Winnipeg; three hundred and thirty-four miles west of Fort William, on the main line of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. The railway officers were accompanied by many prominent bankers and business men of the city of Winnipeg. Previous to the building of the Grand Trunk Pacific, the site where the big hotel now stands was a favorite camping ground of the Indian tribes, who called the surrounding country in the Ojibway language "Mee-naw-kee" meaning "Beautiful Country." The big wigwam of these wise Indians has been superseded by a hotel that accommodates 350 guests in surroundings of elegance and comfort. The Indian took a bath when he fell into the river, but the present day Minaki guest has a bath attached to his room; in place of the camp fire, there is a fairy land of electric lights; the bark canoe pulled up on the sandy beach has given place to a modern steel constructed two-storey boat house, filled with craft of stout timbers and safe construction. Mr. W. P. Hinton, Asst. Passenger Traffic Manager of the Grand Trunk Pacific, told the guests at the formal opening banquet that the aim in building the hotel was to supply a holiday home for Winnipeg business men and their families, where all the comforts and conveniences of the metropolitan hotel could be obtained. The hotel was to be managed by the Canada Railway News Company. A novel feature of the opening was an exhibition of moving pictures depicting scenes in connection with the building of the Grand Trunk Pacific and the linking up of steel on the Mountain Division this spring.

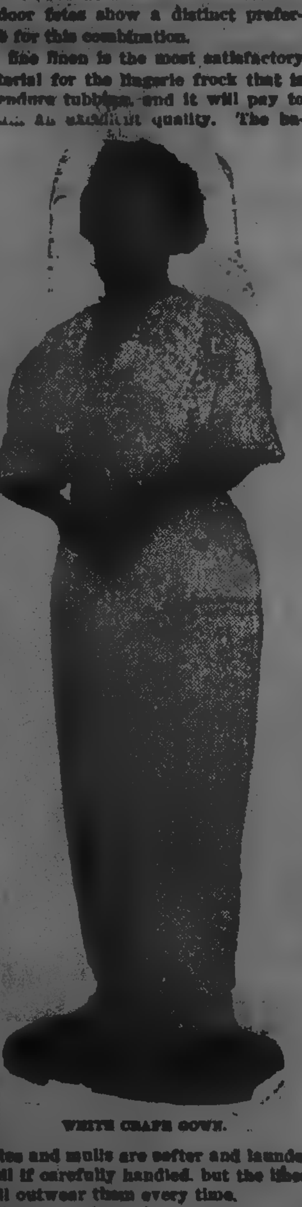
FOR THE ELDERLY WOMAN.

Black and White Fabrics Make Suitable and Stylish Summer Gowns.

After all its riot of color Paris is showing a marked tendency to return to black and white, always a favorite color combination with Parisiennes. Gowns seen at the races and various outdoor fetes show a distinct preference for this combination.

A fine linen is the most satisfactory material for the lingerie frock that is to endure tubbing, and it will pay to obtain an excellent quality. The batistes and mulls are softer and launder well if carefully handled, but the linen will outwear them every time.



WHITE CRAPE GOWN.

Various other sheer cottons have come into popularity. Swiss and organdie are, of course, old favorites, but their crispness, once their chief merit, has made them yield place somewhat to the softer mulls and batistes and linens, though they are still liked. The cotton nets, voiles and crapes are more recent arrivals and have achieved decided popularity.

These launder well, are easily handled and are very soft, graceful and durable despite their sheerness, and they lend themselves admirably to simple forms of trimming, although they may be made very elaborate with hand embroidery.

The cotton nets come in varying meshes, in wide widths and are not extremely expensive. Frequently one sees a frock made entirely of the net and quite devoid of trimming save for scalloped or picot edges or edges hemstitched.

The fashions of the moment are of a character that make it difficult to select for elderly women costumes that will be both fashionable and dignified. For the woman whose figure is more than a little plump the gown illustrated here is both becoming and smart. This tub frock is carried out in white cotton crape trimmed with venise lace. The long front line, the gore over the hips and the long points in the blouse give a cleverly contrived effect of slenderness. The gown fastens invisibly down the front by means of closely set snappers. A touch of black is given to the blouse by means of the black velvet ribbon girdle and the band of black velvet ribbon across the vestee. Crochet ornaments and crochet buttons decorate the garment.

TOWELING APRONS.

They Are Useful in Many Household Emergencies.

The newest idea for an apron is one made of toweling. The kind that can be purchased by the yard, with stripes or wide stripes at each side, is used. The blue barred towelling also can be turned into attractive aprons.

These toweling aprons are usually made with a bib and can be used for sewing, housework or chafing dish aprons. Of course they have one or two large pockets, a necessary adjunct to all serviceable aprons.

The edge is sometimes fringed, which makes a very good finish, or it is simply hemmed, using the French method, which makes the stitches invisible.

The use of Turkish toweling made into aprons has been discovered by young mothers, as it is just the thing to wear when giving baby his bath.

Convicts' Secret Society.

Astonishing facts are published by the Department of Justice of South Africa, showing that native convicts have been binding themselves together in gangs for criminal purposes and have been recruiting in mine compounds.

Their organizations comprise a king, a judge, a fighting general, a medical officer, warriors and younger natives. The organizations hold tribal trials and decree punishments, sentencing to death, in some cases by stabbing with a sharpened nail through the shoulders, by strangling with a wet towel or by putting powdered glass in the victim's food. More usual punishments are knocking out the front teeth, especially in the case of police informers. The organizations terrorize natives to become members of the gangs.

The prison department is adopting rigorous measures for the suppression of the gangs, which originate chiefly in the prisons, whence their king—a Zulu, who recently recanted—used to issue orders by convicts who were discharged and to receive messages from natives entering the prisons. His orders were binding on the organizations, which were chiefly Zulu.

Milady's Mirror

Sparkling Eyes.

If you want sparkling eyes you must study these important health essentials. Your eyes will not look bright if you don't keep well. Sitting in stuffy rooms all day long with the windows hermetically closed, eating things that don't agree with you, neglecting to take exercise of any kind at all—all this going against the health laws—will make your eyes dull and heavy.

If you care for your health take regular walks, eat food that agrees with you and have your rooms well ventilated day and night. Besides, you will be doing not only much toward the attainment of health, but of eye beauty as well. There is nothing that makes the eyes sparkle like perfect health.

Orange juice works wonders in making the eyes bright. Perhaps that is because this wholesome fruit is so good for the liver. Try taking a wineglassful of orange juice every morning upon rising. There is nothing like it for brightening the eyes.

Never neglect sore eyes and red lids. The latter are fatal to eye beauty. When your eyes feel strained bathe them night and morning with an eye cupful of water in which a pinch of boracic powder has been dissolved. Be careful to dry the lids afterward, though, with a piece of clean cotton wool.

Bathing in salt and water is very good for red lids. You should try it if you have never done so.

For a Sallow Skin.

If you find that one of your prettiest gowns has ceased to be becoming because of a newly developed tendency to sallowness add baked lemons to your diet and practice faithfully each night and morning the following exercise:

Stand with heels together. Now advance the left foot so that the heel is somewhat in advance of the toe of the right. Raise the hands above the head, palms facing forward, and, turning the body at the waist, throw the arms out and down to touch the floor at the right side.

Repeat ten times; then advance the right foot and attempt to touch the floor at the left side. Never mind if you cannot touch it the first trial; it may be weeks before you succeed, but in the meantime the color will be coming back to your cheeks.

Aromatic Tooth Paste.

This recipe for a tooth paste will be found useful in ordinary cases, but if you have allowed the tartar to remain on the teeth for some time it will be necessary for you to go to your dentist and have him remove the same for you. Do not let it stay on, for it will surely cause the teeth to decay.

For the paste take orris root powder, eight ounces; myrrh powder, eight ounces; oil of cloves, two drams, oil of lemon, two drams, and oil of rose, thirty drops, with solution of carmine sufficient to color and honey enough to form paste.

You can use the tooth paste for the ordinary cleansing of the teeth.

Hardening the Gums.

Peroxide of hydrogen will be found a great help in keeping the gums firm and healthy. It should be held in the mouth until it foams a little. It is antiseptic and will kill the many varieties of bacilli that infect the mouth and throat.

Children should be taken to a dentist at least twice a year and oftener when new teeth are coming. They should be taught to use dental floss after each meal. They should not be allowed to use soft toothpicks nor to pick the teeth with pins or metal of any sort. All crooked teeth should be straightened and the mouth kept sweet and clean by constant attention.

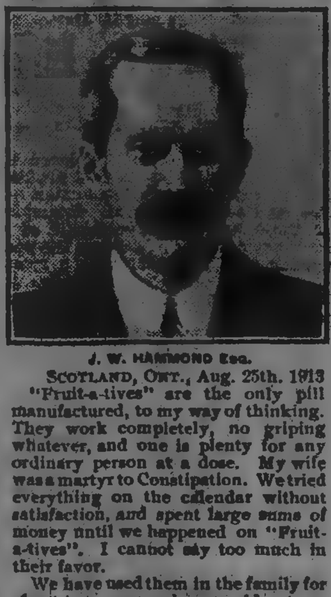
"Fruit-a-tives" Keeps Young And Old in Splendid Health



J. W. HAMMOND Esq.

SCOTLAND, ONT., Aug. 25th. 1913

"Fruit-a-tives" are the only pill manufactured, to my way of thinking. They work completely, no griping whatever, and one is plenty for any ordinary person at a dose. My wife was a martyr to Constipation. We tried everything on the calendar without satisfaction, and spent large sums of money until we happened on "Fruit-a-tives". I cannot say too much in their favor.

We have used them in the family for about two years and we would not use anything else as long as we can get "Fruit-a-tives".

Their action is mild, and no distress at all. I have recommended them to many other people, and our whole family uses them".

Right Method of Soaking Clothes

One school of laundresses advocates soaking clothes for only an hour or so. These advocates of short soaking say that long soaking distributes the dirt throughout the fabric of the cloth and makes it hard to wash out. Short soaking, they say, loosens it sufficiently to make it easy to get out.

Of course there are housekeepers who have always soaked Monday's laundry all through Sunday night, and the clothes worn in their houses have been as white as snow. Their method is quite satisfactory to them.

But the short soak method might be tried with benefit in cases where it is inconvenient to sort the clothes and put them in water ten or twelve hours before they are to be washed. This is the method: Sort the clothes carefully and dip those that are very much soiled into hot soda water — made with a tablespoonful of washing soda in three gallons of soft water, or a tablespoonful and a quarter of the soda in the same amount of hard water. Wring the clothes out and put them in soapy water to soak. Don't put any ammonia or other alkali in the soaking water. The soda is sufficient. Yet it is not strong enough to weaken the fabric of the cloth.

It is a good plan to use water of an even temperature all through the washing process, especially for articles made of cloth with a delicate texture. For violent changes of temperature cause fabrics to "full."

Rinse clothes thoroughly and quickly in several changes of water. This makes them fresh and clean.

If clothes have become very yellow, through long lying or "disuse" or from perspiration in the summer, add a tablespoonful of kerosene to every gallon of water when they are boiling.

A good way to cover ironing-boards is with slip covers. First cover the ironing board on both sides with thick flannel, old blanket or some other heavy padding. Cover both sides smoothly so that both can be used, sewing the padding securely in place along one edge. Then make a slip of white cotton just big enough to slip over the board. It is better to leave the small end open, hemming it neatly, than to close it in bag fashion, as the open sort is smoother. Tack the other end, the big end, with thumb tacks. An ironing board covered in this way can be used on both sides.

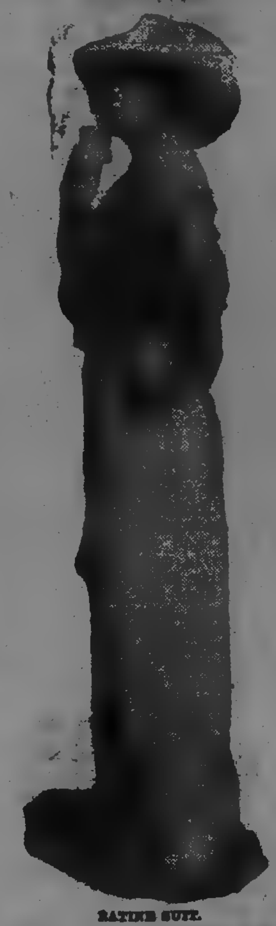
SEASONABLE SUITS.

Combinations of Colors and Materials Are Modish.



RATINE SUIT.

Combinations are popular this season, even in tub frocks. Not only may two or more colors be united in one costume, but two or more different materials may be used. The frock illustrated here has a separate skirt and coat effect that makes it very acceptable for street wear. The skirt is of white and the coat in rose colored ratine. Very chic are the little collar of soft white embroidery, panama hat and the white buttoned boots.

The woman who is fastidious in regard to her attire does not neglect the small details of dress. Smart looking colonial pumps add a chic detail to her appearance. Gloves, pocketbook and petticoat are all important features of the costume. Convenient gloves for summer are washable ones of the slip on variety. These may be easily cleaned in lukewarm water and soap.

Petticoats are scant, but cut so that they do not catch the ankles in walking. A satisfactory one for wear with the summer suit is of white satine scalloped around the bottom. This may be laundered and will wear better than one of silk.

ROBBING WOMEN OF THEIR HEALTH

Anaemia Unless Checked Passes Into Hopeless Decline

Anaemia is like a spectre that steals on you unawares and drives all happiness out of existence. It is a thief that robs you of your life and energy. Thousands of women in this country are the victims of anaemia (that is, bloodlessness), which spares neither rich nor poor, young or old. It robs woman of her health, her vitality, her beauty — of everything that gives a woman her charm. The chief symptoms of this trouble include a distaste for food, prostrating headaches, extreme languor, loss of weight, nervousness, pale cheeks, lips, and gums, heart palpitations, dizziness and a constant feeling of wretchedness.

The only way to effect a cure is to increase the blood supply—to make it pure, rich, and red. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have saved thousands of young girls and women from the early fate that threatened them through anaemia's ravages, for these pills enrich the blood, stimulate the circulation, nourish the nerves, and restore the energy and perfect health that make women attractive. If you are a victim of bloodlessness in any way, do not let it run into a hopeless decline, but begin the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills today. The following bit of evidence proves the worth of this medicine. Mrs. Maurice Sims, Liverpool, N. S., says: "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have been a blessing to me. About two years ago I was so badly run down that I had to give up all work and go to bed. My husband and parents were much worried about me as they thought I was going into consumption. The doctor who was attending me changed his medicine several times, but it did me no good, and I began to feel very much discouraged myself. One day a friend advised me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I decided to do so. In a few weeks I felt much better, and I continue taking the pills for a couple of months until I was again in perfect health. I believe that if I had not taken Dr. Williams' Pink Pills I would not have survived, and I shall always be very grateful for what they have done for me."

You can get these pills from any dealer in medicine or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Few men get far enough up the ladder of fame to make them dizzy.

FOR HOUSEWIVES

NEW TOMATO RECIPES.

A flower salad of tomatoes makes an extremely pretty garnish. Select only well-shaped tomatoes, then draw a star on the top of each with a sharp knife and turn the points gently back on the tomatoes to resemble tulips. Put a dab of mayonnaise in the centre of each, and arrange them in the salad bowl on crisp lettuce leaves or a bed of watercress, with slices of cucumber laid between.

Yellow tomatoes make another pretty salad. Scald and peel twelve or eighteen and pile them on a dish like plums. Garnish with young lettuce leaves and pour over them the following sauce:

Mix well in a cup one tablespoonful of pure olive oil, one saltspoonful of salt and half the quantity of pepper, then add, stirring all the time, two tablespoonfuls of oil and one of vinegar, and if the flavor is liked two drops of onion juice.

TOMATOES IN ASPIC.

Take round tomatoes (not too big) and scoop out a bit of the fruit from the stem end, and fill with a mayonnaise sauce and chopped hard boiled egg, but do not let the filling stand out beyond the fruit.

Now put small moulds or cups on ice, and pour in one-eighth of an inch of clear aspic jelly. When set, place a tomato (the filled side uppermost) into each mould, and pour more jelly round it and over it. Ice well, then turn out the tomatoes on a dish, garnish with sliced lettuce or watercress, and serve with a mayonnaise sauce.

TOMATO PUDDING.

Scald, peel and slice eight tomatoes; squeeze out three-quarters of their juice into a bowl through a cloth. Then chop them up with two tablespoonfuls of breadcrumbs, a little salt, sugar and pepper, adding a tablespoonful of melted butter, and mix well together. Then pour into a well buttered mould and put the lid on. Place the mould in a pot of boiling water and boil hard for an hour, and turn out on a dish.

Meanwhile heat the tomato juice, season with sugar, salt and pepper, and mix in one tablespoonful of butter rolled in flour, boil one minute, then pour over the pudding and serve very hot.

Escaped From Life in Turkish Harem

The life which some of the Turkish women have to endure in the harlems is becoming intolerable, now that advanced ideas have taken root among them.

Quite a stir was created a few days ago when a Turkish young lady fled from her home with her husband in full pursuit.

The lady, a daughter of the once powerful Izzet Pasha, who now lives in Paris, received an European education, and was given by her father in marriage at the age of 17 to a Turkish grandee, who already had other wives in his harlem.

The young lady endured the life for eight months, and then fled. Disguised as a servant she tramped for eight hours to the Constantinople harbor, where she embarked on a ship shortly before its departure. Hot upon her heels came her husband, who tried to make his wife return with him, but who was given to understand by the captain that the young lady would not be delivered from the ship.

The latter has sufficient presence of mind to obtain a confirmation from her husband, in the presence of the ship's officers, that her jewels, worth over $30,000 were her own personal property. Izzet Pasha, who was informed of his daughter's flight, at once hastened to Trieste, where she had disembarked, and, accompanied by police, went to the hotel where she was staying.

But the fugitive remained adamant to all his entreaties, and would not return to the harem even though she was promised the fullest personal liberty. The threat to disinherit also failed to make her alter her resolution.

She now spends most of her time at Trieste in company of two Levantine ladies, the wives of local officials of high rank, who have taken up her cause.

NATURE AND MEANING OF WEALTH

A Short Article on Business Economics.

(By Professor W. W. Swanson.)

A knowledge of the principles of economics is essential to every man who is engaged, directly or indirectly, in the affairs of the business world. Most men, unfortunately, are inclined to conduct their affairs by rule-of-thumb ; but in the keen competition met with in the field of modern business, it is becoming more and more necessary for the business man to have a working knowledge of the economic principles involved. These principles are as operative in business as natural laws in the physical world. A knowledge of the laws of nature is essential for carrying on great business enterprises, transportation for example ; but no less essential is a working knowledge of the economic factors operating in the modern business world.

Some men boast of their "practical" knowledge, and scoff at such abstractions as laws, principles and underlying causes. Yet the most practical men, although they may not realize it, are generally the most opinionated theorists. They work upon the basis of theory, and apply principles to their business with greater or less success year in and year out. The mublest of enterprises does the same thing.

The trapper in the back woods who saw a flock of wild ducks winging their rapid way southward in the early autumn, deduced the fact that winter would set in early, and laid his plans accordingly. He rushed in supplies by boat and trail, and was still busy with his work when the iron hand of winter stayed the proceedings. Supplies were low, but prices were high ; and he reaped the benefit. A simple illustration, to be sure, but it hammers home the point. It pays to understand the laws of nature, and business laws. Such knowledge compels success.

Aside from the old haunting, speculative curiosity which is inborn in man which has made itself felt from time immemorial in Greek and Barbarian bond and free, the modern man feels more than ever the absolute necessity of grasping knowledge for its own sake. Knowledge is power—a dynamic, irresistible force that makes for success in business as well as in every other sphere of human activity."

What is the Science of Economics ?

Economics is that science which deals with the production, distribution and consumption of wealth. But it must be understood that the social point of view is uppermost in the mind of the economist. That is to says he studies wealth because of its bearing upon the prosperity of the individual in particular, and of mankind in general.

But wealth is also the subjectmater of other fields of human investigation—of law, of ethics, of politics. It is, therefore, from a particular point of view that the economist approaches his work. His view is that of market value. Any thing, fact or condition, that affects value in the market comes within the scope of economic investigation. We may then define economics, in the light of what has been said, as that science which deals with the problems of market value. That is to say, the economist desires to learn why a commodity has value in the first place, and secondly, why its value is as great as it is. A study of the first problem involves the question of production, of the forces causing market values to arise ; a study of the second phase of the problem—namely, why values are as great as they are—leads us into the field of distribution, of wealth, and explains why labor receives its particular reward, why interest on capital rises and falls, and why rents fluctuate under varying conditions. A knowledge of the principles involved in each case is of the greatest value to the business man producing goods under conditions that are constantly changing, and permits him to adjust his output to meet the particular demands of the market.

Classification of Wealth.

Since our science deals with goods in their value aspect, it is necessary to examine carefully the nature of economic goods, or wealth.

It is perfectly clear that goods that exist in superfluity, that the free, do come within the scope of our inquiry. Such goods as air, sunlight, water, and so forth, are generally free, and hence have no market value. As they have no market value, they do not fall within the scope of economic investigation. It it not that the economist minimizes their importance ; he recognizes that they are just as essential—perhaps more so—for the happiness, health and prosperity of the people as are economic goods. But, as they are free to all, they do not present any problems of direct interest to him—that is, problems that arise from a study of market conditions and market values.

The goods which form the subject-matter of his investigations, are those that are not free, and that satisfy a human want. Both these conditions must be present before market value can rise.

There may be goods that are relatively few in number, and yet valueless, because there is no demand for them. There are such things as scarce nuisances — that is "goods" that may exist in relating firmness, but yet have no market value because there is no demand for them. Thus, the first essential for the emergence of value in an object is, that it shall satisfy a human need.

The second is ,that it shall not exist in superfluity, that it is not so abundantly distributed that there is more of it than is necessary to supply the demand. We may, therefore, define wealth, as all goods which satisfy a human want, and that are limited relatively to the demand for them.

Economic Goods Not All Material.

Economic goods may be divided into two great classes. In the first category are placed all goods that are material, limited in amount, and that satisfy a human need. Examples of such are : houses, clothes, furniture, coal mines, stocks and bonds, and so forth.

In the second class are placed all those immaterial goods that are limited in number, satisfy a human desire, and are immaterial. Examples of these are : the good-will of a business, a doctor's practice, the connection of a promotor with a group of financiers, etc.—in a word, intangible goods, that may be bought and sold.

National and International Wealth.

In a sense, we may include in the sum total of a nations' wealth more than can be counted in from the combined wealth of its individuals citizens. Thus, a good climate, favorable ports proximity to the world's markets, the degree of enlightenment of its people are all part of the nation's wealth, because these factors have a direct or indirect bearing upon the prosperity and happiness of the people as a whole. And so, there are international possessions that make for the progress and prosperity—science, art, and literature, as well as all means and methods of facilitating international intercourse and trade. Therefore, the growth in knowledge, and the progress of all nations is of vital interest to the prosperity and happiness of each.—Journal of Commerce.

SLAVES IN NORTH AFRICA

Slavery is practically abolished in every civilized nation on the earth. There are some relics of it in certain colonies, which the home governments are striving earnestly to sweep away. It is reported that the French colonial office has at last succeeded in abolishing the slave markets of Morocco. A Paris paper charges that 3,000 slaves are imported into Morocco every year. Recently, Premier Asquith of England received a memorial signed by such names as Lord Cromer, Lord Curson and Mr. Bryce, asking for some government action to suppress this traffic, which is conducted over boundaries controlled by England. Nowhere has our modern civilization or our modern Christianity more powerfully manifested itself than in the destruction of physical slavery, and the guarantee of intellectual, political, moral and religious liberty.—Christian Herald.

Three More Bodies Taken From Empress

Rimouski, Que, July 18.—Three bodies were recovered yesterday from the Empress of Ireland, two men and one child being found on the deck near the first cabin parlor. One is the body of the quartermaster, and the other, by his uniform, is thought to be a steward of the first cabin. The little child, aged about four years, was found clasped in the arms of the steward, as if the latter was trying to save it.

The divers have entered the first cabin saloon by the side doors on the promenade deck. They could not do much work inside as the doors are blocked with cushions, chairs, etc.

Work towards penetrating into the purser's room is proceeding, but this is a very hard task, this cabin being in the centre of the ship and thirty feet from the side.

Divers now equipped with six-feet sticks, terminating with a grip on which is fixed an electric searchlight. They will try to break the windows in the staterooms, with a hammer and then with their sticks they will try to search the interior of the rooms.

Russian Dogs Are Trained for the Battlefield

Dogs have become real factors in police work and in war.

Especially is this true in Russia, which country has always inclined to the actual employment of trained dogs for various purposes.

It is scarcely five years since M. Lebedeff and his enthusiastic co-workers inaugurated the scientific training of police dogs in Russia, yet M. Lebedeff was able to announce a few days ago that during that period over 3,000 criminals had been tracked by dogs and arrested in St. Petersburg and district alone.

Recently, a series of competitive trials for dogs were held on the Semenoff Racecourse. There were close upon 300 entries belonging to the army, the police, the railway companies, and other institutions. Among them was the veteran Treff (7½ years, now working in Moscow), who received an ovation on his appearance and gained a substantial award. Major Richardson, the English expert, was one of the judges.

The dogs used in Russia for military and police purposes are principally Airedales, sheepdogs, and Pinchers.

Popular interest centred in the army contingent furnished by the Life Guard Hussars the Preobrajensky and Ismailovsky Guards, and other regiments. Many of the trials were performed under fire, and only a few of the younger dogs showed any trepidation. The dogs, when ordered, left the firing line, and pelted away to fetch reserves of ammunition. They returned to their masters with 100 or more cartridges carried in bags on their backs.

When searching on the battlefield the Russian dogs have also been trained to bring back the caps of the wounded to their keepers.

A relay race for message-carrying was a picturesque and successful Richardson doubts whether such a service would be of utility save in peace time. The dogs also draw miniature Maxims which carry as far as a rifle.

Sale of Remedies for Headache!

There are more ZUTOO tablets for headache sold in this country than all other remedies combined. Think how good these tablets must be to have such an immense sale.

Dealers could not sell them nor would people buy ZUTOO tablets in such large quantities, were they not what all users say they are, that is, a perfectly harmless and reliable cure for headache.

Do YOU use these tablets which so many people have chosen as best ? If you do not, it is your next move. 25c at dealers

TRADES AND LABOR COUNCIL

Notes by Official Scribe.

There was a remarkably good attendance at the Trades and Labor Council this week, the soaring tendencies of the thermometer apparently not causing the delegates to shirk duty. The newly-formed local of Hod Carriers and General Laborers were well represented, their delegates are not novices when it comes to a display of union sentiment.

The City Clerk Writes.

Mr. S. R. Armstrong sent two letters in answer to requests from the Council. One was to the effect that in future more than one firm will have the privilege of tendering for municipal work, the other that a nine-hour day clause has been inserted in the paving contracts.

"John Bull" Publishes the Facts.

Representative Wm. Duggan called attention to the fact that the widely read journal "John Bull" had published facts concerning the present conditions of Canada's labor market, acknowledging the same from Secretary Wm. Stevens.

Labor Day Parade.

A strong committee was nominated by President Hartley to look after the necessary arrangements for a fitting celebration of Labor Day. New blood is anxiously sought as the old timers feel that their range of vision could possibly be evidenced to the benefit of all concerned by the infusion of fresh ideas.

The Independent Labor Party.

This subject was brought up again, and the foundation work was proceeded with as the entire membership of the council seemed embued with the one idea, viz., that Peterboro working men should try and place a representative with Allan Studholme in the Provincial House, also with Alphonse Verveila in the Dominion House, to say nothing of members on the City Council purely elected by the labor vote. Plans for the awakening of the working populace was discussed, and men who have toiled along these lines told of rebuffs which nevertheless must not deter from the desired goal.

Next meeting August 5.

Stoney Lake Breezes

The proprietor of "Bellevidere," Mr. R. J. Lennox, has [illegible] in upper Stoney Lake. Each season sees many improvements made. This year a large annex has been constructed on the hill behind the main building, which will materially increase the accommodation.

The dining room has been remodeled as well as the reception room, and the whole redecorated.

The Cottagers Association of Upper Stoney Lake are to be congratulated for the way they keep things going, nothing seems to be neglected nor allowed to get into a state of disrepair. Their regattas are always successful and well managed.

The following have registered at the Crowe's Landing hostelry:

Mr. Wm. Harris, Toronto; Mr. V. R. Craig, Peterboro; Mr. Wm. Blewett, Lakefield; Messrs. A. Stevenson and C. Hartley, of Peterboro; Mr. F. G. Hewlett, Flushing, N.Y.; Mr. and Mrs. A. F. Boehm, Toronto; and Mr. W. R. Boehm of the same place; Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Lawlor, Norwood; Mr. W. H. Parker, Mimico; Mr. E. B. Armstrong, Toronto; Mr. J. Merrill, Peterboro; Mr. and Mrs. Barber, Cleveland, O., and Mrs. J. Brown, Toronto.

Mr. T. Hull of Buffalo, is camped at the head of the lake.

Mr. Puffer, who has been running a portable saw mill, has quite a quantity of lumber piled on the Dummer shore.

Mr. J. E. A. Fitzgerald's saw mill at the head of the lake was burned to the ground a short time ago.

Rev. Mr. Cree of Norwood, intends building a cottage on his island.

Rev. Mr. Gibson is giving Mr. Geo. Morrow a close race in the construction of buildings on the "Isle Marie." This time he is putting up a water tower and a launch house on a cement foundation.

A REPORT ON THE INCINERATOR

Council Want to Get at Bottom of Trouble

Evidently the incinerator is destined to become a subject for much discussion. Again last evening at the Council meeting the matter was discussed and this time the feasibility of having the two men working at the incinerator was broached. Ald. Langford reported that the caretaker claimed he could not manage without the assistance of another man.

"Do you know anything about it?" enquired the Mayor.

"No, I've been too busy," replied Ald. Langford.

"Better go back to the old system of dump for the night soil," remarked Ald. Duncan.

Mayor Buller heartily agreed with Ald. Duncan.

Ald. Duncan also stated he was of the opinion that the incinerator was not properly handled or they would obtain better results. He would like to have a report from the Chairman of the Property Commitee or the Sanitary Inspector.

"What's all the tomfoolery about anyway; If the caretaker can't make matters go, get another," remarked Ald. Stratton.

The requested report will be presented at the next meeting.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH.

The pastor, Rev. R. Pogue, will occupy the pulpit in St. Paul's Church on Sabbath at both services. In the morning he will preach on the "Cure and Care" and in the evening on "Christ's bearing and ours when falsely accused."

During the hot summer weather the services will be confined to one hour.

The mid-week services will be given up through the summer months.

"PEBLO"
THE GLASS OF QUALITY

When we took the exclusive right to manufacture and fit "PEBLO" Lenses, we believed our patrons would appreciate having their eyeglasses fitted with this superior quality lens, and after two years' exclusive use of "PEBLO" Lenses, we are well satisfied with the result, judging by the hundreds of satisfied customers whom we have fitted with these beautiful lenses.

It is interesting to know that in spite of the expense of procuring "PEBLO" Lenses, the prices to our patrons are no more than when we used other makes of lenses, this being due to the large quantity we buy at a time. Remember we manufacture these "PEBLO" Lenses from the uncut Peblo Glass, in our own Lens Grinding Department. We can duplicate any kind of lens while you wait, and all our work is guaranteed.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

BIBLE IN PHOTOPLAY.

Editor Review:

Dear Sir:—We believe the people of Peterboro have but a faint idea of the wonderful educative influence that is in their midst in the Photo-Drama of Creation, now being exhibited at the Grand Opera House under the auspices of the International Bible Students' Association of Brooklyn, N.Y. Although its preparation has required about four years, and has cost several millions of dollars, the marvellous part is that to the public it is "as free as the wind that blows." Film and talking machine have never more skilfully united to give a vivid picture of earth's progress. Works of art, paintings of priceless value, and motion pictures of the highest type combine to give in a few brief hours what would otherwise require years of travel and study.

Over five million people have already witnessed this wonderful production, and many cities have shown an appreciation that has packed large auditoriums for weeks. The school boards of some cities have furnished Opera Houses free, and have made great endeavors to have its educative influence reach all classes. In New York City I saw Sunday school teachers bringing large classes to see it, and where blind prejudice has not prevailed, Christian Endeavor Societies, ministers and priests have visited it and pronounced it fair, impartial and of high educational value.

As a teacher of science in both High School and college, I would draw attention to the wonderful manner in which the Photo-Drama harmonises scientific and scriptural truths; and to the fact that it is absolutely free to the public, as it is supported entirely by voluntary donations.

I remain,
Very truly yours,
BIBLE STUDENT.

... ORANGE CELEBRATION. ...

Editor Review:—

Dear Sir:—I am writing now in regard to the 12th of August, as it has been reported here that the Orangemen are holding a celebration on that date, and we think it our duty to have our city represented at such celebration. Peterboro has been well represented in our city in the presence of the Armstrong Picolo Band, during the last few years, and which is always welcome to Toronto.

Yours truly,
W. J. Thompson,

ABOUT THE MERCHANTS.

Editor Review,

Dear Sir,—It is rumored in high circles that a well known association in this city, which quite recently provided the citizens with a picnic, is desirous of continuing its good work, by making, in the very near future, an urgent appeal to the public of this city and surrounding townships, as to the desirability of adopting a weekly half holiday all the year round, as well as habits of shopping, less detrimental to the welfare of store assistants of all grades than those which at present render late closing of stores a necessity. It is said the association is of the opinion, the health and strength of any section of the community is closely identified with national prosperity, also that it is confident it will not appeal in vain to the public, on behalf of the store assistants, with a view to impressing upon it, the very urgent necessity of shopping within reasonable hours.

It is intended further to arrange special appeals from the pulpits, particularly from those pastors, some of whom are at present away enjoying a hard earned month or six weeks' vacation without pay, who recently evinced such marked interest in the uplift of humanity.

The medical fraternity is also to be approached with the request that they issue a strongly worded manifesto entitled "Injury to health owing to excessive working hours," while the trade unions are already understood to have passed a resolution making it imperative not to purchase any article at any store, bearing the union label, after 6 p.m.

It is expected should this far reaching movement materialize the store assistants will not fail to promptly organise a Dollar Day (subscriptions receivable up to 10 p.m.) in favor of the newspaper lending its powerful columns to assist so estimable and worthy a cause. It might be then even possible to dispense with the services of the Salvation Army Band as a medium for advertising the glorious possibilities of our city.

FLOREAT PETERBORO.

Checks, Tartans and Novelty Plaids Will Hold a Foremost Place Amongst the Coming Season's Most Wanted Fabrics

That is the decree that Dame Fashion has sent forth; and, of course, you will find them at Cressman's. They arrived yesterday, direct from England and France; and, though the stock is not complete, yet they form a most interesting display, enabling you to take a "peep behind the scene" of Fall, 1914.

The checks are wonderfully well designed and come in two-tone and monotone effects; black and white will also be very popular. Then the novelty plaids are shown in a host of very pleasing combinations, mostly in subdued colorings, dark or neutral colors being used to balance the stronger colors. Also awaiting your inspection is a wide range of new Tweeds, Serges, Cheviots, Worsteds, Etc.

It will be a pleasure to show you these new goods the first time you are in the Store—ask to see them.

BOY SCOUTS TO HOLD A SOCIAL

The regular weekly meeting of the Boy Scouts was held last night with a good attendance. A lot of drill was indulged in and at the close a business meeting was held to decide whether the Scouts would hold an excursion or a lawn social, and the latter was decided upon. It will be held on the last Tuesday in August at Knox Church. The Scouts expect to go to Toronto this year and will leave on or about September 3rd. for a three days' camp. The Scouts are divided into two troops, junior and senior. The former meets on Thursday night and the latter on Friday night.

"A WOMAN'S CROWNING GLORY IS HER HAIR"

All ladies who find that their own hair is not sufficient to produce youthful and correct styles in hairdressing remember the visit of Prof. Dorenwend to the Oriental Hotel, Peterboro, on Friday, July 24th. He will display a large stock of the latest styles in human hair goods such as Switches, Waves, Transformations, Braids, etc., made from selected European hair and uncomparable with any other for workmanship, efficiency and natural and becoming effects when adjusted. To advertise these goods this special stock will be sold at the Oriental Hotel, Peterboro, for less than cost, on Friday, July 24th. Remember the date.

SUMMER CAMP.

Everything is in readiness for the opening of the Summer Camp at T. A. S. Park on Monday. The steamer leaving the new wharf at nine o'clock will convey many of the campers to the ground and as the cook will be there from early morning the first meal served will be dinner. Many young men working in the city intend coming up and going down every Monday morning and evening. Rev. Father Cote of St. Peter's is the chaplain.

FUNERAL HOUR CHANGED.

The funeral of the late Alma McGill will take place this afternoon from the family residence, 187 London Street, to the Little Lake Cemetery. Service will be held at the house at 3.30 by Rev. J. R. Webb, acting in the absence of Rev. R. G. Peever.

THEY ACT LIKE THE HEATHEN

Tourists do War Dances Without Any Clothes

Complaint has been made to the Review that certain tourists have the habit of taking off their clothes and acting like naked cannibals, when they are not enjoying a refreshing dip in the river. This should not be, and must not continue, if prosecution is to be avoided.

About the Weather

The hot wave has apparently left us as cooler conditions now prevail. The late hot spell was a lengthy one, beginning on the 5th with 85 degrees, and continuing with high figures until the 17th. On the 11th we had it 92 in the shade, and on Thursday afternoon 91 degrees. The highest this summer was 93 on June 8th.

The hottest day last summer was Aug. 16th, 97 degrees. From Aug. 13 to 19 was the most sultry period of the year.

Rain is greatly needed at present. Only .18 of an inch has fallen this month so far. The total for June was 1.18, while May had about one-half of that small amount, viz., .62. April had 1.65, and March 2.21. Less than one-half the average amount has fallen during those months. The total for last year was 24 inches, as compared with the average rainfall for Peterborough district of 32 inches.—W. P.

SHOULD SPARE HIS ENEMIES

Carranza is Unged to Grant General Amnesty.

WASHINGTON, July 18. — The American Government is firmly urging Gen. Venustiano Carranza, as first chief of the Constitutionalists, to meet the overtures of President Carbajal, the successor of Gen. Huerta, for a peaceful solution of the Mexican problem. President Carbajal is ready to transfer control of the Government in Mexico City to the Constitutionalists as soon as the latter guarantee the protection of lives and property of all elements in Mexico, and grant a general amnesty to those whom the Constitutionalists have been fighting.

The American Government has urged Gen. Carranza to be merciful, to grant a general amnesty and to give assurances that all property will be protected, particularly the property of the Catholic Church in Mexico. Gen. Carranza has been informed that the American Government would not regard it as magnanimous on the part of the victors to stand Federal officers against the wall before a firing squad, or to take their lives in any other fashion.

Constitutionalists here assert that they are willing to grant amnesty to the rank and file of the Federal army in Mexico, but that those higher officers who can be shown to have been active in supporting the cause of Huerta should be tried and punished. They do not think amnesty will be granted to them. It may also be difficult to persuade Gen. Carranza that they should be allowed to go free on trial.

Huerta at Puerto Mexico.

PUERTO MEXICO, July 18.—Gen. Huerta, who recently resigned as President of Mexico, arrived here shortly after nine o'clock last night. He was accompanied by Gen. Blanquet, his Minister of War. His intentions are a mystery to all but himself and his aides.

All arrangements were made early in the day for the reception of Huerta and Blanquet, and the stage was so set that they could enter the city and board the Bristol or Dresden and put out to sea so quickly and quietly as to rob their flight of all dramatic elements. Tracks were laid so that the special train could be pulled along the wharf close to the water, and the ex-President and ex-Minister of War would thus be enabled to reach the launch in less than a dozen steps.

None of the messages sent to Huerta's wife or to Gen. Camerena, commanding the special guard here, indicated Huerta's plans. Not even the captains of the British and German vessels had definite instructions. They were to leave the direction to Huerta himself. It is generally believed, however, that Huerta and Blanquet will go aboard the Dresden, and the other refugees, including Senora Huerta and Senora Blanquet, aboard the Bristol, and that both cruisers will proceed for Jamaica or Havana.

It was a day of sharp anxiety for the older members of the party, especially wives of the two men who were passing through a country where a considerable number of revolutionists are known to be operating. They could not rid themselves of the fear that the revolutionists would in some way seek revenge on their husbands. Both were downcast and unresponsive to the efforts of the children and others to arouse their spirits.

San Luis Potosi Taken.

BROWNSVILLE, Tex., July 18.—San Luis Potosi has been surrendered to the Constitutionalists, according to unofficial despatches received in Matamoros, opposite Brownsville yesterday. The messages, which were sent from Monterey, gave no details.

SCHOONER ASHORE.

U. S. Torpedo Boat Destroyer Rushes To Her Assistance.

NEWPORT, R.I., July 18. — The schooner T. W. Cooper, bound from New Haven, Conn., for St. John, N.B., went ashore in a fog near the west arm of Point Judith breakwater last night, according to a wireless message received here. Assistance was asked for and preparations were made at the naval station to have the torpedo boat Gwin go to her assistance.

The torpedo boat destroyer MacDougall went to her assistance. The revenue cutter Acushnet at New Bedford and the Itasca at New London were also notified and started to Port Judith. A latter radio message said that the schooner was in a bad position. Her crew were reported to have reached shore safely by means of the breakwater.

Cremated Under Car.

CHATHAM, N.B., July 18.—W. L. T. Weldon, a tailor of this town, met a fearful death late Thursday night. With three others in an auto with him, it overturned on a hill and pinned him to the ground. Flames broke out and Weldon was cremated. Two of the others escaped uninjured, but the third, Nathan Deskin, of Montreal, had his foot and head injured.

Dillon Admitted to States.

KINGSTON, July 18.—The American immigration officer at Cape Vincent, N.Y., did not know Dillon, the released dynamiter, who was taken across the border after being released from the penitentiary. When it was found that Dillon was not being deported he was given his release and chose to stay in his own country.

FAKE TICKETS AT LONDON.

London, July 18.—Detective Egelton to-day learned why some four or five hundred persons witnessed Wednesday's game between Brantford and London without contributing to the coffers of the clubs, and as a consequence an employee of a printing office may be prosecuted. It is alleged that the man made up a batch of five hundred or more tickets to duplicate the legitimate admission cards, and on the one day he succeeded in disposing of practically the whole lot at the cut rate of three for half a dollar.

According to the police, a large number of those who purchased tickets knowing them to be fraudulent, will also be haled into police court. The matter was taken quite seriously by the directors of the London club, who were for a time in a quandary when they found that nearly five hundred people had passed through the gate without calling at the box office.

DEADLOCK ON TYRONE

LONDON, July 18.—(C. A. P. Cable.)—The most interesting moment in the Home Rule struggle was reached yesterday evening when the Government and Opposition leaders, with whom communications have been renewed, approached very nearly to a settlement of the question at issue, including the possibility of a settlement on the basis of "no clean-out for Ulster and no time limit for a decision," but with the voting of certain specific Ulster counties on exclusion from Home Rule.

The counties under discussion in connection with this proposal are: Antrim, Armagh, Down, Londonderry, Fermanagh and Tyrone.

As to the position of the County of Tyrone there is a deadlock between the parties as to whether or not Tyrone, in which the Roman Catholic population is predominant, should be included in the Ulster counties, which might take a vote en bloc on exclusion from Home Rule, and at the moment there are no prospects in sight of a compromise, for neither the Nationalists nor the Liberals can concede its inclusion with the other counties.

The Daily News says that the Government intends to keep the amending bill in being as long as there is a possibility of any settlement being arrived at on the lines indicated. Any statements that the bill is dead or is abandoned should be discredited. They do not represent the situation, the fact being that the period during which the omens have been very unfavorable has been succeeded by negotiations which have for the first time brought the parties within measurable distance of peace.

Directly after the rising of the House yesterday a second meeting of the Cabinet was held at which some Irish leaders were present. Later the Prime Minister had audience of the King at Buckingham Palace. Rumor was busy that Sir Edward Carson also had been in personal consultation with the Prime Minister during the day. Sir Edward denies this and says that he has not "personally" discussed anything with Premier Asquith "since my return from Ulster."

Mr. Lloyd George, speaking at the Lord Mayor's dinner last night to the bankers and merchants of London, in referring to the present unrest in the labor world, concluded his speech with these words:

"I should not be doing my duty if I did not utter this one word of solemn warning. These industrial disputes are complicated by the situation in Ireland and should there be civil strife in that land, which heaven forbid, in the course of the next few weeks, the situation will be the gravest with which any Government in this country has had to deal for centuries. That is the reason why the responsible men of all parties should strive and work for a reasonable compromise. Everyone who has the honor and welfare of his country at heart must earnestly hope and pray that every effort will be made to attain that object, and that it will be ultimately crowned with success."

Prospects Are Bright.

LONDON, July 18.—The Government is making strong efforts to reach a settlement in the Ulster problem. Two Cabinet Councils were held yesterday, and Premier Asquith had an audience with the King and was in communication with Andrew Bonar Law, the Unionist leader, and Sir Edward Carson, in fact, the whole day was occupied in conference between the various party leaders, but without definite result. The negotiations will be continued Monday, and it is understood that the prospects for an agreement have improved.

Duke Leaves St. John's.

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld., July 18. — The Duke of Connaught sailed at midnight Thursday for Quebec, after a triumphant tour through the city, when great crowds, which had gathered all along the route, gave him a hearty farewell. An immense gathering also bade him farewell at King's wharf. There were bonfires on the hilltops and there was a big display of fireworks. Yesterday morning the duke sent a wireless message to the governor, expressing grateful thanks for his reception.

BIGGEST FLOATING DOCK ON PACIFIC READY THIS YEAR

It is expected that the Grand Trunk Pacific authorities will have the big dry dock at Prince Rupert in operation before the end of the present year. The completion of this great work will mean much to Northern British Columbia and especially to Prince Rupert. That rapidly growing city will have a new industry this coming winter. Many of the big coast steamers that have hitherto been compelled to make their headquarters elsewhere will be overhauled in its harbor. It will be able to boast of the largest floating dock on the Pacific with an equipment including every up-to-date device for handling ships up to 20,000 tons. There are four large buildings to house the various sections of the ship building and repairing plant and practically all the machinery to equip the shops has been made in Canada.

The yard will have a 45 ton locomotive crane. Other machinery includes an 80 foot lathe, capable of turning a steel shaft 50 feet in length; a plate bending machine with a capacity of bending a sheet of steel twenty feet by three-quarters of an inch thick; a big steam hammer and four air compressors. The machine shop, boiler shop and blacksmith shop will have the most complete set of modern tools on the coast.

Adjoining the dock along the face of the harbor are the big new wharves and the railroad has large freight yards here.

For a city that dates back only to 1906, when the Grand Trunk Pacific's staff of engineers made a landing and clearing for the location of their camp preparatory to making the preliminary survey, this is a record of progress that it would be hard to equal.

PERPETUAL ELECTRIC MOTION WHEN AT ZERO.

A discovery which seems to be the equivalent of perpetual motion was described by Professor Whitehead at a meeting of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers held recently in Detroit. He declared that by subjecting a closed coil of lead wire to practically absolute zero temperature and starting a flow of electricity therein by some external means, Professor Kamerlingh Onnes of Leyden, Germany, has succeeded in maintaining a continuous current without the expenditure of energy. To obtain the extremely low temperature necessary to make the experiment a success the coil was immersed in liquid helium. The current was started in the wire by magnetic induction, the flow of electricity persisting, it is declared, for four and one-half hours after the magnetic influence was removed. It was stated that if the experiment had not been terminated when it was the current would probably have continued to flow indefinitely.

BRANTS HIT EVERYTHING TRACEY HAD IN THE SIXTH SCORING AS MANY RUNS

Visitors Had Glorious Bangfest That Gave Them Victory by Score of 9 to 7

All things come to those who wait, and he who offers does not always produce. The Petes had a chance to wait yesterday, but they preferred to offer, and Brantford won a slow game by 9-7. Nickell, on the mound for the Red Sox, was as wild as a young colt, and because the Petes preferred to offer, Rube Deneau kept Nickell on the hill. Had they waited Mr. Nickell would have been derricked along about the fourth innings. Neither Tracey nor Nickell had any great stuff, but if anything Tracey had more than his opponent. The locals, in over-eagerness to make hits, swung at balls, while the Red Sox in desperation hit some of the best stuff Tracey had to offer. So there you are. Baseball is baseball whatever way you look at it, but at the same time it is funny. The sixth frame had the glorious fourth beaten a mile so far as dynamite and smoke were concerned. Tracey used all the smoke he had, but the Red Sox smote his offerings for seven clean hits and six runs, and dinner should have had its last call there, as the Petes did not recover sufficiently afterwards to make it close. Some of the wise ones will condemn Curly Blount for not derricking Tracey. Right here let it be understood that Tracey was hurling good ball during the fusillade. He was not weak, but the Red Sox just had one of those spells which hit every ball. One of those periods where forty Walter Johnsons could not have restored peace and quietness. The Red Sox simply had something in them, and they got it out of their systems in the sixth.

The best team won, however. On that point there is no argument. Any team that can hit seven and score six in one frame deserves to win, and if Brantford could do that every day Tom Nelson would wear a smile so large that a tent could not cover it. It was just a case of the club which hit well enough and scored numerous enough to win an ordinary game.

The Petes fielded well enough and so did the Brants, and once again Welsh was robbed of a hit by a shoestring catch on the part of Wilson. There was nothing sensational during the game, and the fans failed to choke themselves on the peanuts during a moment of "eggcitement."

The Petes grabbed a tally in the first on Welsh's double and Nickell's wild heave. In the third they scored another on Welsh's double and Dooney's single. In the fatal sixth they counted thrice on hits by Rooney, Byrne, King and Fox. Then in the ninth two more came on a pass to Welsh, a single by Kelly, and Dolan's triple.

The Red Sox grabbed one in the first on Long's triple and Nelson's single. Two more came in the third on an error by Miller, Long's sacrifice, Nelson's double, and Ivers' single. In the sixth hits by Roth, Wilson, Nickell, Long, Nelson, Deneau and Ivers, and a sacrifice by Fried, accounted for a sextette.

Nelson of the Brants was the damaging slugger, and his pokes drove in a bunch of runs, while Long proved himself a good lead-off man. The only man on the visiting team that failed to get a hit was Lacroix. The visitors had six sacrifice hits and squeezed a run, so the best team won.

TERRIBLE SHAG

The Senators from Parliament Hill will invade Riverside Park, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week and the fans will find an opportunity to shout, as excitement is certain. The Ottawa fans have jarred Shag's nerves during the past few days. "The whole League" Rogers will also be with us, and it is hoped the local peanut shellers will not be so rude as the fans at Ottawa, who have called Mr. Rogers pretty nearly everything during the past week. The Senators' latest screech is a one-thousand-dollar shortstop.

McKINNON CUP FOR AUSTRALIA

Bisley Ranges, July 18.—Australia yesterday followed up last year's successes in the McKinnon Challenge Cup competition by again winning that trophy, though in actual points scored she was tied with England, the Overseas Dominion gaining the silverware through being the highest scorer at the longer range of the two shot over. Any of the British Dominions are entitled to enter for this trophy, and Canada, England, Australia, India, Guernsey, Ireland, and Scotland had teams in the field.

The Australians won the cup by scoring three more points than last year, when Canada, as on this occasion, was fourth, her aggregate score yesterday being 23 less than last year. Australia received hearty congratulations on this second victory.

Scores of Canadians.

The Canadians made 743 at the 900 yards range. At the thousand yards they scored as follows:

Bennet, 68; McLean, 62; Stoddard, 67; Brooks, 56; McInnes, 61; Martin, 67; Hawkins, 59; Russel, 65; Hendry, 61; McKie, 62; Laman, 64, and Armstrong, 57. Canada's total for this distance was 744, the others being: England, 740; Ireland, 727; India 687; Guernsey, 676; Scotland, 731, and Australia, 745. The aggregate scores for the whole competition were: England, 1,531; Australia, 1,531; Scotland, 1,498; Canada, 1,487; Ireland, 1,469; India, 1,406 and Guernsey 1,370.

Corporal Bos, of the Victoria Rifles, of Montreal, scored two firsts in the sweepstakes with totals of 48 and 55. Lieut. McLean, of the 78th Regt., Hopewell, was first at the 900 yards sweepstakes, with 89, and in the 1,000 yards sweepstakes, Lieut. C. N. Bennet, of the 63rd Regt. Halifax, came third with 75.

GOOD BASERUNNERS USE LEFT FOOT TO TOUCH BAG

Lawson Robertson, the famous trainer of the Irish-American A. C. of New York, developer of many noted athletes, especially sprinters, was recently a candidate for the position of trainer of the Brooklyn National League club. He had a conference with Manager Robinson, with some of the newspaper men present, and told the stout manager that he could add a stride to the speed of every Brooklyn player, and also add to his speed around the bases.

Manager Robinson then proceeded to quiz Robertson as to his knowledge of base running, and asked the trainer with which foot a runner should touch first base in rounding that bag. Robertson told him that he should touch off with the left foot and pivot on that. Robinson refused him the place on the ground that this was a mistake, and that the runners of any account touched off with the right foot. Even the newspaper men agreed.

Now Ty Cobb and Eddie Collins, two of the best base runners in the world, come to the aid of Robertson and announce that every good runner touches off with his left foot, and that is where they gain the extra stride.

Now Manager Robinson is in a receptive mood.

O'Loughlin Thinks New Rule For Coachers Will Liven Game

Fans are seeing big league baseball players display more brains and pepper on the base lines because of the new rules forbidding coachers to touch base runners rounding third, thinks Umpire "Silk" O'Loughlin.

"I know that lots of the old-timers are against the rule," says Silk, "but in my opinion that rule is going to liven up base runners and consequently liven up the games. It's going to make the base runners do their own thinking, too."

Fans needn't fear that O'Loughlin will ever interpret the new rule as strictly as was done in the Federal League game recently when a man was called out after he had knocked a home run into the bleachers, simply because the coacher patted him on the back as he passed third.

"The rule was never meant to be interpreted as technically and strictly as all that," declared O'Loughlin. "It was only meant to stop having coachers forcibly detain base runners at third and practically do all the thinking for the runner."

COMMENT
As You Like It

If Freddie Welsh were to adopt the tactics that Willie Ritchie did when the latter became champion, the return bout between these two boxers, who contested for the world's championship Tuesday night, would be of an indefinite nature.

For years, dating to the time when Joe Gans was king of the lightweights, Welsh chased the elusive title bout, and none held him off more consistently than Ritchie.

Begged for Two Years.

Champion of England and Australia and with a record excelling that of any other lightweight, Welsh had to go begging for nearly two years before Ritchie consented to meet him in the ring. About a year ago Ritchie was matched with Welsh, but suddenly left the scene of action a few days before the date of the contest.

Welsh has never broken faith with either boxer or promoter, and it is practically certain that he will carry out his end of the agreement that Ritchie insisted upon before signing articles for the London bout — a return match in the fall. If Welsh took the old Ritchie course, the American champion would spend a lot of time and money before he and the Briton got into the ring again.

Ritchie Changes Views.

In the early report from England Ritchie was quoted as saying that Referee Corri gave him the worst of it and that he would have defeated Welsh if the contest had been staged in America.

Later despatches, however, indicate that Ritchie, like all unprejudiced experts, agrees with the verdict of Corri, for this is what he says today:

"Welsh is a wonderful boxer. His speed and cleverness are even greater than I thought, but I am confident that I can do better. I think no one will deny that I earned another chance, for I was stronger than he at the end, and would have won in a few more rounds. At no stage was I in distress from his blows. However, Welsh earned the decision, and I want to congratulate him. But I feel certain that I will whip him in the fall."

The Review will give $1,111,111,111 to any person who can solve the question "When is baseball?" The Petes invaded Ottawa and took three out of four from the champions. Brantford hits here and has taken two out of three so far, and it might be a clean sweep. Yesterday a sort of hitting evil possessed the Red Sox in the sixth, and like real crap shooters they rolled seven hits, most of them to centre field, and scored a Lucia of runs. The day before, Mr. Kelly bungled in the first, and Brantford scored two runs, enough to win the game. The spirit of the win may alight on the head of the Petes today, but for the best solution of "When is baseball?" with an extra chapter on "How you can dope it," The Review will give an extra Rockefeller fortune. The offer is made because we know "it can't be done."

Ladies will be tangoed free next Tuesday, when the locals promise to look prettier than they would on photograph day. All games from now on will commence at 3.45 except on Saturday and Thursday, when they will be called at 3 o'clock.

They say that a baseball player in organized ball gets a square deal. There is a grave doubt on the question. Organized baseball has its National Commission. Ban Johnson and Governor Tener, the respective American and National League presidents, and Garry Herrmann, of the Cincinnati club, form the Commission. The latter is financially interested and the other two are directly financially interested in organized baseball. These three men are the privy council of baseball. It is they who decide all disputes between player and owner. Supposing for one moment that Carnegie was a judge and at the same time interested in the Steel Corporation. Would he be the proper man to try a case where his interests were concerned? It is impossible to know how the National Commission can honestly serve as a last resort court and do justice to the individual. Surely a ballplayer should not have to accept he judgment of that body to recover money owing. If he does not accept the decision of the National Commission, he may kiss himself good-bye, so far as organized baseball is concerned. The Federal League backers would create a popular constitution if they gave the player the right to decide money matters in a court where justice is dispensed. Commissions of baseball are all right to settle disputes between clubs and players and to decide umpires' decisions and so forth, but when it comes to money matters, the court of the land is the place, and if the player wins he should be allowed to earn his living in the company from which he emerged or which he was in when he commenced his suit. But the National Commission thinks otherwise.

(Hamilton Times)

It must be admitted that Jack White has improved the Hamilton team since he has been handling the reins, but at the present time it looks as if the club needs new heavers. This kind of pitching will not bring the team up the ladder, and there should be no hesitation in letting a few of the bad ones go. Pitchers are hard to get at the present time, but a scouting trip on the part of Manager White would do the team a lot of good. The team at the present time is fast enough. They are all hitting the pill, and hitting it hard, but it is seldom that a visiting team is compeled to get more than eleven runs to win a game. The Toronto hitters have been fattening their averages at the expense of the Hamilton heavers, and unless something is done ther will be a few hitters in the Canadian league hitting around the five hundred mark as long as they bat against pitchers like the ones on the Hamilton pay roll.

You never can tell. The people who laugh loudest don't always enjoy themselves most.

QUINLAN—THEOBALD.

The Church of the Sacred Heart was this morning at eight o'clock the scene of a pretty wedding, when Mary E. (Mamie), eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John W. Theobald, 517 Albert street, became the bride of Mr. J. Harry Quinlan, son of Mr. and Mrs. M. H. Quinlan, Charlotte street.

The nuptial knot was tied by Rev. Father McAuley, and numerous friends of the bride and groom were present. The bridesmaid was Miss Aileen Sullivan, and the groomsman Mr. A. J. Quinlan, brother of the groom.

The bride was attired in a gown of ivory charmeuse, trimmed with Irish baby lace, and also wore a bridal veil. She carried a shower bouquet of white roses and lily of the valley. The bridesmaid was dressed in yellow satin trimmed with brocade and ninon, and wore a leghorn hat.

At the conclusion of the ceremony the bridal party and a number of invited guests partook of the wedding repast, catered at the bride's home, by Hoopers. There, congratulations were showered on the young couple, with hearty wishes for the future.

They took the 11.40 G. T. R. train for Toronto, and will spend the next two weeks visiting the Canadian and American cities en route to Prince Albert, where they will reside, the groom holding a position in the Bank of Ottawa.

The bride's travelling suit was of navy moire with a sailor moire hat.

Numerous and beautiful gifts, evidencing the popularity of the bride, were received, among them being a silver casserole from the staff of the Sun Life Assurance Company, where the bride has held an office position; also a cut-glass piece from the choir of the Sacred Heart Church, of which the recipient has been a valued member. The league of the Sacred Heart presented a picture and an address. Of both organizations the bride has been a member since the opening of the church. The groom's gift to the bridesmaid was a pretty amethyst necklace set with pearls, and to the best man a diamond stickpin. Mr Quinlan shares with his bride a large measure of popularity in this city. He was in the local branch of the Bank of Ottawa before being promoted to a position in the branch at Prince Albert. Before leaving Prince Albert for the East a party of forty young men met at the residence of Mr. J. Arpin, where a banquet was given in Mr. Quinlan's honor. On that occasion Hon. T. H. Maguire made the presentation of a gold locket set with diamonds.

Miss Florence Leahy, of 511 Sherbrooke street, has been successful at the recent examinations of Toronto College of Music, and also of University, having passed her senior piano and written harmony with first-class honors, and obtaining honors in primary vocal. She has been a pupil of St. Joseph's Academy during the past term.

Mr. Tom Allen of Millbrook, a young lawyer who was recently admitted to the bar at Osgoode Hall, has joined the law firm of Messrs. Bonnet and Goodwill, Water Street. Mr. Allen is a graduate of Toronto University.

Miss Anna McCann, soprano soloist of the Cowan Avenue Presbyterian Church, Toronto, will sing at both morning and evening services in All Saints' Church tomorrow.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Jay, Cannington, Ont., announce the engagement of their younger daughter, Ida Florence, to Mr. J. Scott Montgomery, of the Standard Bank, Cannington, only son of the late S. L. and Mrs. Montgomery, Victoria Harbor. The marriage will take place early in August.

Mrs. W. L. Craig, Misses Craig and M. Craig and N. Craig of Grand Rapids, are staying at Stoney Lake.

Mr. W. C. Meyers of Montreal, is registered at the Oriental.

MANY HEARD CONCERT

The Friday evening band concerts given by the 57th Regimental Band under the leadership of Lieut. Gliddon, still appear to be very popular. Last evening there was an enormous crowd present, which vigorously applauded many of the numbers. Mr. Asa Huycke's solo, "By Killarney" and Remick's Hits, No. 14, introducing all the "latest rags" were about the two most prominent features. Mr. Huycke was heartily encored. The selection of Irish Airs as usual reached a soft chord in the hearts of many.

He lit the match and threw it away, but a spark caught on his clothes and there was soon a blaze. The clothes were saturated with oil and gasoline. He was severely burned.

A REMARKABLE MOVIE TRIUMPH

Montreal Daily Mail, Saturday, March 21, 1914.

"Atlantis" the photo-play adopted from Gerhart Thauptman's novel, to be shown at the Princess next week holds the witness spell-bound as the story unfolds on the screen in a succession of unique dramatic situations.

Wonderful Movie Triumph.

The story begins in Berlin, Germany, and takes its audience to New York via Southampton, England, and back from New York to Berlin, a realistic shipwreck occurring on the first half of the journey. Dr. Kammacher, the individual around whom the story is written—he hardly poses as a hero—is advised to go on a holiday owing to his nerves being badly overwrought by the care of his wife who, at the beginning of the story, develops insanity. He meets a dancer, Ingigerd, first in Berlin at an Artists club, and afterwards on board the steamship "Roland," bound for New York.

The scenes in Berlin are all the chief objects to the tourist—the Cathedral, Tier Garden and Unter den Linden all being traversed by the doctor before he leaves on his holiday. At Southampton the passengers are seen embarking for the voyage on a tug. The scene "Towards a new world" is most realistic representing the bow of the boat cutting through the water.

A Realistic Shipwreck.

The big scene of the whole play takes place when a derelict is sighted by the officers on the bridge, too late to avoid a collision, owing to a fog. The action during the shipwreck scene that follows is a wonderful piece of Cinematographic work—passengers struggling among themselves to get to the boats, the awful possibilities in the stoke holes and the sinking of the vessel need to be seen to be appreciated.

"BABYLON"

Wonderful Oriental Spectacle at Canadian National Exhibition

Canadian National Exhibition.

"Babylon," the magnificent Oriental spectacle now in preparation for this year's Canadian National Exhibition, Toronto, will outshine in the beauty of its colorings and costumes, its life and the number of its people, any similar spectacle ever produced on the American continent.

The very name "Babylon" is a synonym for luxury and lavishness, and the story of the handwriting on the wall that dazed the rioters at the feast of Belteschazzer, and later the destruction of the most beautiful city of ancient times, lend themselves readily to romantic depiction and spectacular reproduction. The material is all ready to the hand of the author and artist.

When it is learned that a thousand costumes for the king, the nobles, the state officers, the envoys of other nations, the priests, the warriors, the Assyrian guards, the Nubians, the Arabs, the slaves, the charioteers, etc., etc., are being imported, that they will be accurate in every detail, you can form some opinion of the riot of color the stage will hold.

The stage setting will consist of a view of the ancient city 700 feet in length—the largest stage in the world.

DRAWING FOR PRIZES.

IMMIGRATION ACT TO BE REVISED

Get Power to Seize Ship and Keep out Undesirables

AT NEXT SESSION

Ottawa, July 18.—The Canadian Immigration Act is to be revised at the next session of Parliament. Passed several years ago and conferring upon the department very extensive powers, it has been found, in its practical application, to be deficient in several vital points. The fundamental theory is that the country should have the right of determining what people should come in as immigrants and those who should be rejected, but there are ways by which, in practical operation, this is circumvented. It is intended to fill up the gaps.

In the case of the Hindus, for example, there is no alternate penalty. Those who brought to Canada those unfortunate people—the owners of the vessel — may be responsible, but they live over in Japan, and to get at them may involve all kinds of bother and possible international complications. Another point arises also out of the fact that the ship owners maintain that they merely rented the ship to Gurdit Singh and his crew and were not responsible for the inauguration of the expedition. It is proposd to amend the law so that in addition to the penalties upon the owners, it will be categorically provided that the ship itself shall be seized and sold.

Officials Eased Up.

There are a number of other points in regard to which the law is to be stiffened. The Komagata Maru is still at Vancouver. When she will set sail it not yet determined, though it is hoped the anchor will be lifted in a day or so. The immigration officials at the coast appear to have proceeded very slowly. A board of inquiry has to sit on each individual case, but when an appeal on behalf of one Hindu was taken to the courts, they evidently stopped dealing with the others pending the judgment, thereby saving themselves work if the courts declared the regulations unconstitutional, but proceedings might as well have gone ahead regardless of the court case. As it came out, the orders were upheld and since then the inquiry board has been busy. When it will finish is not known here.

May Provision Ship.

The order that the Hindus are to be promptly deported is absolute and the ship owners have intimated their willingness to put to sea. If it is absolutely necessary, the Government may consent to provision the ship for the return voyage.

Improvements by the C.P.R. Cost $29,000,000

Last year's Canadian Pacific accounts showed that additional improvements to the system had cost $29,000,000, while rolling stock and machinery stood for $30,000,000. Construction of acquired branch lines amounted to $9,113,050. The Ogden shops at Calgary, $2,446,035; the dividends paid up to June 30, came to, in round figures, $15,000,000.

These are odd figures taken at random to show the bulk of the features which stand out prominently in the annual reports of the company. This year the expenditures upon rolling stock will, for the company, be comparatively slight, while ground has not been broken for any new work. This does not mean that there is any pause in the forward policy of the company. The great works which were begun two years ago, go on. The president said at the time that this work would be enough for the executive for some two or three years to come. This included the great irrigation works, the branch lines in the West, the laying down of big terminals and trackage thereon, and, chiefly, the double tracking, which is going steadily forward. For the last ten years the company has been spending in the Northwest between $25,000,000 and $40,000,000 per annum, justifying the remark made by Mr. H. S. Holt, one of the directors, that the executive had spent in the Northwest, in all, as much as the entire capitalization of the system. It dovetailed in with the conditions that the company was not pledged to any large new work this year, though as stated, no necessary feature has been in the least degree curtailed, notwithstanding the falling figures show curtailment of nearly $8,000,000 during the fiscal year which ended on the 30th of June. Every necessary work went on; every necessary man, high or low, remained at his post; there was no curtailment of services when the traffic was light; the elaboration which marks the dining car service, which marks the great hotels in their accommodation and cruisine, was in no degree altered throughout the period of decreases; on the contrary, everything went forward with the conviction that both the country and the system were too well equipped to suffer any serious eclipse.

COW STRUCK DEAD.

Lightning Bolt Hits Animal While Latter Is Being Milked.

WINDSOR, July 18.—Norman Collins, a 12-year-old Windsor boy, spent part of his vacation on a farm near Cottam this week, but he is back home to-day, and declares he is through with pastoral affairs for ever.

The lad was milking a cow during an electrical storm, when a lightning bolt struck the animal, killing it instantly. Collins was leaning back on the milking-stool, when there was a blinding flash, and the cow dropped, having been struck on the forehead. The boy was rendered unconscious, and it was some time before he recovered. Two other cattle in the barn were knocked down by the shock.

SENTENCING OF DRINKER TO WED ANGERS WOMEN

Several well known New York women, prominent in philanthropic work, in emphatic terms, denounced Judge Mahon, of Elizabeth, N.J., in giving Dennis Boyle, a young man brought before him for drinking, thirty days in which to marry.

"You drink too much, young man," the Judge told him, "and you need a wife to take care of you. If you're not married in thirty days I'll have you brought back here."

The offender agreed to this and took the pledge for a year.

"I am amazed that a Judge should put such an indignity upon the bench and upon women," said Miss Lillian Wald, head of the Henry Street Settlement. "I can scarcely credit it. The Judge sentences the woman at the same time. So many of the physical misfortunes of children are inherited from drinking parents, that I am amazed that a Judge should encourage such a union. Such marriages should be discouraged, even if the law had to step in.

Mrs. Clarence Burns, president of the Little Mothers' Aid Association, was equally emphatic in her criticism of such judicial advice.

"Such marriages give very poor prospects for the future race," said Mrs. Burns. "I fancy this young man will have a rather hard time of it trying to find a woman who will agree to marry him. I know of several recent instances where girls have broken their engagements to young men when they learned that the young men were addicted to drinking. Women are beginning to realize the penalty they pay and the great price to be paid by the future race through marrying such men to reform them."

THIS SPOOK WAS ALIVE

Mystery of Desert Church is Solved.

LANCASTER, Pa., July 18.—For several years weird tales at various times have been told of the deserted Presbyterian Church at Churchtown, and for some weeks the villagers have been sure "spooks" were there again. A citizens' committee watched at night but discovered nothing.

It remained for John Jacobs, caretaker, to solve the mystery. While working in the graveyard he noticed an open window, and upon investigation found on the dusty pulpit sofa a woman. Assistance was summoned and she was removed to a nearby house, where a physician found she was nearly famished. Partially demented, she was clad in tattered garments that had once been fashionable clothing. Later in the day her identity was established, and her mother, Mrs. Jas. L. Cummings, of Flatbush, New York, the wealthy widow of Dr. Jas. L. Cummings, was communicated with.

It is believed that Miss Cummings, who is 50 years old, walked all the way to Churchtown, near which place she spent her childhood. It is supposed that past recollections influenced the demented woman's strange choice of a hiding place, where she had been since June 9. In all these weeks she says she had not had a particle of food, having subsisted entirely on water from a pump nearby, to which she repaired at midnight. Friends are caring for her until her relatives arrive. In her youth Miss Cummings was a noted society beauty.

LOW TEMPERATURE MEANS FAT LOSS IN SKIM MILK

When Drawn From Cow, the Temperature is About Ninety Degrees and This is the Best Temperature at Which to Separate — Should it Fall Below, it is Best to Warm Before Separating

A bulletin discussing the causes of variation in the percentage of fat in market cream obtained from farm separators, is a recent publication by the Washington experimental station.

The question of the variation of fat in the cream marketed at different creameries causes considerable trouble at times among its patrons, and will continue to do so until the farmer sunderstand more fully the conditions that cause this variation. The farmer is prone to conclude that when the cream is all from one herd, and there are apparently no irregularities in the feeding, milking, or in separating of the cream, the percentage of fat in the cream should not vary. Extreme variations in tests are liable to make him feel that the testing of the cream is not accurately done. The fact is that a uniform test from week to week would be more indicative of dishonesty than a variation of a few per cent. in the test.

When the cream screw is set to deliver a certain percentage of fat in the cream, under normal conditions there will be a definite ratio between the skim milk and the cream separated—that is if the separator delivered 12 pounds of cream and 88 pounds of skim milk from 100 pounds of three per cent. milk, the test of the cream would be 25 per cent. On the other hand, if a four per cent. milk is to be separated under the same conditions, instead of getting more cream than from the three per cent., the amount would be about the same, but it would test about 33 per cent. The change in the percentage of fat in milk is caused by several factors, one of which is the change from dry food to succulent pasture, which results in a decreased fat production. On the other hand, in the fall and winter, when the cows are advanced in lactation and are put on dry feed, the fat percentage is increased.

Milk when drawn from the cow has a temperature of about 90 to 95 degrees. This is the best temperature at which to separate. If the temperature falls much below 85 or 90 degrees, as is likely in winter, it should be warmed up before being separated, considerable loss of fat in the skim milk and variation in the richness of the cream being thereby avoided.

The effect of the speed of the separator bowl on the percentage of fat in the cream is probably greater than any other cause. The higher the speed the greater the centrifugal force, and the more rapidly the skim milk will leave the bowl. Thus, if the speed is increased the capacity of the skim milk outlet increases, which leaves less milk for the cream outlet, and consequently a richer cream is the result.

Crowding Separator.

Crowding the separator will give a thinner cream with a large loss of fat in the skim milk. Decrease in the rate of inflow results, first in a smaller amount of cream in proportion to skim milk; second, in a higher percentage of fat in the cream; the loss of fat in skim milk is not materially affected.

The more milk that there is in the tank the more rapidly will the milk flow through the bowl, on account of the greater pressure. If the tank is kept one-third full the cream will be thicker than when the tank is kept brimful.

If just enough flushing is used to discharge the cream remaining in the separator bowl, the percentage of fat in the cream will be materially changed. When an excess of water or skim milk is used the fat test in the cream will be lowered considerably. It is better to pour the flush water or milk into the supply tank; it will run gradually through the machine, and the greater part will pass out through the skim milk outlet, making little change in the richness of the cream. Great variation in the richness of the cream is brought about by the practice of removing the float and pouring the flush water or skim milk directly into the bowl.

CANADA'S NEW WIRELESS STATION BREAKS ALL RECORDS BIGGEST IN THE WORLD

Outfit at Newcastle, N. B., Is Five Hundred Feet In Height and Has Six Three-Hundred-Foot Auxiliaries—It Has Cost $175,000 and Includes Two Big Motors and Two Generators.

On the banks of the Miramichi in the Province of New Brunswick is the little town of Newcastle, that historic spot where, in days of old, Boishebert assembled his clans preparatory to making onslaughts on the English at St. John, Chignecto and Quebec, says L. R. Hetherington in The Canadian Courier.

In that town to-day, the Universal Radio Syndicate, with Mr. E. W. Sawyer, of San Francisco, as construction engineer, has about completed the most powerful wireless station in the world.

Above the busy traffic of the Intercolonial Railway trains as they go rushing by, it thrusts its steel head 500 feet in the air surrounded by its six 300 feet auxiliaries.

Strung between these towers, like a high umbrella, is the antenna, a net work of about 120,000 feet of silicon bronze wire. A vast number of trenches have been dug on the grounds and another 140,000 feet of wire has been laid in these to secure proper ground connections.

In the operating house at the base of the steel tower are installed the sending and receiving instruments, manufactured in Copenhagen, Denmark.

Outside the line of towers the power house is located. This is equipped with two 225 h.p. motors each weighing 50,000 pounds, of the largest design, directly coupled to two 1,000 volts D. C. generator supplying power to the operating instruments. The fly wheels of these engines are eleven feet in diameter and weigh seven tons.

It has been most interesting to watch the workmen as they traveled up and down to their work on the tall steel tower. They worked inside the structure on a movable platform, which looked fairly substantial, but they were taken up in a frail looking box elevator, hoisted by a steam winch outside the trestle work, with a steel cable, which seems like a mere thread.

The distance across the Atlantic to the corresponding station at Ballybunion, south-west coast of Ireland, is about 2,700 miles.

The total cost of the station was about $175,000.

Among the wireless systems now in use are the Marconi, Poulsen, Goldschmidt, Lodge-Muirhead, Slaby-arco, Braun-Siemens-Halske, Branley-Popp, Rochefort, Ducretet-Popoff and the Guarini.

The system used in Newcastle is the Poulsen, invented in 1905 by Dr. Poulsen, a Danish scientist, and while fundamentally like the other systems, differs materially in many essential features. The Marconi system makes signals by closing and breaking an electric circuit. Every dot and dash signal represents an independent electric current impulse transmitted through the air; the Poulsen system makes signals by varying—at the will of the sending operator—the electrical wave length in a continuous current. The Marconi system opens the line of transmission for each separate signal; the Poulsen system opens the line once and keeps it open by continuous electric impulses, while the signals are being transmitted.

In the Marconi system, the question whether these intermittent waves sent out reach a certain point, depends upon the energy of each initial impulse. It is like throwing a stone into a pond, if the stone is big enough and the pond is not too large, the waves which are very large at the spot where the stone falls into the water, will finally reach the shore, although very much diminished in size. In the Poulsen system the waves not only preserve their original form, but as the energy is being sent out constantly, one wave reinforces the other. This system operates night and day with the same efficiency, sunlight having very slight effect on transmission. A drawback to which other systems are subject is their efficiency—as far as distance is concerned—is three or four times greater at night than in the day time. Stations that can reach a ship 1,000 or 2,000 miles at night cannot reach over 200 or 300 in the day time. This is supposed to be caused by the electrification of the ether by the sun's rays, which presumably makes it more difficult for the artificially created waves to travel through the ether, and also causes a greater absorption of energy by the earth.

Poulsen signals can only be read by Poulsen receiving apparatus. This prevents other wireless stations from reading messages not intended for them.

Duplex sending and receiving has been accomplished by this system, which means that two messages can be sent or received by the same antenna simultaneously.

There is much discussion now over the question, "Will wireless oust cables?" and it is the general opinion if cable companies adopt the wireless they will more than hold their own against the wireless company not having cables. The commercial speed expected from the wireless station at Newcastle is 150 words a minute, while the greatest speed worked by cables across the Atlantic is 50 words a minute.

Immediate connection from one continent to another seventy years ago sounded about as real as building a tower to the moon. When, in 1857, the great cable was laid from Ireland to Newfoundland, which linked the hemispheres, there was great international rejoicing. It was a wonderful accomplishment. But, when, in 1897, Marconigrams were sent without any visible path to travel, and received hundreds of miles away, it was much more wonderful and seemed nothing short of a modern miracle.

HUERTA, MAN AND SOLDIER

A writer, C. N. Adossides, in a recent issue of the Review of Reviews, writing on "Huerta, the Man, the Soldier," says:

Huerta is much the same type of Mexican as Porfirio Diaz, more Indian than Spanish by blood, appearance and traits, but he has not the far-sounding voice of Diaz, nor can he ever hope to become such a world-compeller.

Educated at the military academy of Chapultepec, and with no influence at his back, he advanced slowly. In 1897, General Reyes was minister of war, and conspired against Diaz. Among his fellow-conspirators was Victoriano Huerta. The intrigue discovered, Reyes was exiled, ostensibly to study military tactics in Germany, while Huerta was deprived of his command.

When Madero started his revolution against Diaz, Huerta offered to fight the uprising but Diaz, skeptical of the disgraced officer, refused to accept the offer. Later, however, before leaving the capital, Diaz reinstated Huerta in the army, believing the partisan of Reyes would never make common cause with Madero. Ironically enough, Huerta was in command of the troops that escorted the deluded ex-president to Vera Cruz.

Campaign Against Orozco.

After the departure of Porfirio Diaz, Huerta's ambition, cunning and an amount of genuine ability that gathered lustre under the conditions prevailing in Mexico, promoted him to the foremost rank of Madero's army. For six months he was in command of the operations against Zapata, but accomplished nothing, albeit he gained the reputation of being a merciless murderer of prisoners of war, a "man-eater."

In 1912, as successor of Gonzales Salas, Huerta conducted the successful northern campaign against Pascual Orozco, and became Huerta the conqueror and pet hero of the country. Much of his military glory at the time rested upon his own report of the battle of Reyano. This battle took place in June, 1912. Orozco and about 8,000 men, armed with Winchester rifles, occupied the heights surrounding the Reyano canon through which the Federals were forced to pass on their march northward. Orozco's artillery consisted of a few pieces captured from the Federals in a previous engagement, and he had no ammunition for these guns save some makeshift shells manufactured in the railroad shops of Chihuahua, which shells, besides being of inadequate range, seldom exploded. Huerta, on the other hand, had 12,000 men equipped with modern Mauser rifles, and his artillery was composed of fifty field pieces.

Celebrated Too Soon.

After two or three hours of skirmishing a force of about 2,000 Rebels was seen to retreat across the mountains. Huerta, convinced that a battle had been won, began to celebrate, and very shortly he was the worse for brandy.

At about midnight, Gerald Brandon, a fearless and thoroughly seasoned American correspondent, who was accompanying the Federal column, came across a force of Rebels advancing from the left in an attempt to flank Huerta. Brandon rushed to headquarters and warned the General, who was in no condition to absorb the import of the warning, but Col. Navarette, one of the only few sober officers in charge, took heed of the information, and stretched an infantry force across the threatened flank in time to check the advancing enemy.

My informant, an officer of Huerta, assured me that had it not been for the timely action of the American correspondent, Huerta, his entire staff, and all the artillery would have fallen into the hands of the enemy and almost without a struggle, for it is a well-known fact that artillery cannot defend itself against the attack of infantry.

Love of Display.

Upon his return to Mexico City it was said that the victor had secured spoils that were not reckoned with thegenerosity of Madero. He had acquired a luxurious supply of automobiles, carriages, horses and other delicacies purloined from private individuals and mining companies in Chihuahua by Orosco.

That battle of Reyano and his last conflict with Orosco at Bashimba occurred two years ago. Since then the inarticulate schemes and ambitions of the commander-in-chief have risen to articulate voice and action.

For months, Madero's popularity had been at low ebb. The restless people of Mexico were looking for a new Messiah, feeling the necessity for a stronger and more experienced hand to conduct the entangled affairs of the nation. It was an opportune time for the ambitious and glory-spattered General Huerta to fall upon the presidency. But how? Surely not by way of a revolution. That would have been too flagrant ingratitude. Madero had paid liberally for the services rendered in the north, and the victorious General could not afford to so openly snap at the hand that had fed him. He was confident that there would be a less perilous and more plausible means to the end he had in mind; and he did not have to wait long for that to present itself.

Joins Diaz's Conspiracy.

Huerta made his first move towards his goal under cover of the uprising instigated by Felix Diaz at Vera Cruz in October, 1912. This feeble revolution was short-lived and Diaz, the victim of treason, captured, imprisoned, and sentenced to death. Thanks to the efforts of his friends and the mercy of Madero, the prisoner escaped execution and was brought to Mexico City for incarceration. Upon his arrival Huerta secretly communicated and conspired with Diaz, who was eager enough to be aided in the ousting of Madero and seizing of the presidency. But Huerta was not playing for the benefit of Diaz; his game was in favor of his friend, Bernardo Reyes.

A revolt headed by the cadets of Chapultepec Academy broke out in Mexico City, and the infuriated military element rushed to the palace to demand Madero's resignation. Madero obstinately refused to be intimidated by the demonstration. At the same time the doors of the city's prison were thrown open, and Felix Diaz, surrounded by a powerful force with ample artillery at their command, fought the defenders of Madero. General Reyes, who had joined the revolutionists, was killed in the conflict.

Career as Dictator.

Now was the moment for Victoriano Huerta and General Blanquet (the recent minister of war) to betray their benefactor. Huerta gripped his opportunity. He arrested Madero at the national palace and later he is believed to have given the cowardly order to assassinate the well-meaning and unfortunate president.

Huerta's first affair of dictatorship was to make his new power felt by those whose attitude towards him was inimical. He began to sweep his enemies into prison or to have them executed. Then, to crush the revolutions and to protect himself from the vengeance of Pancho Villa, he prepared an elaborate military program and succeeded in raising the standard of the Mexican army to 50,000 men, mostly impressed volunteers or liberated jail-birds.

With the support of the U. S. he might have become another Diaz. He might even have restored peace and order in Mexico, for the insolvent and audacious provisional president of Mexico is neither a puppet nor figurehead.

Victoriano Huerta has proven himself to be a potent administrator as well as a most efficient militarist. It would be fair to admit that he has not had time to demonstrate to the world how able he is to bring about the pacification of Mexico. In that unhappy land south of the Rio Grande only an iron hand can rule effectively, the primitiveness and the ignorance of the peon added to his base social and mental condition makes him an unruly animal who, if he is to be dominated, must be dominated by brute force, the only law he has been taught to respect during his centuries of servitude. It took Porfirio Diaz twelve years to enforce the law and to bring an unwonted order and prosperity to the country. Huerta has had a little over a year to cope with the situation, and in spite of the bitter strife within the borders of the republic and the systematic antagonism from without, he has succeeded in holding his own much longer than expected.

Got Good Aides.

It is true that a number of innocent men have suffered under the new dictatorship, that deputies have been imprisoned, that Senator Dominguez mysteriously disappeared, and others have been less mysteriously dismissed, but on the other hand Huerta has surrounded himself with competent men, has sought a qualified support and retained it. A usurper and self-imposed dictator he may have been, but for that matter so has been many another Mexican president.

He accepts the fact of his enemies with a philosophical degree of stoicism. He has no tender sensibilities to be strung by criticism, no dictatorial conscience, no upsetting compunctions upon which persons or circumstance can play.

He has hoped to behold his present enemies, the Constitutionalists, rushing on a more serious errand than civil warfare, to see them rallying to preserve the honor and dignity of the fatherland. With the united factions he hoped to resist the hated "Gringo." There would no longer be Federals and Constitutionalists, but Mexicans defending the realm of Huerta. He relied upon the fickleness of the Mexican character, counting upon the Mexican's hatred for the mighty and meddling white neighbor, on the chaos in which his own cupidity shall become lost, or dwindled into a comprehensible sin of patriotism. His cold imagination figured upon such possibilities, found it the longest but the safest route around the mountain of difficulties that has loomed up in his Presidential path.

Harvey In a Tight Fix.

Extremely embarrassing was the experience of Martin Harvey, the English actor, in a city in Ontario where he happened to be chatting with a well-known judge. They began to talk about education, and Mr. Harvey's host suddenly suggested, "Look here, you must come up to the Normal School and give them an address on this subject."

Mr. Harvey was in the position of many a man who will discuss a subject though he does not wish to get up on the platform and air his views. He tried to excuse himself.

"No, no, I know nothing about it," he said. "Besides Lord Haldane has said all there is to say about education."

"Never mind," remarked the judge cheerily, "come up and say something."

Referring to the matter later on, Mr. Harvey said, "Can you imagine my feelings, standing up there before hundreds of very earnest-looking young women to talk to them on a subject I know nothing about?"

A FISH MYSTERY

How Did Onananiche Get Into Little Northern Lake.

An elderly man, of erect, powerful build, wearing the clothes and the air of affluence, attracted some attention around the shanty men's boarding places at Hull. He was making a search for old-timers who knew the North Gatineau woods of forty years ago.

"The fact of the matter is that I want to go into a little lake way up the Gens de Terre, where McAfee got out saw logs in '65. There's a bunch of trout I put into that lake which ought to be about ready to make a nice little mess of fish by this time. I don't believe anyone would notice them in that bit of a pond, and there must have been very nigh a couple of hundred of them when I put them in.

"I was only a slip of a boy then, a cook's mate, and the clerk of the shanty, at $4 a month and board. Roy O'Moore was the cook, a wild, goodnatured Irishman, with a temper like the very dickens. There was not a great deal for me to do, but the brook just back of the shanty was full of trout, so that I was never lonesome, though when Roy was out of sorts it was not healthy to be indoors with him.

"The men were all fond of fried fish, and so long as I only brought in large ones and had them ready cleaned, he didn't mind or care how much time I gave to my sport. That was a fine stream for speckled trout I tell you.

"I had a regular string of holes out in the ice, and used to get a good many in the open spots at the little falls. A hundred a day was not a very unusual thing. But the little chaps used to worry me a lot. I had always been taught to put back anything under seven inches, but those trout would never learn anything, and would come back and bite again as soon as they got in the water, though their mouths were hanging in rags where the hook had torn them.

"So after a bit I hit upon the plan of keeping the small fellows in a pail of water and carrrying them across to the little lake where the teamsters watered their horses. There were no other fish there as far as I could find out. At least none who cared for raw pork or young trout anyway."

Young Dan O'Moore, grandson of the former cook, was easily engaged to accompany the elderly sportsman, and a mutual friend, on his trouting trip up the river.

Thanks to the railway and a good canoe trip afterwards, they were on the site of the old broken-down shanty a day or two later, fully equipped for the fishery. The tiny lake, it was only fifty feet across, was alive with fine fish. They had all the proclivities of the dashing brook trout, snatching at the raw pork with avidity. There was not much science about it, for the trout had not the least fear of the hook. Some of the largest went up to twelve pounds, one noble fish touching fifteen pounds on the steelyards when first caught. Once or twice their lines were broken by exceptionally heavy fish, and curiosity was excited by the light appearance of these giants.

At last the friend, who was the only one using a light rod and fine running tackle, had a grand fight with one of the big fellows, which jumped about in exceedingly lively style. He was killed after a time, and turned out to be a properly marked salmon, possibly a Ouananiche of five pounds.

Several of these mighty fighters were hooked in that miserable water hole without visible outlet or inlet, but only one was landed. The party is said to have applied for exclusive rights to fishing the pond, and possibly the old sportsman, who has made his pile, will buy a lot or two of land about there, and run up a fishing shack.

The speckled trout was accounted for, of course, by the transplanting through the medium of the cook's mate water pail, but it is an interesting question, though rather difficult to answer—How did the Ouananiche get into that tiny lake?

Gentle Sarcasm.

When the present Judge Longley was Attorney-General of Nova Scotia he was arguing a case in which he pointed out that whatever decision was given would be a precedent for all time, and would be referred to as an authority when all the parties concerned had passed off the stage of life.

"This case will be cited," he announced, "and referred to as authority when this court house has crumbled into dust, when I have gone to heaven, and when my learned friend has gone to his reward."

Hit It Right.

Barbar (after the shave) — Hair dyed, sir?

Customer (bald headed) — Yes. It died about five years ago.

Maddening Snuff.

On the Amazon river several Indian tribes use snuff, called parica, which is made of the seeds of a species of plant. When a bout of snuff taking is determined on the people become highly intoxicated and then use the snuff. The effect of parica is so violent that the taker drops as if shot and lies insensible for some time. Those more accustomed to it are highly excited, dancing and singing as if mad. The effect soon subsides. Other tribes use it to repel argue during the wet season.

PRINCE OF WALES AT OXFORD

The Prince of Wales has now been an undergraduate at Oxford for just two years, writes "a fellow-undergraduate" in the Times. When he first came up rumor had it that his university life was to last the all too short space of one year only, and it was particularly welcome news to all Oxford the other day that it had been decided to prolong his stay for a further period. For Oxford is slow moving in many ways. You cannot appreciate her in a day; and on her part, even in the case of princes, it is only after close and tested acquaintances that individual members are accorded her approval and praise. Therefore it was good news that the Prince of Wales was to stay longer among us, both that the spell of Oxford might sink yet deeper into his memory, and also that Oxford's respect and affection for him might be still stronger and more lasting.

King Edward at Christ Church.

The Prince's life at Oxford has been an experiment of a rather daring kind. It cannot be very easy, in planning the details of education, to reconcile the position of the Prince and the position of the man. On the one hand, it may be decided that it is impossible for the Royal personage to like the life of his contemporaries as they live it, or to go through the education of an ordinary individual. Thus King Edward was sent as an undergraduate to Oxford, but his position was never normal. He never occupied an undergraduate's rooms in Christ Church; he was marked out by the special gown he wore, and when he attended a debate at the Union everybody present respectfully rose when he entered. Thus, however pleasant and valuable his Oxford days may have been, King Edward can never have participated in the free, good fellowship which we all enjoy; he can never have tasted to the full the fun and interest which comes alone from the irresponsible and equal association of friends. In realising in its entirety the incomparable happiness of Oxford at its best, perhaps the most humble undergraduate was more fortunate than he.

But for the present Prince it was decided otherwise. He was to be in every sense an ordinary undergraduate. No distinctions were to be observed by those he met in manner or in style of speech. There were to be no special privileges. He was to come up as a "fresher" and behave as a "fresher." Thus, when he eventually arrived, we found that he was in no way different from any other undergraduate, except that he looked rather more youthful than most, that he still retained a passionate and almost wistful love of his life as a sailor, and that he had taken the unusual course for an undergraduate of bringing with him an equerry and a tutor, who lurked somewhere in the background.

Oxford took, perhaps, a fortnight before it settled down entirely and got over the novelty of having the Prince of Wales going in and coming out daily. There were tiresome photographers and reporters and a tendency for crowds to collect at likely places for him to pass. But his fellow-undergraduates did not take long to learn the necessary lesson. Members of Balliol signified their opinion of an inquisitive crowd, who gathered outside the college to see the Prince go in to a lecture, by pouring water from upper windows on their heads. In Magdalen everything was made easy for him to take an immediate place in college life and interests. And he plunged at once into an almost bewildering catholicity of interests and amusements. He was entertained and gave entertainments in return; and those present found that though he was at first rather shy, he was a delightful addition to a dinner party, most attractive in the quiet and humble part he took in the conversation, but full of humor and with opinions at once decided and sane. His laugh and smile are perhaps particularly attractive. And through all this he plunged headlong into all the variety of interests, with which the public through the press are already acquainted. He was content to play football eagerly and perseveringly for the college second eleven; he became a private in the Officers' Training Corps; he played golf, ran with the beagles, drove his motor car with enthusiastic speed. When he was not actually playing there was no more zealous spectator of college competitions, and in Eights week no more untiring follower of the boat from the towpath. He was not at first fond of riding, but by now this has entirely changed; he is an admirable horseman and has added polo to his other enthusiasms. He overjoyed the tobacconists of Oxford, as well as other tradesmen, by falling an easy victim to the profusion of rare tobaccos, straight grained pipes, and other cunningly designed and presumably useful articles which are spread forth as a snare for the solvent freshman.

And in these, as in other ways, he has increasingly drunk deep of all that Oxford offers. A certain number have been drawn into his personal friendship, and are the happier in it. He has taken his share in those intimacies and friendships between undergraduates and dons to which so many look lovingly back. And he has been liked and respected by all.

A Successful Experiment.

But the point to notice in considering all these activities is that by allowing the Prince to lead an ordinary life great risks were taken and successfully passed. There are no great animosities in Oxford, but the members of one set are not always too friendly to those of another. There must have been an anxiety before he came up that the Prince would not be able to avoid being drawn too much into a particular group. Moreover the removal of the privileges and distinctions of his rank necessarily involved his being placed in a position of equality in a society fastidious as well as appreciative, and critical as well as kindly. Again, if the Prince were to play so many games and take part in so many activities he had to steer a middle course between an undignified obscurity and an embarrassing prominence. Finally, some must have wondered whether anyone could enjoy such a life of irresponsible equality, and then easily pass on to the life of high position and formality and publicity.

It is the highest tribute to the Prince of Wales as undergraduate that he has avoided all these perils. He has mingled with all sets, and taken part in the antagonisms of none. He has played all his games for his side's benefit, not his own. He has been liked, but yet respected. And he has gone with perfect simplicity to such public acts as the welcoming of the French President or a Garter ceremonial and then returned with equal lack of ostentation to the quiet life at Oxford.

In the high tasks that lie before him he will take from Oxford the deep affection of his personal friends and the respect and admiration of us all.

PRINCESS WAS FOOLED.

Wooden Soldiers Stood as Sentry at Her Door.

In 1805 Ferdinand IV. was driven from the throne of Naples. All the members of his family, except an aged half-sister, fled to Sicily. Of the lonely old Bourbon princess who remained in the land where her family had reigned, De Gute Kamerad tells a touching little story.

The victorious French, who had driven Ferdinand from the throne, treated the old lady with every consideration. The new King, Joseph Bonaparte, left her property and her income virtually intact. But he did order that the sentry who always had stood before the door of the princess and had saluted when she passed, should be removed. And on this point, in spite of the princess' pleas, he remained firm. The Bourbons had ceased to reign, he said, and no royal honors could properly be accorded to a member of the family.

The loss of this mark of respect wounded the princess more deeply than many more serious losses had done. For the first time she felt herself an outcast, an exile in her own land. She grieved so steadily that her strength began to fail.

Finally the loyal servants who had stayed with their mistress, decided to resort to a subterfuge in order to restore the old lady's spirits. Accordingly they fashioned a great wooden soldier, of dignified and martial appearance; on this dummy they painted the gay uniform of the Neapolitan grenadier. They set the figure in a sentry box by the gate of the princess' residence, and waited for their mistress to drive out.

They counted on the nearsightedness of the princess, and on the fact that she always passed through the gate in her carriage, to make the ruse successful. And when at last the carriage did pass, they saw by the glad flush that came to the princess' face that she had not detected the deception.

From that time the princess revived. The sentry never left his post, and the princess never discovered the ruse by which her loyal servants had restored her spirits and her health. But occasionally she did complain that under the new regime soldiers did not present arms, as they had done in the days when her brother was King.

Live Minnow In Tube For Bait.

Of interest to fishermen is a novel contrivance recently patented for using a single live minnow for an entire day's fishing for maskinonge or bass. A strong, clear glass tube is equipped with metallic rings, to which are attached clusters of hooks, and a loop wire. A live minnow is placed within the tube, which is filled with water, and the fishline is attached to the wire loop. Upon casting the minnow into the water the tube magnifies the minnow and attracts the large fish. Fresh water is constantly admitted into the tube, and the minnow is not injured, mutilated nor hurt in any way, no matter how many times it is cast. The glass tube, filled with water, is invisible the moment it is submerged.

In No Hurry.

A lecturer one torrential night addressed an audience which might have been much larger without taxing the seating capacity of the hall. Naturally he was willing to curtail his address, and, having reached what he considered the psychological moment, said, "I'm afraid I've kept you too long."

Whereupon a voice replied, "Go on; it's still raining."

Rubbing It In.

"Why does that lady grin so every time she sees you?"

"She knows I'm only getting $10 a week."

"But why the grin?"

"I was engaged to her once and broke it off, and she afterward married a millionaire."

Not [illegible]

"What was I saying when I ordered that automobile?"

"You were saying that life is not worth living. [illegible] why did you [illegible]?"

By J. D. Logan, Ph.D.

Practically, humorists may be divided into two classes — those who laugh at the universe and those who laugh for it. The first are the so-called "funny men" or the cheerful cynics; the second are those who, with the same sort of vision possessed by Sophocles and Shakespeare, see life steadily and see it whole. Mark Twain belonged to the latter class; and to this class, when he employs seriously his gifts of creating laughter, belongs Lt.-Col. George Ham, for the last quarter century publicist for the Canadian Pacific.

The present writer has signalized the concave or inner side of Col. Ham's genius by a summary descriptive title to the real man,—namely, "Canada's Laughing Philosopher." In ancient days Democritus was popularly known as "The Laughing Philosopher"; but Democritus was a materialist and his was laughter at the universe—at the emptiness and futility of existence. Why weep, he asked, over life when it is all a vain show, and when, in the end, we perish as the grass of the fields? Smile, laugh,—eat, drink, and be merry. On the other hand, Col. Ham is an idealist, and his is laughter for the human race. It is laughter with a philosophy of faith and hope and love as its source and end, because Col. Ham perceives that despite sorrow, misfortune, defeat, and even death, men and women can make themselves at home in the world and essentially enjoy their sojourn on earth by affirming in thought and conduct that human misfortune and evil are but dissonances which are somehow resolved in an ultimate divine harmony. It is because the genuine—the philosophical—humorist takes, either consciously or unconsciously, this attitude to himself to life, to the universe that he is the most serious of men, even more so than the conventionally serious man or the religious ascetic.

"That's me," the present writer once overheard Col. Ham say in his colloquial way to a friend who wanted him to speak at a public function, "that's me. I'm always for forlorn meetings. Well, I'll be there with the sunshine." In short, Col. Ham has a definitely realized theory of the function of humor and of his mission in the world. "I spread the gospel of good cheer, despite the caprice in the universe," he said to the present writer, "in order that men and women may love and enjoy life and do so abundantly. Even if it should happen to prove in the end that death ends all, men can make themselves at home on earth by thinking evil away and, like Robert Louis Stevenson, setting about to get happiness, in Satan's despite, out of existence."

It is by virtue of Col. Ham's philosophical observations such as the preceding, uttered casually but with conviction, and by virtue of his equally casual expression of his serious views on the persistent problems of life and death, that one divines the mind and heart of the real man behind the mask of the humorist—the philosopher behind the infectious laughter with which he has made men love their enemies, fostered faith and hope in mankind, and brightened or enlivened existence for thousands of human beings. Will not the practical philosophy of such a versatile man as Col. Ham, who has been a patriot-soldier, war correspondent, civic officer, journalist, publicist, traveler and speaker at public functions, be of great value to all who wish to see life, as he sees it, steadily and whole? Following are some of his reasoned views on the serious phases or problems of existence:

"Suppose," said Col. Ham, "that a young brakeman marries a sweet girl, and that after their honeymoon has ended, he takes up his routine work. One morning he bids her good-bye, and takes his place on his train. Stealing a ride on the same train is a hobo. A wreck occurs. The young brakeman is killed and the dirty, good-for-nothing, vicious hobo escapes. How can one justify such caprice in God's universe? According to our view of God's economy the hobo should have had his existence ended, and the brakeman should have escaped. It is this malign sportiveness in the universe that does more than anything else to destroy men's belief in God.

"Now," continued Col. Ham, "it has not destroyed my belief in the existence of the Deity. In a million million years, what is the significance of our existence? We can imagine the worm when trodden upon and killed saying in its dying agonies, 'Ah, there is no God.' Well, from the point of view of eternity, love, sorrow, defeat and death are but drops of experience in the great ocean of experience since the universe began. The intense tragic point of view is too human and personal. Man's few days and the vicissitudes of his life are under the tragic vision, raised to an importance which they do not deserve. But the genuine comic vision places man and his virtues and follies against a background of eternal reality; clarifies man's vision of his place and part in God's economy, and thus effects in him sanity and peace. The laughter of the genuine, the philosophical, humorist, is pure laughter of the spirit. Ours is a Show world, and behind it all there is a beneficent Showman, and therefore the genuine humorist laughs with those who laugh and weeps with those who weep because, unless there were evil in the universe, he would not perceive that there must be also a resolving divine harmony."

Col. Ham has positive philosophical views on spiritualism, telepathy, occult affinities and repulsions. In his view some dreams do come true, but his belief in this is thoroughly scientific. That is to say, in his experience the number of dreams that have had fulfilment in fact has been so great that Col. Ham is compelled to believe that the universe is spiritual through and through, and that "spirit with spirit can meet"—though separated by space and time. In other words, like a scientist, he makes an induction from many like instances of a phenomenon.

He cited recently several instances of telepathic influence. One kind is especially interesting. Col. Ham declares that frequently he has suddenly thought of friends long absent, and far away, or that he would dream of receiving a letter from them, and, sure enough, when he arrived, at his office there was a letter awaiting him from the very persons he had thought of. "This phenomenon has occurred so often in my experience," he says, "that inductively I conclude that there are spiritual influences all around us, and that they can communicate mysteriously with us."

In a like manner Col. Ham believes that there are occult affinities and repulsions in the universe. "I have had letters from certain people whom I never saw," he said, "and immediately some subtle spiritual influence moved me so that I knew that I would or would not like the persons if ever I met them. So indeed it has proved scores of times. At the moment of actual meeting I felt genuinely friendly or repelled. The great hidden soul of the universe had sent its occult message to me, and I found the message was real in fact."

As a speaker at banquets and public occasions, Col. Ham has for many years been a "sine qua non." He is unequalled as a raconteur; all his stories or anecdotes have 'tang,'—the piquancy which evokes not only laughter but reflection on the deeper meaning of his humor or wit.

"Many, or indeed most, people believe," he said to the present writer, "that the function of a humorist at a banquet or public occasion is to dispense new jokes, witticisms and enlivening stories. As a matter of fact, the banquet speaker has no justification except in aiming higher. The pressure of life to-day demands, of course, relief. Banquets themselves help in this end; and while I do dispense jokes and anecdotes in my role as speaker at banquets and at like occasions, I aim most to create a feeling of good fellowship, to nourish tolerance, to foster faith in mankind, and to cause men to believe that, despite the caprice and vicissitudes of life, the good green earth is a pleasant place in which to sojourn."

Amongst Canadians of this day Lt.-Col. George H. Ham stands forth a man unique as a patriot, soldier, journalist, publicist and raconteur. "The greatest wit, unprinted and unbound, in North America," a writer described him some years ago.

By the Professor.

Professor Jones and Mrs. Jones were both of the type colloquially known as strawberry blonds. In accordance with the immemorial custom of professors' families on small salaries at this particular southern college, the Jones family grew apace. Mary, the first, was born, and her hair came perilously near to being cerise. The twins lost to Mary in respect of red hair by just a shade. Johnny, the next, bade fair at three months to make Mary seem a neutral color. Now, Mrs. Jones longed for just one black haired one. When the learned professor of ology from the scientific department dropped in for supper Mrs. Jones almost tearfully propounded to him a question.

"Oh, doctor," she asked, "do you think it must always be hereditary?"

The doctor looked from the aureoles of Professor and Mrs. Jones to the successive four alarms of fire red hair on the little Joneses.

"Not so much that," he assured her at last, "as redheditary."—New York Post.

Suspicious.

"There's something the matter with that man. I know it."

"What do you mean?"

"There's something about his character that is bad."

"How can you say that? He's a man of standing in this community."

"I don't care. I wouldn't trust him."

"What a silly idea! His honor has never been questioned."

"Oh, yes, it has, and that's why I say that with all his fine outward show there's something bad behind him."

"I don't see what makes you say that. Everybody knows he's all right."

"My suspicions have been confirmed. Wasn't he drawn on a jury the other day and didn't the lawyer for the defense peremptorily discharge him? That lawyer wouldn't have him in the case for anything."—Detroit Free Press.

Lost Her Place.

Gertrude, aged three, sat in her high chair at the dinner table turning about in her fingers a small ear of corn, from which she had been nibbling a row at a time. Suddenly she burst into tears.

"What is the matter, dear?" asked her mother.

"I've lost my place!" sobbed the little one.—Delineator.

The Tragedies of Old Age.

With all its compensations, age has yet many tragedies hard to endure. The old man finds that many of his hopes have withered, that many of his ambitions are unsatisfied. He started out in life with great ambitions to become a Prime Minister, a president, to command the applause of listening senates, to achieve great riches. He slowly finds that his initial ambition can bear no fruit and that he must be content with little. He must learn to secure a degree of comfort in lowering his ambition to second place or to third place or to no place at all. But age brings the compensation of a better judgment of values.

Cookery Points

Variety in Strawberry Time.

To the woman whose duties as housewife include the task of devising desserts for the year the coming of the strawberry season is a relief. The family is then treated to fresh strawberries for lunch, strawberries and cream for dinner, strawberries for lunch tomorrow and strawberries and cake tomorrow dinner. Of course every one likes strawberries, and fresh fruits are unquestionably healthful, so why not have strawberries for breakfast when they are in season instead of other fruits?

The really wise housewife makes strawberry desserts last through the strawberry season by varying her way of presenting them, and it would be difficult to find a fruit that may be served in a greater variety of delicious ways.

Strawberry Shortcake.

Take four cupfuls of sifted flour, three heaping teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one teaspoonful of salt, one teaspoonful of butter, one teaspoonful of lard and enough sweet milk to make a soft dough. Take the hulls from two quarts of strawberries and sprinkle them with granulated sugar, enough to make a quantity of sirup, and let them stand for half an hour. Sift the salt, flour and baking powder together, rub in the shortening and then with a fork stir in lightly and quickly the milk, making a dough that is too soft to be rolled. Turn this into two greased tins and bake a light brown in a quick oven, testing with a straw to see when done. Butter the layers and spread the first with strawberries, pouring over a part of the juice. Place on top of this the next layer, the rest of the berries and juice, set in the oven a few moments and serve hot with a pitcher of sweet cream.

Strawberry Omelet.

When you find a nice box of ripe strawberries fine in flavor buy them and also half a dozen of the freshest eggs. Pick over the berries, saving out about half of the finest solid ones. Cut these in half, put into bowl and add two large tablespoonfuls of sugar, mixed with a little grated orange peel and a dash of lemon juice or grapefruit. Set in refrigerator. Make an omelet of the six eggs and when ready to fold over fill with the sliced berries drained from all juice. Turn the omelet out on the dish, dust with powdered sugar and serve at once.

Jellied Rice With Strawberries.

Wash one cupful of rice through several waters, put on to boil with four quarts boiling water and boil fifteen minutes; drain. Have two cupfuls of milk in top of double boiler, add the rice and boil thirty minutes; add one teaspoonful gelatin, which has been dissolved in one tablespoonful boiling water; add three-quarter cupful sugar; stir until dissolved. Pour into mold or bowl, which has been rinsed with cold water, set aside in cold place until ready to serve. Turn the rice out on large plate or bowl, and pour crushed strawberries around or over.

Strawberry Whip.

Pick over, wash, hull and drain berries. There should be one and one-fourth cupfuls. Put in a bowl with one cupful of powdered sugar and the white of one egg. Beat, using a wire whisk, until the mixture is stiff enough to hold its shape. About one-half hour will be required for the beating. Pile lightly on a dish and accompany with cold boiled custard, vanilla flavored.

Iced Strawberry Pudding.

Boil two heaping cupfuls of sugar and two cupfuls of water together for thirty minutes, watching that it does not get too thick. Beat the yolks of six eggs very light and add to the boiling sirup. Stir a moment over the fire, then turn into a large bowl and beat until cold and thick. Then add one pint of strawberry juice and freeze.

Strawberry Cake.

Make a sponge cake according to any good recipe, bake in a border mold and let stand till night. Ten minutes before serving arrange the cake on a platter and fill the center with alternate layers of whole berries and sweetened whipped cream, putting a rim of the cream around the outer edge of the cake and bordering it with berries.

Strawberry Fritters.

Take one cupful mashed and strained strawberries, three beaten eggs, one tablespoonful sugar, one cupful flour, one teaspoonful baking powder. Add more flour if needed to make batter stiff enough. Drop by spoonfuls into very hot fat and fry like doughnuts. Serve with mashed strawberries.

Strawberry Pie.

Line a deep pie plate with pie crust and prick in several places. Bake to a delicate brown. Fill the shell with crushed, sweetened berries and spread with whipped cream. Or place one quart of sweetened berries in a deep baking dish, cover with a sheet of rich pie crust and bake.

Strawberry Jelly.

Make a lemon jelly and fill your mold with nicely picked strawberries. Pour your lemon jelly over them till the mold is full. Set on ice to harden. Serve with sugar and cream.

THE SIWASH INDIAN'S PECULIAR FESTIVAL, POTLATCH, MUST GO

The Greatest Ambition of the British Columbia Indian Is to Pile Up a Fortune and Then Give It All Away In One Grand Spree—Each Shares Equally In the Distribution of Goods.

There is mourning—black mutiny almost—in the hearts of the Indian tribes on the Pacific Coast to-day. The "potlatch" is doomed. A jury of white men at Vancouver have found Chief Ned and Chief Bagwany, of the Nimpkish tribe, guilty, and a severe-looking judge of the Supreme Court, clad in a black robe, has warned them never to go potlatching again, or else all manner of evil may be visited upon them, says J. Sedgwick Cowper in Toronto Star Weekly.

"Potlatch is very good thing; very good thing for poor Indians. They get blankets and food and money from rich Indians. Rich Indians have to give potlatch themselves if they take blankets; poor Indians not expected to give potlatch. Potlatch is good thing for poor Indians," said Chief Billy Okus mournfully, after he heard the news that the Government had determined to suppress the potlatches. Chief Billy had planned to hold a big potlatch himself this year, at which his own tribe of Cape Mudge Indians and all their neighbors were to be invited.

The potlatch is the Siwash Indian's peculiar festival, at which he distributes his wealth to all-comers. The more he gives the greater the honor. On the gravestone when he dies will be recorded the number of potlatches he has given and the amount he has distributed. One gravestone I saw at Bella Coola, about half-way between Vancouver and Prince Rupert, told of a father and son who in two famous potlatches had given away money and goods to the value of $11,000. Last year, in one big potlatch at Bella Coola, in which several of the leading men took part and Indians from all over the coast were in attendance, goods to the value of $12,000 were potlatched.

Blankets are the staple gift at a potlatch, but bags of flour, sugar, mirrors, even $5 bills have been known to figure in the distribution. Each man shares equally with his fellows, so that none gets more than another. After the distribution is over feasting, singing, and dancing is indulged in, and a big potlatch given by the leading men of one tribe to their neighbors will last for three or four days. No society hostess of the noveau riche struggles harder to win fame by the lavish nature of her entertainments than does the Siwash native in his humbler sphere of life. On behalf of the Siwash it must be said that he has little else to spend his wealth upon. The Government, whose ward he is, provides him with a home on a reserve. Nature each year sends him the salmon which he cures for winter use. His rifle brings him bear meat, and the trapper gives him a good price for the pelt. A cougar or a wolf means a bounty of $15. Deer he may kill for use as food, while dollars come to him for his work in the canneries, or on the trail as a guide for hunting parties.

The Siwash is very much on his dignity when he holds a potlatch. He behaves like a drunken miner fresh from the diggings who wants everyone in town to drink whisky with him at a dollar a glass, and gets offended if his hospitality is slighted. He loves to show with what a generous hand he can throw his wealth away. Such was the state of mind of Joe Cesaholis, a rich Indian of Kingcome Inlet, near the north end of Vancouver Island, last November. Joe gave a big potlatch and invited all his neighbors, but the Kwawkewlith Indians who live at Port Rupert, on the opposite side of Queen Charlotte Sound, had arranged a potlatch of their own, and could not attend.

Joe's potlatch was a grand affair. He had blankets, dressing tables, mirrors, sewing machines, enamelware pots and pans, camphorwood boxes, and gramophones to give away. The gramophone is the sure mark of a bonton affair in potlatches. With a lordly grandeur in their methods, the Kingcome Inlet Indians resolved to show their disdain of the Kwawkewliths who had slighted their invitation. A selection of mirrors, dressing tables, blankets, etc., with two gramaphones, were placed in a boat. Its tiller was lashed and its bow pointed across the sound towards Port Rupert; the gramophones were wound up, and, without a soul on board, it was despatched to the Kwawkewlith Indians. Half way across the sound it was wrecked on Lizard Point, on Malcolm Island, to the great distress of a Finlander settled there. The Finlander spent several days looking for the bodies of the crew whom he supposed had been drowned in the wreck.

The Government is endeavoring to suppress the potlatches, because the Indian agents report that they have a demoralizing effect upon their wards, who spend several days in feasting and carousing at each potlatch, though they are free from the dog-eating, flesh-eating, and voluntary tortures which were a feature of the Indian festivals twenty years ago. Some of the white men in the coast cities, thinking, like Chief Billy Okus, that the potlatch idea is a good one for the poor members of society who attend, far from wishing to see it stamped out among the natives, would like to see the potlatch idea extended into the civilized communities. They would like to get the millionaires and plutocrats of society potlatching against one another for the benefit of the public at large.

Marble Ledge Two Miles Long.

On the southern edge of Texada Island, 55 miles from Vancouver, B.C., there is a marble ledge two miles long, which, it is said, can supply the building trade of America for years.

A local band was one day playing in Scotland, when an old native came up and asked the bandmaster what the piece was they were rendering.

"That's 'The Death of Nelson,'" replied the bandmaster.

"Aye, mon," remarked the native, "ye hae given him an awfu' death!"—Pearson Weekly.

THE LILIBRIDGE SCANDAL

A Mistake in the Name

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Miss Tabitha Way scuttled across the street and entered the gate of her nearest neighbor, Fenella Mason.

"Fenny, what do you think?" she gasped as she sank into a chair.

Fenny Mason lifted her little brown eyes from the molasses cookies she was rolling out and spoke calmly:

"My, Tab, but you're all het up!" she said.

"What if I be?" snapped Tabitha, mopping her face with a corner of her white apron in lieu of a pocket handkerchief.

"Makes you look so uncomfortable," remarked Fenny casually as she knelt before the stove to put a pan of cookies in the oven.

For a moment Tabitha glared at her friend, and then her eagerness to impart her news to Fenny Mason overcame her indignation, and she said:

"I asked you if you'd heard the news?"

"You never asked me any such thing," retorted Fenny over her thin shoulder. "You asked me what I thought, and I told you I thought you looked all het up, so there!"

"I declare, Fenny Mason, you air the greatest critter," Tabitha said. "You won't listen till you get good and ready, so I'm jest going to set right here until you say you're ready to hear about the scandal."

"Scandal?" shrieked Fenny, sitting up straight in her chair, with open mouth. "Why didn't you say so before? I thought you'd come to tell me about the new twins down at Black Hannah's, and I heard all about that from the milkman."

"Well, I never!" gasped Tabby, for this was news to her. "Boys or girls?"

"Girls."

"I wonder what Hannah's going to name 'em?"

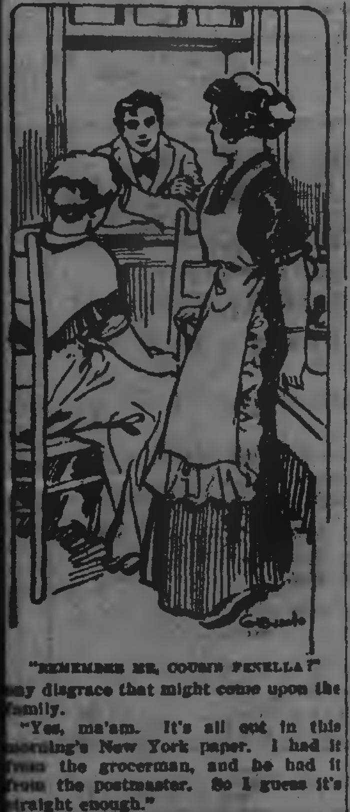
"They're all named—Magnolia and Pergolia."

"The idea! Now, for the news. I'll bet you haven't heard about Deacon Quigg's sŏn."

"Not Alfred?"

"Yes, ma'am! He's robbed a bank!"

"No!" shrieked Fenny, for she was second cousin to the Quiggs and felt any disgrace that might come upon the family.



"REMEMBER ME, COUSIN FENELLA?"

"Yes, ma'am. It's all out in this morning's New York paper. I had it from the grocerman, and he had it from the postmaster. So I guess it's straight enough."

Fenny Mason looked bewildered.

"I didn't know Alfred was in New York," she faltered. "I thought he was in Australia or Patagonia or somewhere."

"The newspaper said that Alfred Quigg, a clerk in the Kinticum national bank of New York city, had absconded with $10,000 of the bank's funds. It said that detectives were close on his trail and that they expected to apprehend him within a day or so. It said that he was the scapegrace son of Deacon Quigg of Lillibridge. There!" said Tabitha Way.

"Well, I don't believe it. There's some mistake," protested Fenella obstinately.

"Anything's possible nowadays, with folks running around in automobiles and airyplanes as cool as you please," remarked Tabby, nibbling pensively at a ginger cooky.

Fenella turned and faced her friend. There was a look of obstinacy in her brown eyes.

"No matter what was told me about Alfred Quigg, I wouldn't believe it—not if it was real bad!" she declared loyally.

"Hurrah for you, Cousin Fenella!" cried a merry voice from the open window.

The women turned with one accord and stared at the sunbrowned, curly haired young man who leaned his arms on the window sill and grinned at them, showing perfect rows of white teeth.

"Remember me, Cousin Fenella?" he asked with easy nonchalance.

"Alfred Quigg!" gasped Fenella, sinking into a chair and quite pale with alarm.

"And I guess Miss Tabby remembers me by this time," smiled Alfred, agreeably nodding at Miss Way. "Last recollection I have of Miss Tabby is that she chased me around the mill pond and told me I'd end on the gallows, all because I teased her old turkey gobbler!"

Fenella Mason looked at Tabitha Way, and Tabitha stared back at her with questioning eyes.

"Come inside, Alfred," whispered Fenella. "I've got something important to tell you."

"Thanks," said Alfred, going round to the screen door and letting himself inside.

As he stood there hat in hand, smiling good naturedly around at the familiar old fashioned room, he was startled at the actions of the two good spinsters whose earnest gossip he had interrupted.

Fenella flew to the door through which he had just entered and slammed it tight shut and locked it. Tabby pulled down the window sash, locked it and pulled the shade to the sill. Then from window to window of the little house flew the two women, pulling down shades and drawing curtains until from without the place looked deserted.

"What's up?" demanded Alfred Quigg when they rushed breathlessly back to the kitchen and caught him by either arm.

"They're coming, Alfred, and you must hide," warned Fenella. "Remember, Tabby and I don't believe a word of it, but you don't want to be caught. Remember your poor parents. You just hide until the worst blows over, and then we'll know what to do. I'm so thankful you came to my house first. You will be safe here. No one would dream of looking for you in Fenella Mason's house. Come!"

So, half explaining, they dragged the bewildered young man up the narrow back stairway to the little closet in the loft room over the kitchen. Here they locked him in, confident that he could not suffocate, for the tiny diamond shaped ventilator would let in sufficient air.

"They're a pair of crazy loons, and I may as well let them have their own way until dark," decided Alfred when his indignation had cooled. "Then I can push out of this place and go home."

• • • • • • •

It was drawing toward sunset, and Fenella Mason and Tabby Way still sat in Fenella's kitchen discussing the fugitive concealed in the loft room closet.

They had been up there once and handed Alfred a well laden tray of food, for which he had given them scanty thanks.

"I'm glad he came here first," Fenella was saying for the hundredth time that afternoon when there came a thundering knock at the kitchen door.

"It's them!" hissed Tabby.

Fenella went to the door and peeped through an opening in the shade.

"'Tain't no one but Alfred's pa, the deacon," she whispered. "Guess I better let him in."

She cautiously opened the door and permitted the amazed old man to enter the darkened room.

"What in tarnation pumpkins is the matter with you, Fenny?" he asked testily. "Locked up here tight as a drum! You old maids air the confoundedest critters! You act as if a hull regiment of marriageable men was lurking around the yard waiting to break into the house and elope with you! Have you seen Alfred?"

"Alfred?" gasped Fenella.

"Alfred?" echoed Tabitha.

"Yes, Alfred!" barked the deacon, flinging his cap down on the table. "We had a telegram from him saying he'd just got back from Patagonia. You know he went as first mate on a freight steamer. Station master has just told me Alfred arrived on the 11 o'clock train this morning and somebody said they saw him coming into your gate. Ma and I are worn out waiting for him. Where is Alfred?"

"Up in the loft room closet," said Fenella faintly.

"Why?" thundered the deacon.

It was Tabitha who told him the news of the bank robbery and how Alfred Quigg, scapegrace son of Deacon Quigg of Lillibridge, had become an absconder and that the detectives were close on his trail.

"Bosh!" snorted the deacon when Tabby had concluded her tale. "I read that rubbish in the paper myself. Name was Twigg, not Quigg, and 'twasn't this Lillibridge he was from; it was Lillibridge in Connecticut. Where's my Alfred—the best sailor boy in the whole world?"

He stamped upstairs, and the two chagrined women heard him arguing with Alfred. They talked for a long time, and at last they heard the sound of muffled laughter.

When father and son came downstairs their eyes were twinkling. "Come over to the house tonight, girls," said the deacon pleasantly. "We're going to have a little house warming for Alfred, and he's got some little presents from furrin' parts for each of you. I declare, from what Alfred tells me, he ain't forgot one of his old friends."

Fenella Mason looked Tabitha Way straight in the eye.

"I told you it couldn't have been our Alfred," she said proudly.

"You was in a mighty hurry to hide him just the same," retorted Tabitha. "Still," she added hopefully, "if there hadn't been a mistake in the name it might have been him after all!"

Quebec Firemen on the Jump.

QUEBEC, July 17.—Three horses attached to the Quebec fire department are off duty from exhaustion caused by running to too many false calls sent by false alarm fiends. Last week, within four hours no less than fourteen false alarms were rung in and Wednesday six useless runs were given the brigade. A former fire alarm operator is under suspicion.

Skin Like Velvet.

A velvet bath is merely one that gives to the complexion the softness of velvet and tones up the skin to perfection. Velvet baths make the face glow and are delightful aids to beauty.

The materials are simple. One only requires finely powdered pumice stone, plenty of rough towels and brushes of all kinds.

If the bather has rough and coarse elbows fine sandpaper is used to massage them. First the arms are washed in soap and water, then sandpapered gently and afterward rubbed with olive oil or cocoanut butter.

Eliminating Insect Pests.

To get rid of roaches try the following: To one part of sulphur add an equal amount of ground red pepper and five parts of borax. Mix well and blast into their runways, resting places and breeding places with a bellows.

Some housewives use with good results a mixture of borax and red pepper. The addition of sulphur to this is to be recommended. It fumigates the haunts of the marauders, besides being disagreeable to them when they are alive.

How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Kept Her in Health for 14 Years.

Shippensburg, Pa.—"It was several years ago that I started taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I then suffered terribly every month. My husband bought me a bottle of it and it helped me right away. Then after my second child was born I had a female trouble very badly and I used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and in a short time was cured and have been in excellent health since. I always praise the Compound whenever I have an opportunity as I know it helped me and will help others. Lately I have given the Compound to my daughter and I wish all suffering women would take it and be convinced of its worth."—Mrs. JAMES A. BEIDEL, 113 N. Penn Street, Shippensburg, Pa.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotic or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record of being the most successful remedy for female ills we know of, and thousands of voluntary testimonials on file in the Pinkham laboratory at Lynn, Mass., seem to prove this fact.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

AMUSE THE KIDDIES.

How to Play the "Cut-Out" Game With the Youngsters.

Mothers are often at their wits' end to know what to do with convalescing children. During this trying time it takes much ingenuity to keep them interested.

One of the most pleasurable things to boy and girl alike is the cut-out game. It is as old as the hills and yet has kept its newness and interest to this day. The boy will scorn the ordinary cut-out play, but give him first a blank book, then a catalogue from a sporting firm, a pair of scissors and a bottle of glue and tell him to furnish you a summer camp in the Adirondacks, such as he would like to live in; then suggest that he fix up a scene in Canada in the winter time, with ski-ing, skating, and so on.

The way to interest the little chap is to excite his imagination first. Describe to him in detail the interior, then the exterior, of a camp in the woods; then tell him to cut out from the catalogue all the pictures which have anything to do with tent life. These include guns, fishing rods, boats, cooking utensils, cots, etc. Clothing for summer camping will probably be illustrated by pictures of men or women dressed in these garments. These figures may be grouped round a fire or standing in a canoe or climbing the mountains.

When the child has a number of illustrations cut out let him use his ingenuity to furnish the scene. Much can be done if the mother can draw a bit. In such a case she could outline on the first page the inside of a bare tent, to be furnished by the child. On the second page could be the outside of the tent, with the mountain in the background and a lake at one side.

Further interest can be added to this game by giving the little one a set of crayons with which to color the pictured scenes. Water colors are a joy to children if they can be arranged in such a way that the water will not spill. An excellent way to do this is to give the child a sewing board. Where the board is cut out in a curve it will fit into the body, and the paints may be placed on its flat surface with no danger of upsetting them.

The wise mother saves her old magazines and catalogues for the time when her children may need them.

System in the Cupboard.

How many minutes are lost sometimes by looking for a can or bottle which has been pushed behind something else on the shelves? Here is a simple idea which can readily be adopted: Have made a set of little steps of various widths, having the top step the narrowest. Make them as far apart as the rest of your canisters, cereal and spice jars. Then place the smallest cans on the top shelf, the larger cans on the lower shelf, and so on. In this way you will have only one object occupying the width of a shelf and will never have to look behind one thing to find another.

IN PROSPECT.

When science gets through monkeying
With man I rather guess
That he will know the answer
To questions, more or less,
Just how he is constructed,
The manner and the plan
Of building from the elements
The things that make a man.

The surgeons saw him open
And look into his heart,
Trim here and there a member
And take him quite apart.
They fool around his liver
And peep into his brain
And cast reproachful glances
At him should he complain.

They're bound to get acquainted
With man and know the worst,
The reason of his hunger
And eke the cause of thirst,
And how he does his thinking,
And why he goes to sleep,
And what may be the causes
That make him laugh or weep.

Some day, as now is mended
The auto or the bike,
He may to the repair shop
With all his troubles hike.
A monkey wrench attendant
The joints will tighten hard,
Put oil upon the bearings
And set him in the yard.

EVOLUTION OF DANCING.

Graceful Art Is to Be Found Recorded In Oldest Ornaments.

To take notice of that outcry against the dance that have fascinated men and women of to-day would be to suppose that the world had suddenly become dancing mad. And yet the sculptor and the painter have for centuries caught and imprisoned for later generations to admire the haunting beauty of the fair attitudes and rhythmic grace, and the spirited action of dancing figures. According to a contributor to a contemporary the present ebullition of the dancing spirit marks one of those high tides that, in an eternal action and reaction, are noticeable at intervals of greater or less length.

Dancing, always suggestive of youth, is one of the oldest arts. Traces have been found of its existence in Egypt more than 2,500 years before Christ. Like many of the arts, it found its highest expression in the golden days of Greece. Friezes and urns, fragments of temples and other edifices, bear witness to the wonderful beauty of the dance of those days, and have served to teach the painters, poets, and sculptors of succeedings ages. The world has never entirely forgotten that language which so divinely governed all bodily movements, regulating them by rhythm. Still men are stirred even by the painted presentation of the radiant choir of Muses led by Terpsichore, the chaste graces mingling with forest nymphs in rounds under the pale light of the moon, and bands of maidens crowned with oak leaves and garlanded with flowers dancing in honor of Pan, Apollo, and Diana.

Corrupted by its interpretation by the Romans, it never really came into its own again until the days of chivalry aroused it in France. With the other arts it flourished under Louis XIV., especially during the early days of his reign, when the Academy of Dancing was founded. Under Louis XV. and Louis XVI. the minuet and gavotte were introduced, and the dainty grace and elegance of the 18th century developed. Then came the dire days of the Revolution, and dancing as an expression of gaiety fell by the wayside again until about 1830, when there was a great revival of its popularity.

When the polka came in 14 years later there was another revival. The new dance invaded dancing saloons, drawing-rooms, shops, and even the streets. Markowski brought in the mazurka, created the schottische, Sicilienne, and Quadrille of a Hundred Guards, and dancing went on from dark until dawn. At the magnificent court balls persons braved suffocation for the sake of the dance. One need not think, however, that it was only in glad, blithe, careless times that the populace was given over to madness in dancing. The horrors of the French Revolution was hardly at an end when 23 theatres and 1,800 dancing saloons were opened every evening. Mercier tells of "Victim Balls," to which were admitted only those who had lost a member of the immediate family, and they were crowded.

Dancing was universal at the Carmelites between massacres, in ruined churches, and on the stones of tombs not yet destroyed. They danced in every tavern on the Boulevard or along the Champs-Elysees and along the quays. These horrors, indulged in for forgetfulness, were not the kind of dancing that, Watteau, Boucher, Lancret, Latour, and Debrecourt had portrayed—the dancing of lords and ladies, of gay peasants, and all the poetry of the dance. That is an epoch by itself.

Growing Old by Degrees.

Growing old has many stages. You can remember the time when in reading your favorite author you were disgusted to find that he had made his hero forty years old, and you wondered how he could be guilty of imputing romance to such an unconscionable age. By and by, even though you found forty years to be the old age of youth, you were solaced by the thought that it was the youth of old age, and still later you will wonder where youth ends and old age begins.—Neal Brown in National Magazine.

Tax Disastrous to Drama.

The proposed extension of the amusement tax now levied upon variety houses, motion picture theatres and circuses, so as to apply to the dramatic stage, has evoked strong protests from many sides. The tax has already forced one circus to close its doors, after an existence of many years, and has driven a number of cinematograph houses out of business. The theatre managers declare the tax will be even more disastrous for legitimate drama.

The Honeymoon.

The honeymoon has no definite duration, but is longer or shorter according as the temper of the high contracting parties determines, or their relatives, or the weather, or the mode, or the comparative cost of traveling and staying at home. Briefly, it is that interval during which the man, going out in the morning, remembers his kiss and forgets his overshoes as distinguished from the interval during which he remembers his overshoes and forgets his kiss.

Quite a Change.

"Percy is getting used to public speaking, isn't he?"

"Oh, yes. I remember when you could hardly get him to stand up and now you can hardly get him to sit down."

Women and Hats.

"Aren't some of the hats women wear absurd?"

"Yes," replied Miss Cayenne, "and yet when some people put them on they do look so appropriate."

The Poor Poet.

"My husband never gets what he should for his poetry," said the poet's wife, with a tinge of sadness.

"Oh, don't be too hard on him," replied the girl absentmindedly.

I lost shust 'leven cents by dot trade. I vhas begging avhay vhen in comes a man mit a twenty cent job, but he keeps der shoe in his hand und says:

"I LOOK INTO DOT VINDOW."

"My friend, maype you wasn't long in America?"

"Only three years," says I.

"Und maype you belief you know der peoples und can deceive 'em?"

"I neffer deceive somepody."

Marsh Fly Eggs a Delicacy.

The Indians of Mexico eat many curious foods. One of the most remarkable of these is made of the eggs of a species of marsh fly. This fly deposits its eggs in incredible quantities upon flags and rushes. The eggs are gathered and made into cakes, which are sold in the markets. The Indians call the eggs water wheat. They resemble fine fish roe and when mixed with cornmeal and fowl eggs form a staple article of diet, particularly during Lent. The insects themselves, which are about the size of the housefly, are captured, pounded into a paste, boiled in corn husks in much the same fashion as tamales and in this form are eaten.

When the Waiter Wins.

Two men were wrangling as to who should settle with the waiter for the luncheon. When the question had been finally decided and the contestants had gone the waiter said to one of his regular customers who was a witness of the scene: "That's what we like, for every time it happens we come in for an extra tip. The man who couldn't get the check has only one way to get even, and that is by giving the waiter something, and nine times out of ten he does it and makes the amount more than he would have given if he had paid the check. This one ordered extra cigars and left the change for me. We like the 'give me the check' quarrels."

To-day they are just as effective, just as reliable as ever, and nothing better has yet been devised to

Participating versus Non-Participating Life Policies Again

FIFTEEN YEARS AGO a Publisher of this City at age 43 took out a Ten Pay 15 year Endowment Policy of $2,000, No. 81226 in The Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada paying therefore an annual premium of $187.20.

The Non-Participating Premium would have been $170.40.

The extra paid for profits per year (for 10 years only) was $16.80.

Had this man taken a Non-Participating Policy he would have saved $168.00 extra in premiums paid for profits during the ten years, but he would have lost $620.25 at maturity of Policy as he would have received only $2,000.00 instead of $2,620.25, as he did.

Where is there a man that would not like to invest money at such a rate and that too in the Largest and Strongest Life Insurance Company in the British Empire?

You are invited to call and investigate.

Quarter pound rice, 2 oz. butter, 3 oz. castor sugar, 2 oz. of sultanas, three eggs, one pint of milk, one lemon, some puff paste. Boil the rice with the milk until the former is soft, and put aside to become cold. Melt the butter and add to the rice and beat in the eggs one at a time. Line some patty tins with the puff paste, prick them all over with a fork, fill with the rice mixture, and bake in a hot oven for about twenty minutes.

BASS FRY AND FINGERLINGS DEPOSITED IN UPPER LAKES

Action of Government Will be Appreciated By Stoney Lake Cottagers.

During the past week forty thousand bass fingerlings were placed in the waters at the back lakes. They were brought from Bruntford via special car to Bobcaygeon and then taken by Steamer Naiad to their destination. Ten thousand were placed at Gannons' Narrows, fifteen thousand in Stoney Lake and fifteen thousand in Clear Lake. Only two weeks ago twenty-five thousand were deposited in Sturgeon Lake and a similar amount in Pidgeon Lake.

In speaking to the Review, Captain Carson of the Naiad said they had ceased dumping the fish into the waters as they had done two years ago. A special man accompanies the fish from the hatcheries and sees that they are placed along a sandy shore which affords them the best possible chance to live.

While in conversation with Magistrate Dumble this morning, and speaking of the action of the Government in depositing a large quantity of bass fry and fingerlings in the back lakes, Magistrate Dumble remarked that it was about the best thing accomplished at the lakes for some time. This action if continued would greatly augment the fishing at Stoney Lakes and other surrounding lakes. Owing to the clear water, it was rather hard to breed fish in Stoney Lake, but action such as this if continued would be of great assistance. Fish seemed to breed better in Rice Lake and other muddy lakes than in the lakes similar to Stoney Lake, which, however, had better fish.

Magistrate Dumble also remarked that this action would likely be greatly appreciated by the cottagers of Stoney Lake.

Magistrate Dumble Is Not Resigning

"It's the first I heard of it," said Magistrate Dumble to the Review this morning when interviewed in regard to a report which states that he is about to resign.

The report probably followed the announcement in the Review on Saturday of the resignation of County Police Magistrate Edmison. No reason was given for the action of Magistrate Edmison, and it was probably assumed that Mr. Edmison was stepping aside owing to the many years of service and his advanced age. Singularly enough, Magistrate Dumble has also held the magisterial chair for a long time, and is also well advanced in years.

SAVED LAD FROM WATERY GRAVE

Lad Rescued Near Belmont Club House.

The Review has investigated a case where it was said, a small boy was saved from drowning, in the Otonabee River, near the Belmont Club House, and finds that a youngster, who refused to give his name, but said be lived on McGill Street, was rescued from a watery grave, through the instrumentality of Thos. Mark and Wm. Galley, two employes at Belleghem's furniture and undertaking establishment.

The lad had been at play and had fallen into the water. His cries attracted the two men, who seemingly by an act of Providence had gone to the club house for some chairs. They took quick action, and succeeded in effecting a rescue.

TOOK HIS JAG UP WITH HIM

Steeplejack Placed on Blacklist when He Descended.

Walkerton, July 20.—While painting the steeple on the Catholic church here, Jack Murphy, the steeplejack, fell asleep, and when discovered was taking a comfortable nap on a rope seat about 300 feet above the ground. As he was reported to have been drinking before going up, fears were entertained that the booze would make him top-heavy and that while under influence of Morpheus he would topple forward and fall into the hands of the coffin trust. Efforts were consequently made to arouse him from his slumber by shaking the rope, but as these were unavailing he was left to finish his nap, there being some doubt as to which world he would ultimately wake up in. He finally issued safely from his dreams and came down, when he was subsequently placed on the Indian list to avoid a similar recurrence.

Naiad Inspected.

The Steamer Naiad was put through the annual inspection today and will start out again tomorrow.

LAID AT REST IN THE SILENT CITY

Not for a long time have so many funeral corteges wended their way to the "cities of the dead" in two days, as was the case Saturday and Sunday, when six funerals were held, six to the Little Lake Cemetery, and one to St. Peter's Cemetery. Saturday afternoon the remains of Chas. Bergoine, who came to his home for some holidays, only to meet his death in the waters of the Otonabee, were laid in their last resting place. The funeral of the late Mr. Somerville, Miss Brumwell and also that of little Alma McGill was held.

Sunday afternoon, stricken parents and members of his family took their last earthly look at Austin O'Toole, who with Chas. Bergoine was drowned on Thursday. The same afternoon, the funeral of the late Edward Kemp, who died suddenly, Thursday afternoon, took place, and a special train from Havelock brought to Peterboro for interment the remains of the late John Belleghem, who was crushed to death at Havelock, Saturday morning.

DETECTIVES STRUGGLE IN LOFT WITH TWO MEN SUSPECTED OF ROBBERY

Strangers Giving Their Names As John White and George Heron Are Arrested and Remanded to Jail—Search Reveals Money, Which Victim of Assault Says is His Property.

It was only after a desperate hand to hand encounter lasting over one hour, in a dark loft, in the vicinity of the American Hotel, that Detectives Meagher and Newhall succeeded in arresting two strangers, George Heron and John White, on the alleged charge of robbery and assault. They had been surprised by the two detectives in the act of rifling the pockets of their victim, an aged man whom, it is suspected, they enticed into the loft, after which he was beaten and robbed. This morning, the men were remanded until to-morrow by Magistrate Dumble. Both Detectives Newhall and Meagher bear the marks of numerous bites and various minor injuries, as a result of their battle in the dark with the men who fought desperately to make their getaway.

Enticed to Loft.

The man who was robbed, came to the city on Saturday with a considerable sum of money, and after enjoying a few drinks, was hunted up by the two men, who kept in touch with him the greater part of the day, finally enticing him into the loft in some manner, where they were caught in the act by the detectives, who had been apprised of the actions of the two strangers. Both men put up one of the hardest battles reported from police circles for some time. In making his way to the loft, Detective Newhall had a very narrow escape from seriously injuring his right eye when a swinging wire caught him on the eye lid, inflicting a rather painful injury. A fraction of an inch would have resulted in the pupil of the eye being destroyed, with such force did the wide strike the lid of the eye.

The presence of several trap doors in the loft also afforded considerable means of danger.

The case will be heard before Magistrate Dumble to-morrow morning at the regular Police Court session.

When the strangers were searched, fifty dollars were found. This money, the third man says, was stolen from him.

HAD A SUIT ALL READY

Clothes Stored Away For Prisoner's Escape.

KINGSTON, July 20.—A stoker at the penitentiary, while shoveling coal, found a suit of civilian's clothes tucked away in a small wooden box, and hidden among coal, thereby showing up a plan one of the convicts had to make his escape. The suit belonged to parole prisoner J. Cardinal who was brought to the penitentiary last week.

An investigation is now being made to ascertain why the clothing was not destroyed in the furnace, as is the custom. One or more convicts have made their escape at opportune times by changing their striped suits for civilians' suits, and Cardinal had seven more years to serve and would be given a new suit on leaving. Orders were given for his suit to be put in the furnace, but evidently one of the guards neglected his work. It is the duty of the guards to stand by and see that the clothing is destroyed.

BUILDING PERMIT.

Among the building permits issued on Saturday was that of the two-storey addition of the Catholic school on Lake street, costing $4000, to be erected by Messrs. Rose, Johnston & Bibbey.

TRIP HAS FAILED

Ice-Breaker Returns Without Marooned Men.

NOME, Alaska, July 20.—The ice-breaking steamer Kit arrived here on Saturday from a cruise in the Arctic. The captain reported that he tried for fourteen days to break through the ice field to reach Wrangell Island and take off the men of the Stefansson exploring expedition who have been marooned there since the old whaler Karluk was crushed in the ice last winter. The Kit was unable to approach nearer than 120 miles to Wrangell Island, and finally abandoned the attempt.

All information received ere is that the ice in the Arctic this year is worse than ever known before, and for this reason the revenue cutter Bear, which is to take Capt. Robert Bartlett, master of the Karluk, to Wrangell Island to take off the refugees, has delayed sailing until more favorable conditions prevail.

LOCAL LADY COUSIN OF MISS YORKE

Mrs. Nathan Wager Does Not Think Tamworth Young Woman Has Taken Her Own Life.

Mrs. Nathan Wager, who resides on Harvey Street, is a cousin of Miss Blanche Yorke, the young woman, who is missing from her home in Tamworth. Mrs. Wager, of course, cannot account for the disappearance of Miss Yorke, but she is loth to believe that the girl has taken her own life.

Tamworth, July 20.—The county police admit that they are completely baffled by the mystery surrounding the disappearance of Miss Blanche Yorke,, the attractive young dressmaker, known throughout the district by the sobriquet of "Happy." Since the night of July 8th, when she was last seen in the village, no trace of her can be found, and it is now thought that she has been drowned in Beaver Lake. Although the lake has been searched twice previously, Saturday afternoon High Constable VanKoughnet again made preparations to drag the section bordering upon the road, and active operations will be commenced at once. There is some talk of dynamiting the waters in that section, as the body may be caught in weeds or wedged beneath a log.

The story of a locally-owned automobile being missing from Tamworth since the night that the girl disappeared was exploded Saturday, when it was ascertained that the car left the village the night previous, and that it had no bearing upon the case whatsoever.

Beaver Lake, where it is thought Miss Yorke's body may be lying, is not far from the family homestead. The road which passes the house

LIFE CRUSHED OUT BY FREIGHT TRAIN

John Belleghem Fatally Hurt on His Way to Work.

John Belleghem, a C.P.R. engineer, took a chance as he wended his way to work, at Havelock, Saturday morning, and lost. Yesterday afternoon, his mortal remains were interred at Little Lake Cemetery.

Saturday morning he had bade his wife good-bye, and little did either think that it was the final farewell in this world. Reaching the railway tracks, he attempted to pass between two sections of a freight train. It was only a short space. The engineer backed his half of the train and Belleghem was almost cut in two.

They carried him into the waiting room at the station and somebody hurried to the home of the doctor. He remained conscious for some time. "Well, I guess I'm done for," he said to those standing near. This time he had not made a mistake for in a short time, he passed into the beyond.

The late John Belleghem was born in Peterboro, 35 years ago, the son of Mr. and Mrs. John Belleghem. All the members of the family are well known to local citizens. There are four brothers, James, Ernest, Herbert and Charlie, and one sister, Mrs. Roseborough. Herbert and Charlie live with their parents in Toronto.

His widow, who was a Peterboro girl, and three children are left behind in Havelock.

The late Mr. Belleghem was popular with railwaymen and had numerous friends in this city who will regret his tragic death. He was a member of the Masonic Order, and the funeral was held under Masonic auspices. The C.P.R. provided a special train to bring the remains to this city. He was a nephew of Mr. Dan. Belleghem, Hunter Street.

Some years ago, a younger brother, William, met death near Bridgenorth, his life being crushed out by a falling tree.

SAVED HIS AUTO FROM THE FLAMES

Quick Action By Mr. Leo Young When Garage Burned.

With flames bursting out all about him, and thick smoke as an added danger, Mr. Leo Young, 550 Charlotte Street, saved his automobile from being destroyed, when the garage was burned Saturday afternoon shortly after 1 o'clock.

The auto suffered but little from the fire, but the garage was wrecked.

Mr. Young had been vulcanizing a tire and with the work uncompleted, he returned to the house. A few minutes later and the garage, a frame structure, was a mass of flames Mr. Young was very fortunate in being able to save the car. A bicycle, inside and outside auto tire, two hats, a coat, a rug and two cushions were burned.

The flames and sparks were a great danger, both to the Young residence and the residence of Mr. H. J. McCannan, but little damage was done.

His Majesty's Anxiety to Secure a Settlement is Cause of Delay in Trip to Portsmouth ---All Leaders Believed to Have Accepted the Invitation---Split in Ministry Reported by London Paper.

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, July 20.—At the opening of the House of Commons to-day Premier Asquith announced that King George "in view of the grave political situation, has considered it his right to summon a conference of representatives of the political parties, both British and Irish, to discuss the outstanding points of the problem of Irish Government." He would not ask the House to-day to discuss the bill.

Redmond's acceptance of the proposal was rather lukewarm. "The invitation came to John Dillon and myself," he said, "in the form of a command from the King, and as such we at once obeyed it."

Lawrence Ginnell introduced a belligerant tone into the discussion when he asked if there was any precedent for the Prime Minister advising the King to "place himself at the head of a conspiracy to defeat the wishes of the house." His question was ignored and the House proceeded to other business.

LONDON, July 20.—The King has called a conference of the leaders of all the parties to seek a solution of the Irish problem.

This is the announcement which Premier Asquith is expected to make to-day when the bill amending the Home Rule bill comes up again for consideration in the House of Commons.

The Prime Minister's speech on this occasion, indicating how the Government proposes to deal with the Lords' amendments to the amending bill, is awaited with the deepest anxiety, and it is probable that the House will immediately adjourn the debate on the amending bill indefinitely to allow the negotiations for a settlement to proceed outside of Parliament.

Premier Asquith has been with the King at Portsmouth during the week end, and the King's anxiety to get the difficulty settled resulted in the calling of the conference. It is said that the various leaders invited have accepted the invitation and that the conference will meet at an early date probably on to-morrow in London. The King will receive the delegates, but will not himself preside over the conference, which, it is confidently thought, under such exalted auspices, will prove successful.

At the same time, the Ministers are placing great reliance in the persuasive powers of Chancellor Lloyd George, who has been temporarily shunted from his financial duties to assist the Prime Minister in finding a solution for the Irish difficulty.

Chancellor Lloyd George's practical business is to smooth the path between Nationalists and Liberals. It is understood that the Government is willing to go a considerable way in the direction of meeting the Carsonite demands, but is hampered by the unyielding attitude of the Nationalists.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has had several conferences with John Redmond, the Nationalist leader, in an endeavor to find points of common agreement. Mr. Redmond has called a conference of his party for the purpose of hearing from Joseph Devlin, member of Parliament for Belfast, who has returned from an important mission in the north of Ireland, and this conference may have an important bearing on the negotiations.

For the moment, Tyrone is the crux of the situation on which neither the Nationalists nor the Carsonites are willing to yield.

All the morning papers make much of the delayed departure of the King for Portsmouth on Saturday, but further than announcing that it was due to the Irish crisis not one of them gives a clue as to the actual matter connected with the situation which was of so urgent character as to delay His Majesty's visit.

All reports agree that despite the efforts of the past week in the direction of peace no settlement has been come to although there is some talk of a compromise being "in sight."

"Premier Asquith's present difficulty is that four members of the Cabinet, two of whom are particularly aggressive, have at the last moment funked the situation and are prepared to go in the teeth of the Nationalists," says Reynold's newspaper, which is usually well informed on the inner Ministerial condition.

"Happily," adds the paper, "a majority of the party support Mr. Asquith in his refusal to betray the Nationalist cause, and there is left some hope that the Ministerial party will not be shattered, despite the threatened revolt of a section of the Cabinet. It is possible that the debate to-day will be adjourned after Mr. Asquith's statement."

FOUR MONTHS FOR WM. MAXWELL

His Brother Arthur Gets Suspended Sentence.

At a special meeting of the County Court this morning His Honor Judge Huycke passed sentence on William Maxwell and Arthur Maxwell who recently pleaded guilty to breaking into the home of William Bailey, Hubel's store and J. Garside's boathouse, and stealing a quantity of goods. The brothers were put in the box and gave evidence to the effect that neither had been convicted on any previous charge of theft. The only time William was in court was for being drunk while Arthur's reputation was marred by the minor fact that he was once found fishing out of season. G. N. Gordon appearing for the prisoners brought out these facts very strongly and further enlightened the Court as to the career of Arthur Maxwell by reading several testimonials from former employers.

In view of the fact that Arthur Maxwell had a young wife and child and considering that he had a job waiting for him His Honor let him off on suspended sentence. The young man promised that he would seek his spiritual adviser and take the pledge of total abstinence.

In addressing William Maxwell Judge Huycke pointed out how he had been the promoter of the evil act and by doing so had led his younger brother into temptation. Instead of doing that he should have made it his duty to see that his brother kept out of the way of sin and crime. It was undoubtedly hard to obtain work in the city nevertheless that did not justify the robbing of a house. His Honor then sentenced him to four months in the County jail on the three charges, the sentence to run concurrently. In conclusion His Honor urged both boys to leave intoxicating liquors absolutely alone.

RAINBOW TO THE RESCUE

Warship Will Endeavor to Effect a Landing on Komagatu.

OTTAWA, July 20.—The Immigration Department yesterday made a statement regarding the mutiny of the Hindus on the steamer Komagata Maru at Vancouver, and their violent resistance to all attempts to deport them. After reciting the incidents of the affair the statement says:

"Some shots were fired by the Hindus, but the officers, although armed, did not return the fire, and at 2 a.m., realizing the difficulty in reaching the decks from a tug, retired and returned to the shore with their twenty injured, amongst whom was the captain of the tug, suffering from two broken ribs. Fortunately, none of the injuries received is likely to be fatal.

"The self-restraint of the police and immigration officers under great provocation is appreciated and highly commended by the acting Minister (Hon. C. J. Doherty).

"While desirous that no unnecessary violence shall be used, the Government is determined that the law shall without fail be effectively and rigidly enforced, and, with this end in view, have authorized the use of the Rainbow, to effect a landing, when, if necessary to secure and maintain control, the full number of Hindus will be handcuffed, a proceeding which, in view of their violent actions last night, is fully justifiable.

"The Government has instructed its agents to deport all rejected Hindus on the Empress of Japan next Thursday, if it appears that deportation by the Komagata Maru cannot be promptly and effectively accomplished, and is also taking legal proceedings against the master and charterers of the Komagata Maru."

WORMS IN OXFORD

Pest Has Shown up in East Zorra and Blenheim Townships.

WOODSTOCK, July 20.—The local agricultural bureau received word yesterday that army worms have broken out on the farms near Thamesford as well as on two farms in East Zorra Township. On one farm in Blenheim Township fires are being kindled in an effort to ward off the pests. Thousands of dollars' damage has been done already to farms throughout the district. One farmer has been spraying his crops with a mixture of oil and water and reports the treatment effective.

Appears at O. A. C.

GUELPH, Ont., July 20. — The army worm made its appearance in this vicinity Saturday and strange to say, the only place it has so far been noticed is in a field of corn at the Ontario Agricultural College.

Also Found at Galt.

GALT, July 20.—It was discovered that the army worm which has been doing so much damage in Oxford and Brant Counties had invaded Waterloo County, both in the south and north section Saturday. It is supposed that the pest migrated here from Oxford County.

Sure of It.

"I heard a bit of gossip today."
"What was it?"
"I promised not to tell."

IS ARRESTED FOR MURDER

Italian Suspected of Complicity in Martin Tragedy.

NEW YORK, July 20.—Information reached the police Saturday night that Michael Sirrocco, who has been sought by the authorities since last August in connection with the murder of William Grieve Martin, a Toronto milliner, had been arrested in Denver, Col. Martin was strangled to death in a rooming house on the west side and money and jewelry were taken from him.

The police have held that Martin's assailants did not mean to kill him, but choked him to death with a towel made into a gag. Harry Schaeffer, who was arrested soon after the murder, accused of being one of the robbers, was convicted in March of murder in the second degree.

Denies His Guilt.

DENVER, Colo., July 20.—Accused of complicity in the murder of William G. Martin, beaten to death by two men in a New York lodging house on the night of Aug. 18, 1912, William Sullivan, 28, is a prisoner in the city jail. His real name is said to be Michael Sirrocco.

He denied any knowledge of the crime, but the detectives declare they are positive of his identity.

Sullivan, as he insists on calling himself, came to Denver seven months ago. A pretty, young woman with whom he was associated disappeared after he was put in jail.

THE PUZZLE OF THE CANADA CLERGY RESERVES.

SUCH IS THE SUBJECT of a short but interesting article by J. P. Laycock, M. A., in the last number of the Queen's Quarterly. What were the Clergy Reserves? What caused all the fuss about them? The question is a natural one to the generation of today, more concerned, as it is, in such problems as Transcontinentals, Imperialism, Home Rule, Panama Canal Tolls, Canadian Navy and Tariffs. They know not the Clergy Reserves, a question which roused all the ire of grand sires, but now only cold ashes remain for the scientific analysis of the dispassionate historian. Sixty, seventy years ago, and more, this question burned with all the heat of bitter political and sectarian controversy. Speeches, letters to newspapers, editorials, pamphlets, sermons, street-corner discussions, cabinets were all concerned in the Clergy Reserves. Then it passed, and has been all but forgotten in the problems that perplex people now. Why did the problem of the Clergy Reserves awake so much interest? That is what the writer attempts to answer. He tries to show how it began, what its development was, what influence it had on contemporary times, what its meaning is for those of another age.

The article sets forth the problem about as well as its limits would permit, but the question is too large to be dealt with in detail even in a small way, within the scope of nine printed pages. The author has been engaged on this question over two years, and, with Professor Grant, of Queen's University, is publishing a volume of documents on the Clergy Reserves. In the forthcoming volumes, those who are interested in the history and development of this country will find a detailed and authoritative treatment of this subject for the first time, and it is to these that one must go for an answer to the important questions propounded.

To one not deeply concerned in Canadian history, the Clergy Reserves question seems to call for merely passing treatment, doubtless because it was not so attractive to historical writers as the War of 1812, for example. But the Clergy Reserves was a very important problem in Canadian history. It settled such a great question as church establishment in Canada. It had an important bearing on the settlement and development of Ontario. It set up the Protestant denominations on a basis approximating equality. It had a great influence on roads, commercial intercourse, and education. But, as for a consideration of all these phases of the subject and their unconscious influence on the life of the past and present, we must await the treatment of more skilful hands than ours.

THE OUTLOOK FOR TRADE.

WHILE THERE ARE indications that business is improving, authorities on trade conditions, like Dunn's Bulletin, are still quite conservative. The Toronto and Montreal districts are very similar in prospects. A moderate movement is reported in seasonable lines of general merchmandise, but there is no particular activity. Caution is still the watchword with the general run of orders small. Crop conditions in the West are watched closely, and while reports vary somewhat, it is generally considered by good authorities that, taken as a whole, the promise is for a large yield. The recent rains here have been beneficial, with the outlook for wheat better than a fortnight ago. Haying is in progress, with a crop below the average. Manufacturers generally are working on short time, and the trade in merchandise for forward delivery is still quiet. The imports are smaller, but generally are rather slow. This being holiday time, no general improvement is expected until about the middle of next month. The wheat markets are irregular, but lower prices are quoted lower. Fruits and vegetables in liberal supply with declining prices are market features, while eight failures were reported for the week in the Toronto district.

In view of present conditions and the indications for the immediate future, conservatism in business needs to be the watchword. A great deal of caution should be exercised by employers in extending plants or stocking up on a large scale. Municipal bodies also should be guarded in launching out on large public improvement schemes until the tax-paying capacity of the population appears stronger.

ADVERTISE IN DULL TIMES.

AT TIMES when trade is dull it is the non-advertiser that finds the greatest difficulty in getting business. And yet it is not an uncommon thing to see business men on such occasions either stop advertising or reduce it.

Here is a merchant who does not believe in advertising. As long as the general trade of the country is good business comes to him without much effort. With this he is satisfied. But sooner or later trade generally becomes quiet. The natural consequence is keener competition.

Those who do good advertising naturally attract the most business. This is as sure as that night follows day.

Extravagance in advertising is probably about as unwise as extravagance in anything else. But for the attracting of business there is no factor as potent as judicious advertising.

ANTIQUITY OF PETROLEUM.

THOUGH it is only within recent times that petroleum has become an article of commerce, there is abundant proof that it was used in the arts forty centuries ago. The mortar used in constructing the walls of Nineveh and Babylon had petroleum mixed with it for the purpose of securing greater cohesion and excluding dampness. Traces of the bituminous matter are very distinct in the ruins, and the existence of petroleum springs at Is, some 120 miles from old Babylon, indicates one source of the supply. In the ancient history of several eastern countries allusion is made in unmistakable terms to the existence of petroleum springs.

WHITE DUCK CLOTHES FOR MEN.

THE MONTREAL MAIL says men are slaves to convention, that they are imitators, not originators, and should wear white ducks, not serges in hot weather because they are more comfortable. Granted. But, may we inquire, has our confrere taken into consideration the question of domestic economy? Laundry expense in connection with the daily wearing of white ducks has always been a most distressing and annoying problem. Imagine the degradation of being held up by an Asiatic for the price of washing one's trousers. Think of the inconvenience of being prevented from going to the office because some thick-witted and bland Chinaman hung on to the editorial pants until the wash money was forthcoming. To avoid such heart-rending circumstances, more than one pair is required, which reduces their relative cheapness. Then, can you imagine the chagrin when the white-panted editor goes to the composing room to look over the make-up of the editorial page, and bumps into an ink-pot or an ink-roller, or something else? That means more washee, more money, and, possibly, a third pair of white ducks, which brings their relative cheapness with serges down to about zero.

Women wear white shoes, white stockings white skirts, white waists, why shouldn't men wear white pants and coats?—they have already adopted white shoes, shirts, and vests. Yes, why shouldn't they? Because a lot of chumps would say they were effeminate and the women might protest.

Then there is another consideration — it is the psychic effect of light clothes compared with those of a dark color. Light, cool clothes tend to make people gay and festive, so the philosophers say, and it would not do for an editor or a sour old business man to tango down to the office and dance through an opinion on the tariff or a letter complaining about some goods. The office staff might get heart failure or become demoralized. Hence, men wear hot serges growl out an opinion on the political situation, snap the head off a complainer or a stenographer, and everybody respects them.

We remember old Polonius had some good advice to give on clothes, but we don't recall that it was acted upon. White ducks are no doubt appropriate and cool and nice, but can we afford them?

Lastly, may we ask the question, how often does a man get a pair of blue serge trousers washed?

EDITORIAL NOTES.

"JUST A SPRIG of Mountain Heather," is the title of a souvenir from the Dominion Parks Branch of the Department of the Interior. It is one of the most artistic and tastefully-arranged booklets we have yet seen. It is bound in a handsome brown cover, with a real sprig of Canadian Mountain Heather inset, and has the illustrations inside printed in a green tint. As a booklet illustrative of the Canadian National Parks it is very appropriate.

She Will Plan Houses.

Calgary Herald.

Congratulations to Miss Alice Malhiot, Calgary girl of French-Canadian parentage, who has just passed her finals and becomes Alberta's first woman architect. If women have to work, there is no more fitting occupation for them than that of architecture.

Pronunciation.

Portland Oregonian.

The correct use of words — the giving to each letter its proper value and to each syllable its proper stress—is as rare as it is magnificent. The person who speaks no word until he has mastered the sounds that go into its proper construction will speedily gain a reputation for erudition. How many of us pronounce in a proper way such simple words as rinse, alias, recognisance, attache, echelon, asparagus, collision, fete, fiancee, boudoir, exit, not to mention a thousand and one even simpler words of common use?

The Dangerous Innovation.

Springfield Republican.

Continuity of policy is with respect to many subjects highly desirable, and democracy has not found as yet an ideal way to secure it. But no better plan has yet been found than by entrusting affairs for a carefully limited time to the party which represents the majority. Such a policy at least allows considerable periods during which we know what to expect in the way of legislation; this measureable continuity popular legislation by the initiative impolrs. The moral seems to be that states in which well tried political machinery is operating reasonably well should be cautious about innovations.

A Loss of Time.

New York Mail.

One morning early, Myrtle 'rose,
Donned her handsome, silk, clocked hose.
But something broke en route to town—
And one of Myrtle's clocks "ran down!"
So, down the busy city's ways,
The maiden went a-hiking;
And all the people turned to gaze,
For Myrtle's clocks were striking.

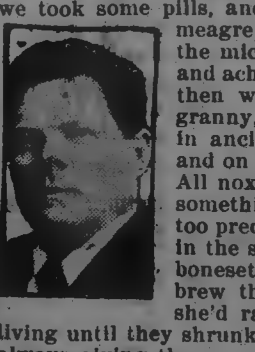
The Evil That Men Do.

Ottawa Citizen.

Kratchenko, a murderer, was hanged the other day at Winnipeg. His was the last life in the case which included the death of his victim, the death in penitentiary of one of the police officers who conspired in his escape, the death from grief of the wife of another conspirator, the sentencing to jail for perjury of the prisoner's lawyer and the jailing of another conspirator for his part in the affair. Thus six lives were ended or spoiled by the act of one useless citizen, without taking into account the consequences that must still follow in several, if not all, of these cases. Truly the modern evil that men do lives after them in the wrecks of homes and families.

THE OLD WAY

By Walt Mason



The old time way was sane and simple; when we were sick we took some pills, and cured the rheumatiz or pimple, and meagre were our doctor bills. We did not blame the microbe critters for all our ailments, pains and aches; we simply took a dose of bitters, and then we whipped our weight in snakes. My granny, in an old poke bonnet, her form attired in ancient garb, would seek the meadowland, and on it, would hunt and find the healing yarb. All noxious weeds that smelled and tasted like something that had long been dead, were much too precious to be wasted; they hung in bunches in the shed. Full often I have had a jag on, of boneset tea, skunk root or sage; my granny'd brew the evil flagon, and I must drink it, or she'd rage. In those old times folks kept on living until they shrunk and blew away; their womenfolk were always giving them cups of yarb tea, day by day. The father lived till he was ninety, nor heard of germs, his long years through; when he was feeling tough a pint he of boneset drank, and solace knew. But in these modern days microbey, diseases are expensive things; from stomach ache to hydrophoby, they run up doctor bills, by jings.

I reckon there wouldn't be a great deal of work done, if 'twasn't fer the fact thet there's a harvest time comin' sooner er later. That's what we are strivin' towards, a big, wuth-while harvest of our efforts. It's an old and true sayin' thet we harvest what we reap; the better and truer

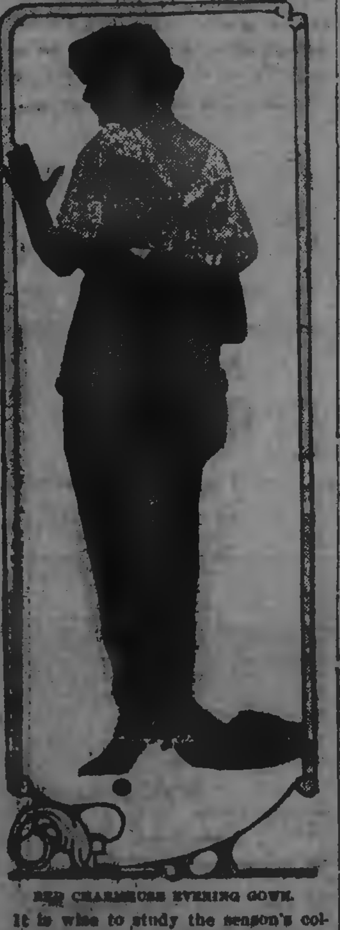
THE RIGHT SHADE.

An Important Point in the Selection of the Smart Costume.



RED CHARMEUSE EVENING GOWN.

It is wise to study the season's colors, especially if you can afford but one gown or suit or hat, so that whatever is new in your wardrobe may be of absolutely the correct shade.

The very deep shades of blue are fashionable not only for the street, but in the evening. In fact, the night and indigo blues threaten to oust black for the quieter sort of dinner costumes.

In transparent materials pastel blues and greens are very good indeed, and there is a smoky tone of gray that is pronounced charming by women who have hitherto favored steel and slate shades.

All the golden brown shades are good for street costumes. For evening use there is a tone of orange as fiery yellow as the tangerine, but which is, oddly enough, beautiful in malines and chiffon.

Ultra-fashionables take up the richer shades of red, as seen in the ripe currant or the flame of a wood fire. There is also a blue vermilion tone, which is more like a half ripe plum than anything else in nature.

Red charmeuse draped with white chantilly lace was used in the development of this fascinating evening gown. The lower part of the skirt was embroidered in a cubist pattern with gold threads. A sash with an obi bow gave a finishing touch to the garment.

LAMP SHADES.

They Should Match the Color Scheme of the Room.

The lamps having a white or glass standard seem to be particularly fitting for a young girl's room. A shade with a white ground can either be stenciled or embroidered to match any color scheme. The shade of a white lamp seen recently was of white pongee, on which was embroidered at regular intervals a cross stitched rose in two shades of pink, with a few green leaves. This was then covered with a coarse white net, and a narrow pink braid finished the edge of the top and bottom. The effect was very charming and could easily be copied.

A blue motif could be carried out on the foundation silk if blue is the dominant note in the room.

Scarfs for the bedroom furniture, cross stitched, with the same motif as that used to decorate the lamp, could be readily made.

Collar and Cuff Sets.

Among the hand embroidered accessories being worked by clever needlewomen are sets for summer frocks, including collar, cuffs and sash or girdle of colored linen worked in oriental embroidery.

One design worked on reseda green linen had an eight inch sash long enough to go once around the waist and knot the second time on one side of the front, with end reaching below the knees. These ends were scalloped and embroidered in dull blue, rose and yellow to correspond with the turnover collar and elbow cuffs.

The whole was intended for wear with a white linen morning dress, or perhaps a sheer muslin.

Washable Gowns.

The cotton dresses most recently offered have been taken from new lines designed especially for the midsummer trade, according to the Dry Goods Economist. These garments show many forms of the long tunic and wide girdles, the looped up sashes only giving the bouffant effect. Many fancy bolero jackets are shown in these new models, some of which slip on as a separate coat, while others are attached to the net lining.

Stripes are particularly good, not only in the solid white, but also in minaret yellow on white ground or in tangerine. French blue, Bermuda or black on white.

A Queer Joke.

A resident of Vevey, Switzerland, died some years ago and left a will, in which he bequeathed the whole of his property, of which he was supposed to have a large amount, to the "local hospital of the town." There being two local medical charities—the town hospital and the Hospice de Samaritan—a suit at law was entered by the former in order to decide its right to the legacy. After a considerable expense had been incurred the dispute was abruptly brought to a close by the discovery that the deceased had indulged in a most unseasonable jest and, in fact, did not possess a penny to bequeath.

FASHIONABLE LINENS.

New and Handsome Sets For the Bed Handsomely Embroidered.

Sheets are almost universally hemstitched in a wide hem just to show when turned down. Yet there are many objections to this method of adornment. The threads are very apt to break. Then the hem will have to be taken off or sewed in an ungainly seam, so it will be found wiser to buy those with a perfectly plain hem or, if hemmed at home, to finish with the overhanded hem that is usually found on napkins. A fine crochet lace may go clear across the end that is to fold over and so give the look of refinement that goes with perfect taste.

Pillow slips are also left open at both ends, with lace all around. The bed seems exquisitely dressed with these accessories. An old fashioned bolster case open on either end also has lace, and if desired each of these ends may be tied with a bow of broad ribbon, although a more refined taste will not permit anything in color about a bed.

The pretty "twin beds," standing side by side, with snowy counterpanes, slips and sheets turned down, are most attractive and look neater than any sort of lace or net covers possibly can. Merchants cater now to the newest in every way, and counterpanes are so woven that the corners fit around the posts without having to be pulled into awkward folds.

He Hit It Right.

"Now, Tommy," said the teacher, "what is a simile?"

Tommy hesitated visibly. "I—I—I fergit now," he finally answered.

"But if you said, 'My hours at school are bright as sunshine,' what figure of speech would that be?"

"Irony," responded Tommy.

Expensive.

"Yes," said the young wife proudly, "father always gives something expensive when he makes presents."

"So I discovered when he gave you away," rejoined the young husband.

Milady's Mirror

Cultivating Plump Elbows.

The hot, drying, scorching rays of summer work havoc with the complexion, and the girl who wants to have a pretty skin to match her soft, transparent white and faintly tinted summer gowns must take a great deal of care of herself.

Fashions change, it is true, but all girls love pretty, dimpled elbows, even if the sleeves displaying them are not to be worn, and fortunately there is nothing easier than to bring sharp, thin, bony elbow joints into shape.

Where arms are too thin the use of cocoa butter is to be recommended. This, being a byproduct of the cocoa bean, is nourishing and fattening, but the skin must be in condition to receive it properly. Thorough cleansing, softening and opening of the pores are necessary, that full benefit from the application may be felt. Cloths wrung out of warm water should be applied at night. They should be held on until a little cool, then warmed again until the skin feels soft and is pink. Then rub with a generous amount of cocoa butter, slightly warmed, in each palm, the opposite elbow placed in the hand. Use the motion around and around until all greasy feeling is gone. This takes quite awhile, for cocoa butter is rather greasy, but a little practice will soon prove that the process is not too tiresome.

The rubbing may be continued up from the wrist if the forearm be a little too thin, and from there to the shoulder where the whole arm seems to require the addition of more flesh, but if only the elbow joint is bony, just on that joint will answer.

Banishing Blackheads.

To cure blackheads be careful of the diet. Eat nothing rich or greasy. Give up pastry, new bread and sweet things. Drink two or three glasses of milk a day. See that the digestion is kept in good order. Take one or two teaspoonfuls as required of confection of sulphur every night and get this mixture made up: Sulphate of iron, sixteen grams; dilute sulphuric acid, one dram; magnesium sulphate, one ounce; peppermint water to make six ounces. Take a dessertspoonful in a little water half an hour before breakfast every morning. Walk two or three miles a day. Drink a glass of cold water an hour before each meal. Take a hot bath every night and a tepid one each morning. Use a tar toilet soap, and every morning, after washing and well drying the face, sponge the following lotion lightly on: Boracic acid, one-half dram; rectified spirits, one and one-half ounce. Steam the face once a week; then squeeze out the largest blackheads and apply a mixture of equal parts of boracic ointment and sulphur ointment.

A Hint For Golfers.

A woman golfer who owns a beautiful, smooth complexion attributes the preservation of her skin to her plan of dissolving a little isinglass in hot milk, bathing her face in it and allowing it to dry on before she ventures out. Any feeling of contraction soon passes off, and the isinglass forms an invisible coating to the skin and protects it from the ravages of the wind. Instead of isinglass either gelatin or white of egg beaten to a froth may be employed. The latter is an excellent remedy against all chapping and is in itself a cleanser. A good plan after the face has been exposed to the wind or cold is to sponge it with rosewater into which has been dropped a little eau de cologne or lavender water, or as a further emollient apply cold milk to the skin.

Tinted Face Powders.

Of recent times the Parisiennes seem to have gone mad over tinted face powders and tinted wigs. The very latest idea is a pale lemon yellow face powder, which is supposed to give an extraordinary softness to the skin.

An artistic but highly unnatural cyclamen pink rouge is used in conjunction with the pale yellow powder, and the throat and neck are coated with flesh pink and pure white powder. This peculiar makeup is intended for evening use only.

The lemon yellow and cyclamen pink makeup look effective on a fair haired woman who possesses a pair of dark gray eyes.

Lovely Eyelashes.

To produce sweeping, curling lashes daily attention is necessary. Get a soft brush made for the purpose and gently brush them twice a day. The last thing at night apply this eyelash cream: Sweet oil of almonds, one-half dram; simple tincture of benzoin, one-quarter dram; glycerin, one-half dram; lanolin, one-half dram; attar of roses, one drop. This increases the growth and silkiness of the eyelashes. To make them curl upward lay one finger under them and raise upward. Do this as often as you can think of it.

PERRIN'S DAIRY CREAM SODAS

GOT A NEW FACE.

Horribly Disfigured Woman Was Finally Made Presentable.

Surgery has progressed to the point where it can supply new nerves, blood vessels, bones and even new faces to men and women who have been maimed and mutilated by accident or disease. European specialists have described to the congress of the American Surgical Association many examples of the wonderful results obtained in reparatory surgery. Dr. Erich Lexer of the University of Jena, Germany, showed a once beautiful woman whose face he practically remade in two years. She had been disfigured in the explosion of an automobile.

First she was shown without a nose and with the vestige of a chin, with part of an ear and without eyebrows, and with her eye lids drawn down in hideous fashion. No more unpromising subject could have been presented. First the surgeon made a nose for her out of cartilage and fat and skin which he had obtained from other parts of her body. After awhile he saw that the nose was shaped up and molded anew. He made a chin for her, revised the disfigured mouth and put some artistic touches on the remains of her ears.

He finished with a portrait of the young woman in gala dress and smiling. She had not been restored to her former pulchritude, but, taken all in all, the surgeon had performed a most remarkable feat.

Then came a hare-lipped young man with a decidedly unprepossessing face. The surgeon literally transformed him in a few months into a Prince Charming and induced him to raise a moustache to cover the lip line. The final state of the youth was almost handsome enough for him to qualify as a riding master or a tango teacher.

From a surgical point of view one of the most brilliant operations, which was shown by Dr. Lexer in color photographs on the screen, was the transplantation of fat and part of a bone into a shattered patella, so that the free action of the knee was restored to the patient. The surgeon demonstrated also how he would obtain quantities of fat from legs and insert them under cheeks to fill up hollows or to smooth out foreheads in which there were unsightly cavities. For a patient who had no external ears he built two perfectly good ones with graceful, scroll-like effects. A young girl whose face was her misfortune was changed into an attractive miss.

Dr. H. Morestin of Paris told the congress that graftings and transplantations of tissues had considerably enlarged the limits of reparatory operations.

"They have enabled us," he continued, "to remedy under better conditions many grave deformities and to lead to many other restorations hitherto almost unattainable."

He spoke of the use of small fragments of skin, of cutaneous transplantation in two distinct times, of the grafting of eyebrows and moustaches and of the strengthening of the broken and mashed nose by grafting cartilage.

An Original Oath of Allegiance.

In the old days when the Spanish province of Aragon was a proud and independent monarchy the people used when choosing their king the following singular form of election:

"We, the freeborn inhabitants of the ancient kingdom of Aragon, who are equal to you, Don Philip, and something more, elect you to be our king on condition that you preserve to us our rights and privileges. If in this you should fail we own you for our king no longer."

What Might Have Been.

Rosemary—Isn't it wonderful how prolific some of the old novelists were when it is taken into consideration that they had to do all their composition with pen and ink?

Thornton—Yes; I shudder to think of what they might have turned out if they could have had the advantage of typewriters.—London Answers.

THE WAYS OF A MAN.

They Are Not Necessarily Unalterable, as Every Woman Knows.

He carried flowers and diamond rings to please that dazzling belle, and caramels and other things that damsels love so well. He'd sit for hours upon a chair and hold her on his knees; he blew his money here and there as though it grew on trees. "If I had half what you are worth," he used to say, "my sweet, I'd put a shawl strap round the earth and lay it at your feet."

He had no other thought, it seemed, than just to cheer her heart, and everything of which she dreamed he purchased in the mart.

"When we are spliced," he used to say, "you'll have all you desire—a gold mine or a load of hay, a dachshund or a lyre. My one great aim will be to make your life a thing of joy, so haste and to the altar take your little Clarence boy."

And so she thought she drew a peach when they were wed in June. Alas, how oft for plums we reach and only get a prune!

"And so you want another hat?" he thundered to his frau. "Just tell me what is wrong with that—the one you're wearing now! No wonder that I have the blues, the way the money goes. Last week you blew yourself for shoes; next week you'll want new clothes!

"I wish you were like other wives and would like them behave; it is the object of their lives to help their husbands save. All day I'm in the business fight and strain my heart and soul, and when I journey home at night you touch me for my roll. You want a twenty dollar hat to hold your topknot down or else a new Angora cat, a lapdog or a gown. You lie awake at night and think of things you'd like to buy, and when I draw a little chink you surely make it fly.

"With such a wife as you, I say, a husband has no chance. You pull his starboard limb by day; by night you rob his pants.

"My sainted mother, when she dwelt in this sad vale of tears, had one old lid, of cloth or felt, she wore for thirty years. She helped my father all the time, she pickled every bone, and if she had to blow a dime it made her weep and moan.

"The hat you wear is good as new; 'twill do another year. So don't stand round, the rag to chew—I'm busy now, my dear."—Walt Mason in Judge.

Crossed Wires.

The girl with the debutante slouch gasped a little. "Why, the idea!" she said. "There must be some mistake! He was coming to see me at once when he got back! At least, that was the last thing I told him! Morgan is so shy that one has to bring him out. He must have been ill or something"—

"No, his health has been excellent," said the other girl.

"Well," snapped the girl with the debutante slouch, "since you seem to know so much about Morgan Spillings, perhaps you can tell me just why I haven't known a thing about his getting back or why he hasn't been to see me"—

"I am sure I don't know," said the brisk young woman with a faint smile, "unless it's because he has been so busy with me. We're to be married in June. I'm having such a lot of clothes made that I've got to hurry along this minute or miss my fittings. Goodby!"

"Well, I always said Morgan was queer!" said the girl with the debutante slouch. "I'm sure you'll be very happy together!"—Chicago News.

CENTENARY AT LUNDY'S LANE

Battle of One Hundred Years Ago Will Be Celebrated.

Next Saturday Lundy's Lane will be the centre of interest of the Province. There will gather there representative bodies to celbrate the Battle of Lundy's Lane, where one hundred years ago the Canadian arms were triumphant. A feature of the celebration will be the part that citizens of the United States will take. Historical societies from Niagara Falls, N. Y., with many interesting relics of the conflict, will add much to the interest.

The school children of the twin cities will assemble in the afternoon to take their place in the procession to be formed under the command of Lt.-Col. F. W. Hill. The children will be joined later by the military and the various bodies participating at the armory. From the armories the procession will proceed to the monument on the battle field. Among some of the interesting participants in the parade will be a contingent of the Veterans' Association of Ontario, followed by the mayors and councils of Niagara Falls, Ont., and Niagara Falls, N. Y.

On arrival at the monument ceremonies will be opened by the Rev. A. Robb, followed by an address of welcome by Mayor Dores. Interesting addresses will then follow from His Honor Sir John M. Gibson, and the Minister of Militia, Col. the Hon. Sam Hughes. Twelve young ladies from the Canadian and American cities will do honor to the heroes who fell in that engagement by decorating their monuments, while the military band will play "Abide with Me," after which a number of prominent men of the continent will speak.

In order that this occasion may not soon be forgotten by the many distinguished visitors, it has been planned to present commemorative medals after the ceremonies. An opportunity will be given for viewing the relics of the battle, now famous in history, that have been gathered together.

AUTHOR'S SON HAS MAP OF TREASURE ISLAND

London, July 20. — A map of "Treasure Island" which Robert Louis Stevenson drew is one of the 48 unpublished letters and literary fragments which Lloyd Osbourne, Stevenson's stepson, has brought to London for sale.

The map was drawn by Stevenson during Osbourne's school days. It was the second one Stevenson had made, the original having been lost on its way to the publishers. Of the first Stevenson wrote: "The shape of it took my fancy beyond expression; it contained harbors that pleased me like sonnets; and with the unconsciousness of the predestined, I ticketed my performance "Treasure Island.'" Of the one now on sale, the author said: "But somehow it was never the same Treasure Island to me."

An interesting letter in the collection is Stevenson's reply to an autograph hunter who had spelled his name with a "ph" instead of a "v."

"The few lines with which you have found time to honor me," he replied, "contain certain indications of your character on which I take pleasure in dwelling. They show you so illiterate that I cannot judge your admiration flattering; they show you so careless of giving trouble to me that I am myself careless how much offense I may convey to you; and they are so ill-penned that I am tempted to hope you will discover a difficulty in perusing my answer and place it unread in your collection. The next time it shall occur to you to trouble an author as you have troubled me, find out—I do not say what he has written—far less would I suggest that you should read it—but find out how he is in the habit of spelling his unpretentious name and give him upon that point the flattery of imitation."

In Stevenson's collection of books, Roget's Thesauraus is interesting because of Stevenson's comment on the fly leaf—or, "The Decayed Author's Crutch."

Attempt to Climb Into Rowboat Drowns Five

Manchester, N. H., July 18.—The attempt of Miss Annie Burrans, a student at the New England conservatory of music in Boston, to climb into a row boat in which were her sister, Mrs. Minnie Mills, of South Merrimack, the latter's two small children, Marjory and Evelyn, and her young niece, Dorothy Burrans, caused the drowning of all five. The accident occurred in Naticook Lake in South Merrimack.

Miss Burrans was swimming while her sister and the three children rowed about in a flat bottomed boat. When Miss Burrans grasped the stern of the boat and tried to climb in, it went under with its occupants. Two brothers of Miss Burrans, who were on shore reached the boat too late to lend aid to its occupants.

NOLAN MAY BE RELEASED

Is the Last of Welland Canal Dynamiters

Kingston, July 20. — It is altogether likely that John Nolan, the last of the trio of dynamiters sentenced to life imprisonment in the Penitentiary for the attempt to blow up one of the locks of the Welland Canal fourteen years ago, will be pardoned and deported to the Old Country, whence he came. While nothing official has been announced, it is stated on good authority that pressure is being brought to bear on the Department of Justice, with this end in view. The Penitentiary officials say they have received no word, but they believe it possible that such action will be taken.

Nolan is about fifty years of age, and for some time he has been in poor health. Although he is said to be a model prisoner, lately he has been working on the stone pile, and this is rapidly impairing his health. He is said to be only the wreck of the man who was committed fourteen years ago, and his friends are endeavoring to secure his release in order that he may spend his last days in freedom. During his long term in the Penitentiary, the unfortunate prisoner has worked in nearly every department of the institution.

Now that Dullman, who was considered the originator of the plot to blow up the canal, has been released, Nolan's friends are urging that it is manifestly unfair to keep him in confinement. It is stated that he and Walsh were only tools in the hands of their leader, and that while they did the work they were carried away by the representations of the eloquent, though misguided patriot, Dullman. Nolan was out from Ireland only a short time when the depredation was attempted.

It will be remembered that the attempt was made on the canal during the Boer war, and it was said that it was planned by the Fenians as a blow against Great Britain in the cause of Home Rule.

In the event of Nolan's release he will be deported immediately to Ireland.

FRUIT STAINS.

Removing fruit stains from table linen may be much more easily done if the stained part is stretched tight in an embroidery frame placed over a basin and boiling water poured over it, says the Ladies' Home Journal. Taking out fruit stains with boiling water is an old and valuable piece of knowledge, but the use of an embroidery frame to support the article probably will be new to most housekeepers.

AIMS OF GIRLS WHO ARE SOON TO ENTER BUSINESS WORLD

After having their diplomas from grammar school, high school or college carefully framed and hung upon the wall, thousands of girls all over the country are thinking and planning about making their bow to the great business world which seems to them to be holding out a beckoning hand to them. In a way this other world about which they have heard so much but really know so little is a land of mystery around which they have woven a glamor of roseate hue, and from which they hope to gather in abundance the shining coins that seem so desirable. But the girl who enters the arena knowing that there is no royal road to success and that she must give full value for every dollar received is liable to gain the greatest victory.

Influence may secure a position, but hard work is what holds it, for in this age of competition it is a "survival of the fittest," and every one must stand on his own feet. In the drawing-room one may expect favors, because one is a woman; but in business it is strictly ability which counts, as a woman is competing with a man, and it is the one who does the work best that advances. There is no depending on others to help one over the rough places, for it is the worker herself who can smooth them out, and if this seems a bit harsh at times, after one has reached smoother sailing there is a satisfaction that it has been accomplished through one's own efforts and because the work was done right.

Field Will Be Crowded.

When the young girl enters this new world in the fall she will find it crowded; there may be scarcely elbow room where she is located, and it will rest with her to gain more space, for the higher she climbs the more room she will have. It is just doing her work, however monotonous and humdrum it may seem, in the best way possible and in a little different way from what it has ever been done before, making it stand out separate from the others, that will attract the attention of those higher up and lead to advancement. To devise a new way, a shorter, quicker or better method for doing the simplest work may seem to the new comer impossible, but there is little work which is so perfect that it cannot be improved upon, and the one who can succeed in finding a better way will discover that there is a distinction about her work that has taken her out of the crowd and given her more freedom.

Many happy experiences are in store for the girl who enters business, and, although there may be some of the other kind, they will all combine to teach, to strengthen and lead her to higher efficiency and success. There will be problems to face which will be a surprise to her; she will learn that everything which glitters is not desirable, but upon the wisdom of her choice of associates and pleasures largely depends her success.

To Aim for a High Position.

A majority of the girls who are planning to become wage earners will aim for a high position. Those who go into the department stores will look upon the position of a buyer of the department with an annual trip to Europe as an enviable one; those who go into the office as stenographers or bookkeepers will look with longing eyes toward the position of private secretary; and the dressmaker's apprentice will dream of the time when she will own her establishment and make an opening for other girls in the business world.

Whether these ambitions are all reached or not, it is good to have aimed for them, but let her remember that success may be achieved many times without reaching the goal. Success and honor may lie in doing one's part each day in meeting the world's needs, and in doing it as efficiently and whole-heartedly as possible, just as surely as in reaching the goal of high position and large remuneration.

Success is Many Sided.

Success is not uncommon for it is many sided, and the girl who makes the start with the determination to meet every difficulty as steppingstones on which she may mount to greater efficiency, and with energy, ambition, and common sense, may be reasonably sure of a large amount of success. It may not all come in the way she would choose, but there will be enough to make her rejoice that she has a part in the great business world, in its activities, in its ups and downs and changing conditions, and when the time comes for her to have it, talhuogh it may be gladly and of her own choosing, there may be regrets and there will be happy remembrances of endeavor and success won, and of experiences which at the time may have seemed hard, but all of which hardened and strengthened her and made her better fitted for other duties which may come to her later on.

Opportunity faces every girl who will become a wage-earner next fall, and among the greatest of all victories that she can gain is that of enlarging her own capabilities and putting aside the thought of self in doing her best work and her share to meet the needs of th world.

AGONY COLUMN OF LONDON TIMES

It is rather curious that the most dignified of newspapers should at the same time be world-famous for the utter abandon that distinguishes one of its departments. Yet the London Times' so-called "agony column" continues to be unique in British journalism. One can hardly read a British novel without coming across some reference to the agony column or to the tendency of the British upper classes to "write a letter to the Times" upon the slightest provocation. The column in which lovers exchange their surreptitious greetings and make their assignations, in which wives appeal to their peeved husbands to return home, in which adventurers who are ready to cut a throat or scuttle a ship advertise their willingness to accept hazardous occupations, in which starving genius prays for financial support, continues to be one of the most interesting featurs of the great London paper.

Out for the Money.

A close observer notes a gradual change in the importunities of the advertisers in the agony column. They are getting away from sentiment, and their chief needs could be rendered in terms of pounds and shillings. It is not the broken heart that is displayed so frequently as the broken pocketbook. Advertisers in the agony column share the complaint of other advertisers. They need money. Here are a couple of specimen advertisements that have appeared recently, and they give a fair idea of the sort of agony that is now rending the British upper classes:

"Professional man, sick of living in town, would like large house in country, with income to keep up same. O, please help!"

"Young man, weary of work in an office, seeks any sort of remunerative adventure; would risk all provided he got paid a lot; good Alpinist; can drive motor car or motor bicycle; some experience of flying. Who will help?"

The Column of Romance.

We are all familiar from our reading of light and romantic literature with the wealthy scoundrels who have used the Times advertisements for the purpose of gathering about them a despreate gang of adventurers, mostly of the Charles Dana Gibson type as regards appearance, and the Georges Carpentier type as regards ability to fell opponents. They have sailed to discover sunken treasure, to release imprisoned heiresses, to overthrow Illyrian monarchies, and upon other desperate quests. In variably they have been successful. They have not only become millionaires, but have won beautiful brides. Some of them have founded dynasties. It is only natural that readers who desire to emulate them should take the first step by advertising their willingness to perform deeds of gentlemanly ruffianism. Unfortunately, the Times has no column to show how many offers are accepted, and with what results to the advertisers.

The Real "Agony" Advertisement

But, of course, it was not advertisements like these quoted that inspired some unknown genius to apply the word "agony" to the personal column of the Times. We have to go back some time to find the typical "agony" advertisements appearing in preponderating numbers. Here is a sample:

"William, thou wilt go to sea — thou shalt go; but O, return and receive the blessings of a heart-broken father, of a heart-broken mother! O, my son William, my son, my son William, would God I had died for thee, O William, my son, my son!"

Here is another one:

"If the youth that left Islington on Sunday evening can remember that he ever had a mother, he is informed he will soon be deprived of that blessing except he immediately writes, with particulars, or appears before her."

A subsequent advertisement that might have been written upon the youth's failure to return, is as follows:

"Philip. — Would Philip like to hear of his mother's death?"

In those days, you see, advertisers in the agony column believed that mothers ceased to cling tenaciously to life when their sons decamped. Fortunately for the race, they were mistaken.

A Quest for Sweethearts.

As long ago as 1800 we find broken hearts trying to beat in the agony column. Here is an advertisement that reeks of romance;

"If the lady who a gentleman handed into her carriage at Covent Garden Theatre on Wednesday, the third of this month, would oblige the advertiser with a line to Z. Z., Spring Gardens Coffee House, saying if married or single, she would quiet the mind of a young Nobleman, who has tried, but in vian, to find the lady. The Lady was in mourning and sufficiently clothed to distinguish her for possessing every virtue and charm that man could desire in a female that he would make choice of for a wife."

This was by no means the only young nobleman who advertised in the Times for a wife, and thousands of "fair unknowns" have been sought let us hope not unsuccessfully in this department in the past century.

Wheat Cut In the Morning Makes Supper Biscuits

Pueblo, Col., July 18.—William Hossicks, a farmer near Delphos, Kan., is said to have had the first batch of biscuits for supper from wheat grown this year in that part of the state, a Salina, Kan., despatch to the Star-Journal says. He began cutting his wheat in the morning and a few bundles of it were taken to a threshing machine working on an adjoining farm where it was threshed. The grain was rushed to a mill a couple of miles and late in the afternoon the flour was in the pantry at the Hossicks' home where Mrs. Hossicks prepared biscuits for the harvesters for supper. Supper was served at 6.30 o'clock and the biscuits were made from wheat cut at 9 o'clock in the morning.

SUICIDED IN BAR OF HOTEL

Ottawa Athlete Fired Second Shot, Which Proved Fatal.

Ottawa, July 20.—Harold (Hal) Walters, aged 45, well known in athletic circles as a member of the old Rough Riders' football team, committed suicide Saturday afternoon in the Bodega Hotel, shooting himself through the temple in full view of a number of persons in the barroom. Walters fired two shots, the first passing through his hat and not injuring him. He then deliberately pressed the 38-calibre revolver against his right temple and discharged the weapon. Walters was a veteran of the South African War and a former member of the local police force. Recently he has been attached to the staff of the Dominion Geological Survey.

How Amber Was Valued Long Ago.

The Phoenicans and the Greeks knew of amber 1000 B. C., and traded in it. The Goths traded in amber and carried it by caravan across Germany, whilst objects of Asiatic and Etruscan amber were in return dispersed throughout Germany and Scandinavia at a later date. In Rome so great was its value that we are told by Pliny that a figurine in amber no matter how small, exceeded that of a slave. Gladiators, as they defiled past the emperor with the greeting "Ave Caesar, moriture te salutant," wore an amber amulet. At the same period all the weapons and articles used during the games of the amphitheatre were made of amber.

The history of the gold of the north, as it is designated, dates further back than any other article of commerce. The search for it caused the ancients to penetrate far into the regions of west and north Europe, but amber is surrounded by a vivid charm as a relic of bygone vegetation 500 B. C. Homer frequently refers to amber, and with the ancients it was much in request as a gem and also for its fragrant odor when burning. Tacitus was the first writen who speaks positively of the amber of the Baltic. Few stones are shrouded and surrounded by such a nebulous charm.

It is generally believed that amber came ffrom two species of coniferous pine—a pinus, like the linus balsamea, and only existing in the rather later tertiary formations, but historians say it dates back even earlier. After leaving traces of a former existence, the amber forests utterly vanished—not one remains on the face of the earth. But for the gems, they have left no substantial indications of their former presence on the globe; and there is no satisfactory explanation of the utter dearth of substantial remains of these immense forests.

ICE CREAM MAKING.

When making ice cream turn the crank slowly for the first five minutes, says the Hartford Courant. When the dasher is removed to add ingredients have them cold and beat them into the half frozen mixture with a long wooden spoon. The best ice cream is secured by the use of pure cream, one half scalded and one half uncooked.

NEW WATERWAY FROM MONTREAL TO NEW YORK

Scheme is Being Investigated By Engineers for U. S.

Ottawa, July 20.—A scheme for a waterway which by way of the Richelieu River would connect Montreal with New York and afford a 12-foot navigation, is planned by the United States Government.

Col. W. M. Black, of the Corps of Engineering of the United States army at New York, and Lieut.-Col. Harry Taylor, assistant chief engineer at Washington, were here seeing the Public Works Department on Saturday and left for an inspection of the Richelieu River and Chambly Canal preparatory to the completion of plans. There is a through waterway at present, but it is of insufficient depth to be of real advantage. What is desired is to increase its depth, and a few years ago such a plan was mooted and investigated by the Government, but no action upon it was taken. The main necessity would be the construction of a movable dam near St. John's in order to raise the level of the Richelieu River flowing out of Lake Champlain. This would also do away with the need of the Chambly Canal by reason of the rapids it overcomes being done away with through the increased level of water. A more direct route to Montreal than by way of Sorel may also be provided by means of a short canal to Laprairie.

The United States Government is extending the Erie system through New York, and the plan of deepening the waterway from the St. Lawrence to Lake Champlain has behind it the purpose of affording water competition for the heavy rail traffic between these points.

While the project was instigated some years ago in Canada, the latest move in it is by the United States, and after an inspection by the engineers it is anticipated that detailed plans will be presented to the Government here along with a request for its co-operation.

Of tiles and posts and piers;
But a home is built of loving deeds
That stand a thousand years.

57th REGIMENT AMONG THE MANY ALLIED WITH BRITISH BATTALIONS

Ottawa, July 20.—Alliances between Canadian and British regiments instituted after the Boer war, are receiving every encouragement from the department of militia. They are proving an efficacious means of fostering imperial sentiment, promoting mutual good will and encouraging efficiency.

Some seventeen Canadian corps are now allied with British regiments. The first alliance was effected between the 5th Royal Scots of Montreal and the British Black Watch Regiment, and the idea has been quite etxensively propagated. The origin of it was due to so many British reservists, or those who had served in British Regiments in South Africa, coming to Canada and joining Canadian corps. They encouraged the idea of allying the Canadian regiments with regiments in the Mother Country.

At the present time papers are going through looking to an addition of three or four more regiments to the already substantial list of corps so allied.

The regiments co-operating are as follows: 5th Royal Highlanders, Montreal, with the Black Watch; 6th Regiment, Vancouver, with the Prince Consort's Own Rifle Brigade; 13th Regiment of Hamilton, with Prince Albert's Somerset Light Infantry; 19th Regiment, St. Catharines, with the Lincolnshire Regiment; 48th Highlanders, Toronto, with the Gordon Highlanders; 57th Regiment, Peterboro, with the Middlesex Regiment, the "Die Hards;" Queen's Own Rifles, Toronto, with the East Kent Regiment, "The Buffs;" 63rd Regiment, Halifax, with the King's Royal Rifles, originally the Royal Americans of Boston; 72nd Regiment of Vancouver, and 78th Regiment of Pictou, with the Seaforth Highlanders; 77th Regiment of Dundas with the Middlesex Regiment; 79th Regiment of Winnipeg with the Queen's Own Cameron Highlanders; 91st Regiment, Hamilton, with the Argyle and Sutherland Regiment; 10th Royal Grenadiers with the Leinster Regiment, the old 100th; 101st Fusiliers of Edmonton and the 104th Regiment of New Westminster, with the Royal Munster Regiment, and the 8th Hussars of Calgary with King Edward's Horse.

The funeral of the late Mr. Edward Kemp, farmer in Douro, took place on Sunday, 19th. inst., at 2 p.m. to Little Lake Cemetery.

The relatives of the deceased wish to express their appreciation of the sympathy shown and the many beautiful flowers sent, marking the respect in which the late Mr. Edward Kemp was held in the community.

Mr. Pearse was born in Cobourg in 1833, and had resided here continuously since. It was only when compelled to by the infirmities of age that he missed an Orange demonstration. CHRIST THE EXAMPLE FOR EVERY CALLING WHICH MEN MAY TAKE

There were large congregations in Charlotte Street Methodist Church yesterday both morning and evening. At the evening service Rev. J. P. Wilson, B.A., preached a very clear sermon on the subject of example, his text being taken from I Peter 2 chap. 21st v., "For even hereunto were ye called, because Christ also suffered for us leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps."

Christ was the great example for everybody just as the copy head in the child's writing book is the example for his writing. As the child's last line is far from an exact copy of the original so men's lives are often not at all the Christ life. But that does not change the model. Some men say they live as good or better lives than many Christians which was true but then men are not your examples, said the preacher. Christ is your example for business policies, or any legitimate calling into which you may go. Christ was at one time a mechanic when he worked in the carpenter shop of his father and He did not have to compromise Himself what was wanted today were men who would act the Christ life in every proper field of activity.

Miss Richardson sang two very fine solos one at each service which were as usual much appreciated. At the evening service Miss Alice Williams and Mr. Lee sang a duet entitled "He Knows," the good rendering of which was a pleasure to the congregation.

LOCAL LADY COUSIN OF MISS YORKE

winds around the lake for some distance, and it is in this vicinity that the searchers will devote their activities. From the farm-house the lake can be plainly seen.

Another despatch says:

Tamworth, July 20.—The circle is getting smaller. The clue is presenting itself. The whereabouts of Miss Blanche Yorke, who suddenly disappeared on the evening of Wednesday of last week, will be known in a few days. Quiet observation and sober thinking have changed the trend of thought. The auto started it, but it is now believed that perhaps the auto didn't go very far away after all. The young lady may be in a house in Tamworth itself. There is no positive evidence that she is, but circumstances and the attitude assumed by some when the matter is mentioned leads to the belief that several people know where the girl is. Moreover, they apparently are not much disturbed as to her safety.

Astonishing Complacency.

They look at it with a complacency that is astonishing. It means that one of the most bewildering and mysterious disappearances in the history of the Province may conclude with the girl's appearance right in Tamworth, the hot-bed of the mystery. Whether this will be within a few days or two months depends on the information secured by the police and the persistence of the people, with whom she is "stopping," if such it can be called.

To elaborate on the theory, it is to the effect that some one who knew the young woman's condition sought to do a kindness to either by keeping her or sending her away. The former course is the more reasonable. The auto was probably in the game too. On such a theory it is evident that suave persuasion and force was used.

Perhaps Willingly Held.

The girl, knowing her condition, would readily accept such a thing, not anticipating the great sensation that it would produce. Other than the disappearance itself there never has been and there is not now a bit of evidence to even hint at foul play. On the contrary there has been much that would lead to an opposite conclusion. The benefactors never anticipated what it would produce in the line of a sensation, and probably are now regretting their action. It is also quite possible that Miss Yorke may be in touch with every move made to learn of her whereabouts. On this theory it is quite likely that Miss Yorke's reappearance will be just as sudden and astonishing as her disappearance. At any rate, it is no longer believed that she has committed suicide or met with foul play other than being retained, possibly, but not probably, against her will.

The Quest at Brighton.

Nothing has yet turned up that lends to locating the missing girl. The motor car of Mr. Richardson, with the Yorke brothers and the High County Constable, returned from Brighton last night, where they had been to see a Mr. W. A. Caldwell, who had telegraphed Mr. Yorke that he could give him information about his daughter, Blanche, but on going there it was only a fortune-teller he had, who could not tell them anything. High County Constable Van-Koughnet is completely baffled now to know what to do. He returned to Napanee last night, and is expected to be back tomorrow. The people here are inquiring where Dr. Robinson has gone. Some say he is in Kingston, and some say he is not to be found. The Yorke boys still continue the search for their sister through the woods and around the several lakes in hope that they may find her. Mr. McGregor, her fiance, is here again doing all he can to assist in the search.

POLICE COURT

Mike Larone, one of the old-timers, classed by the police as one of their "high-class" vags appeared this morning before Magistrate Dumble and was remanded until tomorrow.

Bernard McMannus pleaded guilty to the charge of being intoxicated in charge of a vehicle. He was fined $5.75.

Except for their mistakes, a great many men would never even be heard of.

MGR. OF BANK OF OTTAWA AT MONTREAL

Canon Davidson Refers to Mr. G. E. Wainwright's Residence Here.

Mr. G. C. Wainwright, formerly manager of the Bank of Ottawa, of this city, left last evening for Montreal, where he will assume the managership for several months.

Mr. Wainwright has been a resident of this city for the past several years, during which time he made a host of friends, who will sincerely regret his departure from the city. Last evening at St. John's Church during the course of his sermon, Cannon Davidson paid an excellent tribute to the departing member. Mr. Wainwright had served the church in the capacities of various officers, especially in connection with the Peoples Chimes fund, for which he acted as treasurer. Speaking in pointed terms of the strong character of Mr. Wainwright as a citizen, and of his own appreciation, Canon Davidson referred to how Mr. Wainwright had taken an active and steady interest in St. John's during his residence in this city, and of his material assistance to the church. Mr. Wainwright was also a strong and public minded citizen and Peterborough could ill afford to lose one who would be followed with the general interest and with the general sincere wishes of his many friends.

Mr. Wainwright has been in the city for the past few days, arranging his various personal affairs prior to his departure for Montreal. During his residence here he has served the Canadian Club in the honored capacity as president, being the outgoing president at the last term. He was also a member of the Peterboro Club, and had acted in various honored capacities.

STREET CAR WAS NOT A STREET CAR

And Prosecution of Autoists Failed.

Ingersoll, July 20.—An interesting judgment in two automobile cases which came before him recently was given by Magistrate Paterson on Saturday. The defendants, William Gibbs of Brantford and A. E. Ratz of Tavistock, were charged by Constable Scurrah of Beachville with driving past a street car at that village while it was standing to take on and discharge passengers. As the legal point was raised during the hearing of the case that the street car was not a street car at Beachville so far as the act was concerned, the outcome of the case was anxiously awaited by automobilists.

The Magistrate sustained the argument, holding that, according to the railway act, a street railway is a railway running on the streets of a city or town, and extending one and one-half miles beyond the limits. As the definition mentioned was very clear, the Magistrate dismissed the cases.

PRAYER FOR RAIN.

On request of many of his rural parishioners Rev. J. J. O'Brien, pastor of the Church of the Sacred Heart, offered up prayer yesterday for rain. It is reported that the farmers are beginning to feel the effect of the extended drought.

BERRY PICKING.

From daybreak till late in the morning there was a steady stream of children and ladies hitting the ties on the C.P.R. west with the intention of picking raspberries. One lady was heard to remark that the delicious fruit is burning up for want of rain.

Licenses Must Be Renewed At Once

The Police Department have issued a warning that all holders of licenses must renew their licenses at once or within three days after expiration or be subjected to a police court summons. This matter they claim, has caused them considerable trouble in the past, and they desire to warn the holders of licenses that more stringent means are being adopted.

UNIQUE SHORT COURSE.

In one of the counties of Illinois, a unique short course was recently held for thirty-six farm boys who have never enjoyed the advantage of agricultural instruction. A portion of the court house was turned into a combined dormitory and classroom, and local farmers who had had agricultural college training served as instructors. The results of the course were said to be tremendously satisfactory. This sounds like an eminently practical idea that might be carried out in many other districts.

NINE MORE DROWNED

Long List of Ontario Men and Boys Perish In Water.

Heroic Young Engineering Student Loses Life Trying to Save Canoeists—Bather Fails to Come up After First Plunge—Fisherman's Plank Breaks.

OAKVILLE, July 20—Two drowning accidents occurred here yesterday. The first occurred at 12 o'clock noon, when Charles Grinham went bathing in the harbor between the piers. He never came up after taking his first plunge. The body was recovered in a few moments, and physicians worked for more than an hour in their endeavor at resuscitation, but failed. Deceased was an Englishman, an employe in the shipping department of the Marlatt & Armstrong Co.'s tannery, married about a year, and highly respected as an exemplary young man. He was 26 years of age.

The second casualty occurred opposite Lakeside Park, the victim being W. N. Allen, a member of the Toronto to Hamilton good road surveying staff, whose relatives reside at Nelson, B.C. J. L. Armour was out on the lake about 200 yards in a canoe, accompanied by his little son and daughter. A gust of wind struck the small sail in the bow of the canoe and tipped it over. Mr. Armour got hold of the two little ones with one hand and the canoe with the other and kept afloat. Allen, seeing their predicament, threw off his coat and vest and started to swim out to their assistance. Two boats hurried to them also, and Allen, seeing the boats were making good headway, turned to come back. Suddenly, when about 60 feet from shore, he called for assistance, and eyewitnesses saw him go down for the third time.

Two Lost In Lake Erie.

PORT STANLEY, July 20. — Yesterday afternoon two young men hired a canoe at Samuel James' boathouse. They proceeded to the lake, which was rather rough for canoeing. When they reached the end of the east breakwater the canoe was seen to upset and both young men disappeared. Other boats proceeded to the scene and picked up the canoe, but the young men had found a watery grave. Grappling was started, but up to a late hour last night neither body had been found. They appeared to have been strangers here, and so far their names and addresses cannot be ascertained. They sank in about thirty feet of water.

Two Boys Go Down.

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., July 20.—David Hicks, aged 15, and Antonio Barto, an Italian, aged 14, were drowned in the Niagara river at Queenston yesterday afternoon. The boys were in bathing when Barto got beyond his depth. Hicks swam to his rescue, but sank before he reached his companion. Both bodies were recovered. This is the fourth accident at the same spot, McLeod's Pond, near to quarries. Hicks came here from England.

Arthur Charbonneau Drowned.

OTTAWA, July 20.—Arthur Charbonneau, aged 40, a blacksmith of this city, was drowned Saturday night in the Ottawa river. A plank jutting from a wharf on which he was fishing broke, precipitating him into the river. His companions were unable to rescue him.

Drowned In Shallow Water.

BRANTFORD, July 20. — Alonzo B. Jones, foreman of the woodworking department at the Massey-Harris plant here, met his death by drowning Saturday afternoon at the upper pond, Oakland, having fallen off a log into three feet of water while fishing there.

It is thought that he had a stroke or an attack of heart failure, as he was a good swimmer, and needed only to have stood up to be safe from drowning.

Drowning at Montreal.

MONTREAL, July 20. — David Reid, a young Scotchman, in Canada only a short time, was drowned in the Lachine Canal Friday while bathing, with companions.

Deceased, who was employed as a clerk in the C.P.R. general offices, was 21 years old.

SIX VESSELS ARE LOST

Wrecked Off Nova Scotia During Heavy Storm.

HALIFAX, N.S., July 20. — Two steamers and two schooners were wrecked during the past 24 hours as the result of the heavy storm that swept over the coast. Fortunately there was no loss of life, all the crews reaching shore in safety, but some of them had a trying experience, as thick fog had prevailed.

The vessels were the Norwegian steamer Ragna, 1,052 tons, from Chester, Pa., to St. Ann's, C.B., which ran ashore at Ballens, C.B., and the Cuban steamer Cienfuegos, 1,139 tons, which struck at Scattarie, C.B., bound for Mobile, Ala., with a cargo of pine for Montreal.

The schooner Harold C. Beecher (American) also struck on Scattarie. She sailed from New York for Sydney, N.S.

The four-masted American schooner Clarence Venner struck off Cape Sable, N.S. She was bound from New York for Halifax with 1,200 tons of hard coal.

All the vessels are in bad positions, and the prospects of floating them are slight.

The coast was swept by a gale of wind and heavy squalls. There was also thunder, lightning and rain.

King Malcolm on Beach.

YARMOUTH, N.S., July 20. —The Italian bark King Malcolm, Captain Mertola, bound from Portland, Me., to Richibucto, N.B., in ballast, is probably a total loss at Short Beach, about seven miles from Yarmouth. She left Portland about noon on Friday and struck at six o'clock on Saturday morning.

Jennie A. Pickles a Wreck.

ST. JOHN, N.B., July 20. — The three-masted schooner Jennie A. Pickles, Captain Richards, owned by F. W. Pickles & Co., of Annapolis Royal, N.S., went ashore in a thick fog at Chance Harbor in the Bay of Fundy, and it is feared will be a total wreck. The crew is safe ashore. The schooner was on her way here from Bermuda with 650 puncheons of molasses.

DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS

SEEKING "MAN IN GRAY."

Chicago Police Want Ringleader In Slum Battle.

CHICAGO, July 20. — Search for the mysterious "Man in Gray," accused of firing the first shot in the revolver battle in the Chicago vice district on Thursday night, in which one detective was killed and three others wounded, was prosecuted by the police department Saturday. That the battle was started by a lot of levee hangers-on, in an effort to kill some of the detectives of the morals squad, who had been raiding resorts, is thought to be apparent from the evidence given in the inquest over Stanley J. Birns, the slain plainclothesman.

Political and police affiliations in the vice district problem, were in process of being scented Saturday in an endeavor to place the responsibility. That the fatal effect will rouse public opinion to force the effectual stamping out of the whole segregated district was the prediction made yesterday by many police officials.

Verdict Is Delayed.

FATHER POINT, July 20. — The verdict in the inquest into the loss of the Empress of Ireland was not given here Saturday by the coroner, Dr. Pinaud. It was expected that when the case was re-opened a formal verdict would be rendered, but it was postponed again.

The Lord Strathcona and the Marie Josephine are at the scene of the wreck to-day. The weather is fine and it is likely that they will return with several bodies to-night.

Rushed Duke Into Ditch.

An amusing incident occurred at Beachville, Ont., recently during the Governor-General's tour, when the royal train stopped there for a short time. The Duke of Connaught, accompanied by H. F. Whittenberger, general superintendent of the Grand Trunk at Toronto, were taking a stroll up the street. The residents heard that the train had stopped there, and made a rush for it. They failed to recognize the distinguished visitor and rushed both him and Mr. Whittenberger into a ditch. The duke took it good-naturedly.

Death of Luther Donnelly.

KINGSTON, July 20.—The death occurred at the General Hospital on Saturday night of Luther Donnelly, aged 29, brother of Capt. John Donnelly, of the Donnelly Wrecking Co., after four months' illness from acute Bright's disease. He was unmarried and was a son of the late Capt. John Donnelly, Garden Island, and was for several years engaged in sailing the great lakes and in wrecking work with his brother. Three brothers, Capt. John and Foster, Kingston; Sandford, Toronto, and one sister, Mrs. M. McCormick, Kingston, survive.

Pleads Not Guilty.

MONTREAL, July 20.—John Rice, engineer and repairer of old furniture, accused of writing letters threatening to murder Sam Holman, general manager of the Dorval and King Edward Jockey Clubs, and of making an attempt to fire the Dorval race track, grand stand and houses on the property, was arraigned in court Saturday. He pleaded not guilty and was remanded until July 22.

CHEAP REMEDY.

THE greatest cure for worry,
  If that way you're inclined,
Is to get very busy;
  Have something on your mind;
Endeavor to accomplish
  Two people's work, old chap,
And you'll forget your troubles
  And want to take a nap.

The man so full of business
  He don't know where to look
Will notice just in passing
  That worry gets the hook.
Perhaps he may be able
  Two things at once to do,
But doing that will leave him
  No time for feeling blue.

Though trying this prescription
  At first may cause a pain,
It's cheaper than a doctor,
  So please do not complain.
To strain your back a little
  And cause the sweat to start
Is easier and better
  Than 'tis to break your heart.

Then take a turn at labor
  And drive your cares away.
As long as you are idle
  Depend on them to stay.
Relief is for the taking.
  Why all these ills endure?
Strip off your coat and collar
  And try the labor cure.

Cruel.

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

Ability to make a hit is the thing that counts, especially if you are a baseball player or a prizefighter.

Earning the money for Christmas presents never seems harder than when one's own gifts from friends and relatives are ranged before the eye.

The worst feature about misery and wretchedness is that they both seem to their victims as so totally unnecessary and yet so entirely beyond help.

It is all right to talk about avoiding temptation, and most people do so when temptation has become inoperative.

The most acceptable thing some people take is their leave.

We can't help admiring a man who has the good taste to agree with our judgment and practices.

Too often the only attention that the man who gets there feels inclined to pay those whom he encounters on the road is to give them a rap on the head if they get in his way.

Nobody likes to take what he can get unless he can get something that some other man is ardently pursuing.

MAY DAY VERY ANCIENT.

In London, Chimney Sweeps Give Unique Performance.

While in Canada May Day in most places passes quietly, in England it has a peculiar character, and it is there that the beautiful old customs, unchanged for more than a thousand years, are enacted in hundreds of villages, in the boys and girls dancing round the Maypoles set up on the village greens all the way from John O'Groat's to Land's End.

But though it cannot be called a beautiful observance, the celebration of the London sweeps in London is performed to the greater number of spectators. Most of the chimney sweeps in the city engage in it, and several parties of them parade the street for hours. No one appears to know when or where it will start, and citizens are likely to run across it two or three times in the course of the day.

The chief feature of the sweeps' parade is a huge float in the form of a bower, beautifully decorated with flowers. In the midst is seated a grotesque figure and the float is drawn by sweeps, even more incongrously dressed.

When the procession halts the sweep springs down from his bower and gives an exhibition of dancing and mad capering on the street. He is rewarded by coins flung into the hats of his assistants, and probably the whole celebration of the sweeps is no more than a device to extract a few pounds from the pockets of the Londoners, who on May Day are apt to be of a generous mood.

The sweeps' procession has been a May Day feature for years. Before that there used to be a parade of milkmaids, who danced along the streets leading cows wreathed in flowers.

May Day in London, however, has hardly been the same since the Puritans saw in the observances something popish or pagan and sternly repressed them. Before that time the greatest Maypoles in the world were in the city.

One of the London parishes receives its names from the relation of the church steeple to the pole that used to be erected every May Day in the street. The pole was so high that it topped the steeple by several feet, and this fact is curiously preserved in the name of St. Andrew Undershaft.

The most renowned Maypole in London, was that erected immediately after the restoration, when Charles II. ordered that the good old custom of observing the day should be revived.

The tallest Maypole ever seen was planted in the Strand. Drums beat and flags waved as a detachment of sailors sent for the purpose by the Duke of York set up the pole in Little Drury Lane, opposite Somerset House, and ever since this part of the lane has been called Maypole alley, though all traces of the great shaft vanished long ago.

It is said that in some of the remoter villages there are to be found the Maypoles that were set up after the restoration and a few that survived the rigors of the commonwealth.

The ceremonies in rural England are unchanged. There is the decking of the Maypole early in the morning by the young people, who have searched the woods for early flowers, the primrose being favorite. Then there is the dance about the pole and the jollity that Hardy has preserved in the opening scene of "Tess," and probably some deep potations, as was the unfortunate case with Mr. Durbeyfield.

They Laid Up the Car.

A thrush has built her nest in a railway carriage which has been traveling twice a day between Limvardady Junction and Londonderry, Ireland.

She is now engaged in hatching four eggs, and one day recently nearly lost her family owing to a change in the time-table. The train was timed to leave Derry ten minutes earlier than usual, and the bird, who had been out shopping, returned too late.

She was obviously distressed at finding the carriage containing her home missing.

All's well that ends well, however, for the next day she was seen again on its return. Arrangements have now been made to lay up the carriage till the eggs are hatched.

Commas and the Law.

The comma in the Act of Parliament which has caused a dispute between Monmouthshire miners and their employers recalls the fact that such marks of punctuation were introduced into law only half a century ago. Down to 1850 all Acts of Parliament consisted, in theory at all events, of one sentence. In that year a special statute was passed to allow the text of legislative enactments to be punctuated and pointed by full-stops, etc. They are so easily interpolated and altered that lawyers know their danger and avoid them in legal documents.—London Daily Chronicle.

A Mighty Contest.

Among the songs of Burns is one upon a whistle used by a Dane of the retinue of Anne of Denmark, when she came to England. The whistle was laid upon a table at the beginning of a drinking bout, and was won by the last drinker who was able to blow it. The Dane conquered all comers until Sir Robert Lawrie, of Maxwelton — "Maxwelton braes are bonnie"—after three days and nights of a hard contest put the Dane under the table.

Standing Up and Sitting Up.

Lady de Bathe (Mrs. Langtry) once made the piquant remark that she was "a foe to dissipation or anything of that kind, and I would urge every girl to say 'No' to the dissipated man who would marry her. The man a girl is obliged to stand up for before marriage she will have to sit up for afterward."—Strand Magazine.

July Good Month to Sow Alfalfa

Farmers who intended to sow alfalfa during the month of June but did not succeed should not despair. Prof. C. A. Zavitz, of the Ontario Agricultural Colege, says that he considers July the best month, and June the worst in which to sow alfalfa. When sown during July considerable time elapses before the seed must be sown, and this time can be taken advantage of in order to prepare a good seed-bed and conserve moisture. During the same time the weed seeds in the surface layers of the soil will have germinated and will have been destroyed if the cultivation has been thorough. Furthermore, showers are more likely to be frequent during the month of July than in June, and when sown in the latter month there is a possibility that the weeds will grow up and perhaps conquer the young alfalfa seedlings.

In an experiment carried out on the College farm for a period of four years, it was found that on the average of these years, July 19th was the most favorable period in which to sow alfalfa seed. A plot sown on July 5th gave, on the average of four years, .78 tons of hay less than the July 19th seeding, while a plot sown on the 21st of June gave .96 tons less. Taking it at a later date the difference is even more marked. A seeding made on August 2nd gave .23 tons less per acre, and on August 16th it gave 1 ton less of hay per acre than when sown on July 19th. August 30th, which is generally considered too late, gave very bad results, showing a difference between that of July 19th of 1.59 tons.—Farmer's Advocate.

THE SPORTING WORLD

WON THE FINAL FROM BRANTS

The final attraction in the week end series with Rube Deneau's clan added one to the win column of the Petes after allowing the Brants to fatten their average to the extent of Thursday's and Friday's bills. It may have been the fact that there was a possibility of the Blountmen taking a ride on the downward trail that prompted the diminutive leader to rush Louie Schettler to the rescue, and if such were the case he picked the proper man at the proper time. Anything Louie didn't have on the ball on Saturday is something foreign to Spalding tossers. He had the Red Sox swinging on slow curves and missing his fast one all the way through. All told they secured but five bingles off his delivery, which reads a little better than thirteen realized the day before.

The hurler Big Rube selected from his handsome quartette was Gero, but he proved no impediment. Any time there was scoring, he started it by giving a free pass to first. In all ten hits were made of his assortment.

While Schettler was working his head off his team mates did not fail him, but came through when hits meant runs. Right in the first frame Blount walked, Welsh sacrificed him to second, Dolan singled, scoring his manager, Rooney got a life on an error, "Pretty Alice" Byrne deposited a nice sacrifice along the path to first and King drove them home with a single to centre, making a total of three. The locals came right back in the second and made it five when Miller was walked, Blount tripled to right and scored on Welsh's out from short to first. In the fourth Gero walked Fox and when Blount rapped out a double Frank scored. Six was the number at which the Petes stopped.

The two counters Brantford had came in the fifth when Fried went safe on Fox's error and Wilson the next man up poled out a three bagger. On the relay in to get Fried, Fox threw high to the plate and Wilson romped home. In that same frame Mr. Gero secured a single and was so surprised that he turned toward his bench and hollered, "What d'ye know about it, and to left field, too."

In the ninth Welsh tore off a nice catch, incidentally robbing Roth of a two bagger. With two down, Deneau sent Lamond in to bat for Wilson, but the relict of the late Amby Kane struck out.

When the "Break" Comes in the Game

The "break" in a game is the most curious thing in baseball. No one is able to tell exactly what it is because no one understands it. As used by baseball players it means the climax of the game, the point of highest interest, where one team has a chance to gain everything or lose everything. But that does not tell you all there is to know about the "break" or how everyone—manager, regulars, coaches and "subs"—can recognize it when it comes.

For the "break" is not simply a matter of men on bases. It may come when the first man up in the sixth inning strolls down to first on a base on balls. The ordinary spectator may see nothing unusual in that, for men may have been getting on base by various methods all through the previous innings, but to the players themselves it may mean that the long sought for "break" has come. The "ins" may have been playing a waiting game, trying to tire out their opponents' pitcher, and that base on balls may mean that he is tiring and has lost his control. All of them are up shouting now, and the coaches at first and third seem to have new life injected into them; the manager runs out and whispers a word of advice to the next man as he is about to step to the plate. It doesn't matter if they are three runs behind and have been in a better position to score earlier in the game and haven't been able to take advantage of it. That one base on balls is what they have been waiting for. If the twirler has really lost his control he will "pass" others, or else he will have to put the ball over the centre of the plate, and it will be an easy matter to "kill" it. The "break" has come.

It is curious how these "breaks" arrive. No one who has not been following the game from the players' point of view will know when to expect them. And the strangest part of the whole affair is that the "break" usually decides the game. There is no explanation for that, except that the players are keyed up for their best efforts then, and, if they fail, their confidence is decreased, and everyone knows how big a part confidence plays in every athletics sport. The batter that the pitcher fears is the one who doesn't fear him, who doesn't think that there is a pitcher on earth he can't hit. That is the kind of man who causes the trouble, and whom the pitchers hate to see come to the plate in a pinch.

Naturally, the ball players who can "deliver the goods" when in the "break" are those who are most in demand. That is one reason why averages don't mean so very much in baseball. A man who bats .270 and who keeps his nerve when the "break" comes and delivers a fair percentage of his hits then is more valuable to his team than a player who bats .320 and makes most of his hits against weak twirlers when his team is far in the lead.

"Of course, everyone knows the reputation that "Home-Run" Baker of the world's champion Athletics has for "breaking up" games, but there is another man on the same club who does this very nearly as often. Shortstop Barry is a player who never bats among the leaders, yet he is respected by the pitchers simply because he has the knack of making his hits in the "break." His work in the field is just as well known, too, and he has saved more than one game by some startling stop when the "break" arrived for the other team.

For don't suppose that a game can't be saved just as well as gained in a "break." A "break" merely means that the team at bat has its chance to win. Just as a hit for it may spell victory, so a difficult catch or a phenomenal throw may serve to quash the rally and secure the victory of the team in the field.

COMMENT

As You Like It

HAVING LOWERED distress signals for the time being, the Ottawa Senators, and don't forget Mr. Rogers, landed in town this morning and started with the Petes at the ball lot this afternoon, in a series of three games.

INCLUDED in the gathering is a young fellow, who hails from across the line and plays the short field for the visitors. Shag. almost broke his heart trying to land this youth, and reports say he made his appearance for a consideration of $1000, which he himself did not get.

THE SERIES should be three scrappy battles, not meaning that the players are going to battle under the rules that govern the squared ring, but rather that as Mr. Shaughnessey needs the trio very badly, he will chase the Petes to the limit.

THE GAME TOMORROW, which will be called at 3.45, will be free to the ladies.

SCHETTLER made the Brants toe the mark in Saturday's bill, and the Blountmen took the odd game. It was well done.

How Hard You Hit in an Auto Smash

If a motor car is wrecked when going forty miles an hour its occupant is thrown against a wall, a post or a fence with the same force that he would strike if he fell to the ground from a height of 53.78 feet. To get an idea of what the force of this impact might be, stand on a wall, or a house 53.78 feet high, look down and contemplate the jump.

If the car is going sixty miles an hour the impact is equivalent to a fall of 121 feet. The following table gives the force of various speeds per hour:

10 miles equals a fall of	3.36 ft.
15 miles equals a fall of	7.56 ft.
20 miles equals a fall of	13.44 ft.
25 miles equals a fall of	21.01 ft.
30 miles equals a fall of	30.25 ft.
35 miles equals a fall of	41.17 ft.
40 miles equals a fall of	53.78 ft.
50 miles equals a fall of	86.53 ft.
55 miles equals a fall of	101.67 ft.
60 miles equals a fall of	121.00 ft.
70 miles equals a fall of	164.69 ft.
80 miles equals a fall of	215.10 ft.
90 miles equals a fall of	272.24 ft.
100 miles equals a fall of	336.10 ft.

RENTING ROOMS

The total amount of rent money paid for furnished rooms in this city each week is enormous! Nobody knows how much. It goes to thrifty people, who like to lessen their own rent or living expense by sub-letting one or more spare rooms to an agreeable person. If YOU have a desirable extra room you can become a receiver of rent by ordering a "Furnished Room to Let" ad. in the Review. The cost is nominal—one cent a word for first insertion and half a cent a word for subsequent insertions, run consecutively.

ELECTRIC METERS ACCURATE — SHOW ANY CURRENT USED

Contrary to popular opinion, the electric meter is the acme of accuracy. It is not the product of the machinist or of the blacksmith, but rather of the jeweler, or watchmaker.

The bearings set in diamonds, the gears made to an accuracy of a thousandth of an inch, the mechanism thoroughly calibrated before leaving the factory, it records the slightest amount of current used. With the snap of the switch controlling the electric light the meter dial commences to revolve, and instantly stops when the lamp is switched off.

The meter cannot record unless current is passing through its mechanism. In instances where the meter dial is revolving and there are no lights burning or current being used in appliances, it may be taken for granted that there is a leak or short circuit of some sort and that the electricity is being wasted, running into the ground.

When this occurs the electrician should be notified, who will investigate and stop the leak.

One trait of the meter, as has been demonstated by unbiased tests made, is that they are more likely to run slow than fast, due principally to the increased friction of the bearings, which comes with age. These reports show that where one meter is running fast there are ten which are running slow.

The World's Deepest Lake.

In Lake Baikal, in Asia, the extraordinary depth of more than 5,600 feet has been reached, making this by far the deepest fresh water known.

It now appears that Lake Tanganyika, in Africa, may approach this depth, as Captain Jacobs of the German navy has reported a sounding of 4,190 feet, and a Belgian officer claims to have penetrated still lower. Tanganyika's deepest bottom is at least 1,600 feet below the sea level.

A Bitter Disappointment.

"When I was in Paris," remarked the collector of curios, "I discovered in a bookstall a volume which I knew at first glance to be of extraordinary value. I could scarcely believe my good luck. Breathless, I inquired the price of the dealer. Just think of it! I could have had that treasure for a song!"

"Well, why didn't you get it?"

"Never could sing a note in my life," cried the collector, bursting into tears.

Japan's Goldfish.

An old goldfish breeding station in the outskirts of Tokio, Japan, has a pond area of 44,000 square feet and an annual output of about 600,000 goldfish, in addition to which golden carp and common carp are grown. Ten persons are employed in the branches of the work, and six varieties of fish are handled.

OFFICERS REPULSED BY ORIENTALS ON STEAMER

Twenty Persons of Big Party of Vancouver Constables Are More or Less Seriously Injured When Rejected Immigrants on Komagata Maru Bombard Them With Coal and Other Missiles.

VANCOUVER, B.C., July 20. — A large body of Vancouver police and a contingent of special immigration constables, numbering nearly 200 men, descended early yesterday morning in the tug Sea Lion upon the Komagata Maru, and after grappling her and playing a hose on the infuriated Hindus, were beaten back by showers of coal and other missiles. Many of the attacked were injured, some seriously.

Such was the result of an unsuccessful attempt in the midnight hours to rid the harbor of the Japanese steamer and her unwelcome passengers, whose application for entry into British Columbia has been refused by the Court of Appeals.

A day or two ago the Canadian Government decided, as an act of mercy, to prvision the Komagata Maru for her voyage back to the Orient at a cost of $6,000. Plans were carefully matured by Malcolm Reid, superintendent of the Immigration Department here; H. H. Stevens, M.P., and W. H. R. Ladner, with the result that at 1.15 in the morning everything was in readiness.

A large quantity of provisions were on the tug, together with 125 city policemen, under Chief McLennan, and upwards of 50 special constables under Captain Warden. The scene as the Sea Lion pulled away from the Canadian Pacific Railway Pier "A" was full of confidence and even hilarity. The policemen had revolvers, and the special men rifles. The Sea Lion slowly steamed out to the Japanese steamer, which lies only a quarter of a mile off shore, opposite the immigration headquarters. Upon arriving within hailing distance of the vessel it was seen that every inch of space along the rail and on the deck and bridge was occupied by a Hindu, armed with a club or other weapon, while in the bow of the steamer a solid mass were congregated.

Back and forth and along the Hindus a hose was played, with, as first, astonishing results. Beaten back by the seething water they retreated in every direction and for the moment it seemed as though the civic forces had commenced a victorious action.

Only for a moment, however, the next moment a most startling change occurred. Rallying, a number of Hindus faced the stream and dashed in a shower of missiles upon the attacking party. This was followed by a tremendous storm of lumps of coal, which in a couple of minutes had completely upset the order which had reigned aboard the Sea Lion. The crowded mass of men upon the deck of the tug were absolutely at the mercy of the Hindus, and the latter were now the attacking party. For a few minutes the air seemed full of coal, pieces of wood, fire bricks and pieces of iron from what is believed the wreckage of the engine room.

Quite a number of men fell, stretched out by blows on the head and in the crowding to that side of the tug farthest away from the Japanese steamer detective, McArthur, was forced overboard.

Chief of Police McLennan was badly bruised. Inspector Scott was knocked unconscious from a blow from a brick. Police Constable McCall had two ribs broken and Captain Robertson of the Sea Lion was cut over the eye by flying glass.

Eventually the grappling iron attached to the Maru's rails having been unloosened by some police constable, the Sea Lion, with her injured and angry crowd, slowly moved away from the vessel's side and made her way back to dock.

Sunday afternoon passed peacefully, although many Hindus in a party near the dock were beaten by white men before help arrived. Chief of Police McLennan is watching the situation closely for fear of riots on shore. H. H. Stevens, M.P., said in the afternoon that measures had been taken to effectively bring the Hindus into subjection.

MADE FATAL MISTAKE ON EVE OF HIS MARRIAGE

Bride-to-be Waits in Vain for Prospective Hubby, Who is Now in Jail.

Toronto, July 20.—Two hours after Detective Murray entered the uptown branch of a local automobile firm and placed him under arrest for attempting to purchase an automobile by means of a check for $1,400, for which there was no funds, Earl Philips, aged 20, Gamble Avenue, Todmorden, was to have been married to a respectable young woman in Todmorden. When searched at police headquarters two cents and a marriage license were the sole possessions on his person.

Planned Auto Honeymoon.

According to the police, Philips intended to marry the girl as soon as he had obtained the automobile, and was to tour the Province on his honeymoon.

Another automobile firm, the officers report, was victimised in a similar manner a week ago last Saturday. The second attempt to perpetrate the same trick proved Philips' undoing.

On the first occasion the man hurriedly entered the office of the automobile company after banking hours, and asked to be shown some automobiles. Within a short time he purchased one, and gave in payment a check for $1,800. Before leaving the garage he persuaded one of the chauffeurs, by offering him a fine salary, to leave his work and drive the automobile for him.

Led Chauffeur a Chase.

The garage employee drove Philips about the city for three days, until one afternoon the young man left the car, saying that he would return within a few minutes. The chauffeur waited for some time before he learned that his alleged employer had vanished. The check, in the meantime, was presented at the bank, and was returned to the automobile company marked "no funds." When last Wednesday afternoon the man drove to the garage and handed over the automobile to his former employers they welcomed him, but to his dismay he found his job had been filled and that he was out of work.

Manager Was Suspicious.

Shortly before 1 o'clock on Saturday, Philips entered the branch of the automobile company, and presenting the check for $1,400, stated that he wished to purchase an automobile. The manager looked at the check, and then advised the young man to return within a few minutes. The manager telephoned the bank and was told that the same trick had been played the week previous, and that there were no funds to meet the check.

A call was at once sent to the Police Department. Detective Murray was waiting for young Philips when the latter stepped into the garage, and immediately placed him under arrest.

Feud of Long Standing Breaks Out Once More

The Lindsay Post says a shameful row took place last night at Bobcaygeon, when it is alleged a crowd of Nichols set on two Indians named Whetung. It was an old trouble dating from two years back when the Nichols were bound over to keep the peace for a year after some fishing row with the Indians near Dunsford.

Last night the Whetungs had occasion to go to Bobcaygeon and it is said the Nicholls got one of the Whetungs down. The other Indian managed to keep up, and although he had a hard time of it he administered a certain amount of punishment to his persecutors.

It is said that some of the officials stood by and watched the assault on the Indians without ordering it stopped or making arrests.

The liquor business employs 152,000 persons in New York State.

TRAINS TO FLY BY ELECTRICITY

Inventor Shows Model Which May Revolutionize Transportation.

Much interest is being manifested by engineers and government officials in a "levitated" railway, a working model of which was recently exhibited privately in London. The motive power is electricity, though the application, in a commercial sense at least, is quite new. It has been known for years that certain kinds of currents have a repelling force upon certain metals, and it is this force which Emile Bachelet, the inventor, has made use of.

The model consists of a miniature car weighing some forty pounds, constructed of steel with an aluminum base, resting upon about thirty feet of special track. Beneath the rails are electric coils which, it is explained, when energized by an alternating current, exercise a repelling effect upon the car sufficient to raise la a fraction of an inch above the rails. When thus suspended in the air, the car is drawn along by electromagnets, or solenoids, which span the track in the form of arches, through which the car passes. Although the model is raised above the track, four brushes attached to the car remain in contact with the rails and an overhead grooved rail.

The system is operated by an ordinary switchboard, through which the currents are directed at the will of the operator. The secret of the invention appears to lie in the ability of the operator to cut off or break the wave of electrical energy at precisely the point at which it has greatest force.

Method of Propulsion.

Upon the charging of the electric coils, which are placed at intervals of two feet, the car is driven upward and held poised in the air, due to the repelling force of the electricity upon the aluminum base, and it is pulled or drawn forward by the energizing of the solenoids or arches. When the car has passed halfway through an arch the current is automatically cut off and applied to the next arch. The inventor claims that there is no reason why a car operated in this manner for commercial uses should not be pulled through the air at a rate of at least 300 miles an hour.

The model in operation in the inventor's room is one of a mail or parcels car and not for passengers. He has constructed a passenger car which is raised from the track in the same manner as the one already described, but in actual use he claims that the propelling or pulling force will be furnished by means of a propellor and a motor, as in the case of an aeroplane.

The new system is stated to be simple in construction and practically indestructible, and the maintenance costs would be very small as the cars are without engines, wheels, bearings, gearings, armatures, or commutators, and require no oiling and little repair or adjustment. The distance to be covered would not affect the running. Each car for the mail service can be constructed to hold fifty to 100 pounds of mail, and would resemble a double pointed projectile.

FIVE CARS OF MIXED TRAIN LEFT TRACK NEAR OMEMEE

Train Was Approaching High Bridge When Accident Happened—Passengers Not Injured

Omemee, July 21.—On Monday afternoon as the Port Hope and Lindsay mixed train was approaching Omemee from the south, the rear five cars left the track on the east side. The accident happened between one and two o'clock. The cause of the wreck is problematical. The first of the wrecked cars nearest to the engine, was a tank filled with gasoline, then comes a box car with way freight; these cars are in the water. The third car is an empty steel coal car, the fourth and fifth are the express and passenger coaches. The last three are lined from the water up to the rails; they did not overturn. There were 30 or 40 passengers aboard and not one was injured to any extent. Cans of cream were jostled about and the contents oozed through the car into the river. Had the cars left the track a few rods farther north they would have been on the bridge over the river and the fall would have been somewhat greater and possibly with greater destruction. The passengers were taken up to the Junction and awaited the return of the engine from Lindsay, whither it had gone for coaches. The journey was then continued.

The Lindsay auxiliary was soon at the scene of the wreck, and with the section gangs were working away vigorously, with the expectation of having the passenger coaches on again and the track relaid for traffic by Tuesday.

CRESSMAN CO. NEED MORE SPACE

First Store North to be Added to Premises.

BIG IMPROVEMENTS

To meet the demands of an ever-increasing business, the Cressman Co. Limited will take over the store on the north side of the present quarters, when it is vacated on August 1st by Schneider Bros. This store will give the Cressman Co. a total frontage on George street of some 75 feet, and will afford them the space and means to carry on their gents' furnishing department to greater advantage.

Something new in show windows is to be introduced, and the present gents' furnishing department is to be utilised for that purpose. It will be in the form of an arcade with large windows on each side and a beautifully illuminated dome at the top. This arcade is to extend back some forty feet from the street, and at the rear will be an entrance to the gents' furnishings on one side, and the main store on the other. The idea is something new and original and undoubtedly will greatly improve the appearance of the street, and will give the establishment abundance of window space, totalling, according to the plans, 184 feet and giving three extra large windows, approximating 35 feet each.

In this arrangement, the present departments will be made larger, particularly the furniture and gents' furnishings departments. The floor space of the former will be nearly doubled. The work will be commenced immediately after the first of next month, and completed by September 1st.

DIRECT SEARCH TO AMERICAN SIDE

Still no News of Missing Tamworth Dressmaker

Kingston, Ont., July 21.—Two detectives who were in Kingston, left town yesterday afternoon for Cape Vincent, N.Y., to make enquiries about Blanche Yorke, the missing Tamworth girl. The belief now prevails that she may have crossed the border, but nothing yet is known of her whereabouts. It is the general impression that she was taken away in an automobile and that some people in Tamworth know about it.

Tamworth, July 21. — Searchers for Miss Yorke do not attach any importance to the reported absence of Dr. Robinson, who left this place last Thursday, and has not returned. The doctor is said to be away on private business.

Miss Yorke's state of health was discussed at her home the day following her disappearance, it is said, and she became despondent.

Additional troubles have come upon the Yorke family through Russell Yorke, a cousin of Blanche Yorke, taking horse liniment in mistake for a stimulant on Saturday, and he now is in a critical condition. He was worn out by the search for the girl and endeavored to secure something to tide him over his fatigue. In the next room, but in ignorance of his condition, is his grandmother of 90, who has been confined to her bed for five years with a dislocated hip.

Tamworth is a place of about 650 inhabitants. It is situated in Sheffield Township, in Lennox and Addington County, about 15 miles north of Napanee and 30 miles from Kingston. The country is of a rather lonely nature in that locality and there are several lakes near the village.

WOULD HAVE BROUGHT ABOUT DISASTER

Mr. Overholt from Southern Saskatchewan, a son-in-law of Mr. Amos Green, Auburn Street, says that the condition of things in the West is such as to shew that reciprocity and free wheat would have meant certain disaster this year to the West. The crop is if anything a little below the average, but the prices are high in Canada, whereas the crop in the United States is much above the average and prices are correspondingly low. This means that prices in Canada would have to fall considerably and that a poor crop would mean ruin to Western Canada.

Quebec Showmen Point to Other Amusements

QUEBEC, July 21.—Two of Quebec's playhouses opened their doors to the public on Sunday in contravention to the Sunday Act, and yesterday morning Chief of Police Trudel entered action against them. They are the Auditorium and Princess Theatres.

The managers of the two places stated yesterday that they do not intend breaking the law, but that since the city has allowed amusements and a scenic railway to be operated on Sunday without molestation, they feel they have as much right to be tolerated as the Quebec Exhibition, which by the way, is now under the control of a municipal commission.

GREAT CROWDS GATHERED AT BUCKINGHAM PALACE

To Witness Arrival of Party Leaders—Unionists Say Asquith is Instigator of Conference.

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, July 21.— Great crowds gathered outside Buckingham Palace this morning to witness the arrival of the party leaders who are to participate in King George's Home Rule conference. Speaker Lowther, who was the first to arrive, was quickly followed by eight party representatives, all of whom came in motors, except the Marquis of Lansdowne, who came afoot. King George, with his private secretary, met the party in the chamber where the privy council always meets, and shook hands cordially with all, and it was probably the first time Redmond and Dillon had ever exchanged greetings with their sovereign.

After a brief conversation the King withdrew from the meeting about noon, leaving the confreres to their deliberations. The meeting of Liberal and Conservative leaders on such intimate footing was apparently friendly, but could not have been cordial, as Asquith and Bonar Law have been barely on speaking terms, and Lansdowne and Lloyd George are supposed to be bitter personal enemies. A Liberal newspaper today strongly criticies the King for the first time in his reign. The Daily News says "We have only escaped the domination of the House of Lords to discover that aristocracy has equally formidable resources at its command to defeat the will of the country." The Daily Citizen, a Labor organ, says: "The House of Commons and not some private room in the King's palace, is the proper place to debate and settle political differences."

The conference adjourned after a session of one hour and a half to meet again tomorrow.

LONDON, July 21. — There was some extremely heated criticism yesterday in Unionist clubs of the contemplated conference at Buckingham Palace between King George and the leaders of the Liberal, Unionist, Nationalist and Ulsterite parties on the Irish Home Rule Bill. Members of the Unionist party expressed the view that their party again had been out manoeuvered by Premier Asquith and at the moment when through the House of Lords reconstruction of the amendment to the Home Rule Bill, they were in a better position than for a long time.

The initiative for the conference was taken by Premier Asquith and not by King George, according to the Unionists, and the Premier's one, and only object, was to gain time and prevent a provisional government in Ulster being constituted until after Parliament had adjourned, thus avoiding criticism of his followers, and possible defeat on division. If the Premer can carry out this plan, a prominent Unionist said yesterday he probably can safely weather the political storm, until Parliament is dissolved in its natural course in 1915. The Ulsterites which, he said, were running short of money, the organisation of the volunteers having cost a tremendous sum, and the Ulster business men, whose trade had been badly disorganized through the crisis were unable to subscribe any more.

"But he won't succeed," added this Unionist, "Andrew Bonar Law, leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons, has been given to understand that he must brook no delay in the negotiations and he will tell the conferees that the conference must not last more than a week."

Sir Edward Carson, leader of the Ulsteries, took the calling of a conference quite calmly. He told his colleagues that it could make no difference in his attitude.

The Parliamentary Labor party strongly disapproves King George's intervention in a political controversy, even with the laudable object of settling the Irish question, and have asked Premier Asquith to inform the King what they think of his action.

Asquith Announces Conclave.

LONDON, July 21. — Premier Asquith at the opening of the House of Commons yesterday announced that King George "in view of the grave political situation has considered it right to summon a conference of the representatves of the political parties, both British and Irish, to discuss the outstanding points of the problem of Irish Government."

The Premier added that the Rt Hon. James Lowther, Speaker of the House of Commons would, at his Majesty's request, preside over the conferences. In view of this development of the situation, Premier Asquith said he would not ask the House to discuss the bill to amend the Irish Home Rule Bill.

The invitations have been accepted by two representatives each of the regular Opposition, of the Ulster Unionists, of the Irish Nationalists and of the Government. Premier Asquith said he hoped the meetings of the conference would begin to-day.

Andrew Bonar Law, leader of the Opposition, on its behalf remarked that it had "loyally accepted the command" of His Majesty.

John Redmond, leader of the Irish Nationalists, scarcely appeared to regard the proposed conference as attractive. He said: "My colleagues and myself take no responsibility for the policy of calling this convention and I do not think I am called upon to express an opinion as to whether the result will prove useful or the contrary. The invitation came to John Dillon and myself in the form of a command from the King, and as such we at once obeyed it."

Are Hopeful at Dublin.

DUBLIN, July 21.—The prospects of the conference on Irish Home Rule between the party leaders in London is regarded hopefully here. It is thought the King's influence will cause both sides sufficiently to moderate their claims as to bring about an acceptable compromise.

HUERTA IS OFF

Ex-Dictator and Party Leave for Jamaica

PUERTO MEXICO, July 21.—The German cruiser Dresden, with former President Huerta and his family and former War Minister Blanquet, Senora Blanquet and their daughter aboard, sailed at 7.30 o'clock last evening for Jamaica.

The departure of the former President was without incident, there not being even any shouts of "good-bye" to him from the deck.

Gen. Huerta yesterday shrugged his shoulders and smiled contemptuously at the idea that the force of Constitutionalists, known to be a short distance from here, would dare to attack this city.

The military companions of the fugitive former dictator, however, did not display the same degree of confidence and an extended line of outposts was maintained.

Huerta continued to pass most of his time in the railroad car in which he arrived from Mexico City. Since his arrival here he has not taken an hour's exercise.

BLOW UP COURT

Suffragettes Threaten Judge When Committed

LONDON, July 21. — "The next bomb I explode will be in the police court and I hope it will be this one."

This was the parting shot at the magistrate at Westminster by Annie Bell, the militant suffragette, as he committed her for trial yesterday on the double charge of attempting to destroy on May 20 the Metropolitan Temple in South London and on July 12 the old Church of St. John the Evangelist.

Miss Bell enlivened the sitting of the court by singing the "Marseillaise" and shouting and struggling with the court attendants. She chaffed the magistrate on the futility of sending her to prison, saying: "If I have been there ten times I have never served my sentence."

She added: "The blowing up of a church does not count, even if it is blown out of creation."

BUSINESS IN PARCEL POST INCREASING

New System is Successfully Filling Its Mission

Ottawa, July 21.—No special check is being kept by the postoffice department upon the revenues from the parcel post, but the inspectors report that the volume of traffic is steadily increasing and that the system is working very satisfactorily. It was inaugurated in February with a five-pound limit at the start, but this limitation was soon removed and parcels accepted up to 11 pounds. The parcel post system is naturally being patronized more extensively in the cities than in the rural parts, where it is yet an innovation, and, while no statistics are being tabulated, it appears to be paying its way and successfully filling the mission for which it was created. The general postal revenues this year are understood to be running somewhat behind those of last year.

SLAYER OF EDITOR WEEPS BITTERLY WHEN ARRAIGNED

Mme. CAILLAUX IN THE DOCK

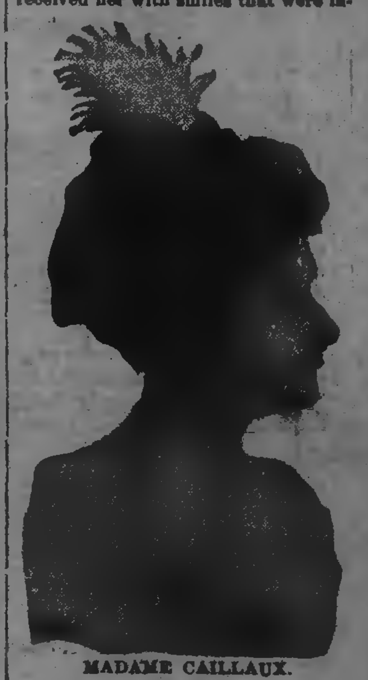
Her Life After Marrying Politician Was Poisoned by Calumnies in Which Figaro Played an Aggressive Part.

Says She Lost Her Head After Reading Calmette's Attacks on Husband.

PARIS, July 21.—Mme. Caillaux, the wife of Jose Caillaux, once Premier of France, and former Minister of Finance, occupied the prisoners' enclosure in the assize court of justice yesterday and recited in a dramatic manner the circumstances leading up to the shooting of Gaston Calmette, editor of The Figaro, with whose murder, on March 16, she is charged.

When the court clerk, reading the indictment, reached the words "wilful murder," she began to weep. Shaking with sobs, she placed a handkerchief over her face.

She said, when questioned by Judge Albanel, that she was married to Leo Claretie at 19, and they had two daughters, one of whom died, and the other is 19. She obtained a divorce in 1908. She was married to M. Caillaux, who was then Premier. "I found complete happiness, but my life began to be poisoned by calumnies." The campaign of The Figaro against her husband then began and all the people in the salons received her with smiles that were intended to wound her. One person said behind her that her husband had taken money from Germany to cede the Congo. These slanderous rumors penetrated every part of society. She was forced to leave the gallery of the Chamber of Deputies owing to being the object of unpleasant attention. Painful incidents took place with her acquaintances when she went shopping, and even when at home.



MADAME CAILLAUX.

"The attacks of The Figaro," she said, "were implacable. They had nothing to do with politics. They were personal. I suffered. I lost my head."

The attacks of The Figaro, she said, had nothing to do with politics, because they were personal attacks on her husband. She read all the articles of Gaston Calmette against M. Caillaux, and said: "Oh, my poor husband! He was recklessly accused."

She explained that the "My Joe" letter formed one of a trilogy which her husband's first wife had purloined to make use of against him. These letters were a sort of biography of M. Caillaux, and he referred to them to his meeting of the prisoner, his happiness, and his desire for freedom from his first wife. One letter explained to her that Caillaux had made an advantageous investment.

Witness denied that she was the cause of the divorce of her husband from his first wife.

COMMITTEES FOR THE LABOR DAY CELEBRATION

The committee appointed by the Trades and Labor Council to deal with the arrangements for the Labor Day celebration met last night in the Labor Hall. Mr. J. J. Hartley was elected chairman of the General Committee; Mr. Charles Hammacott, secretary, and Mr. F. Kite treasurer.

The following were appointed to the Sports Committee, with power to add to their numbers: Messrs. Robertson, Gainey, Browne, Sharp, Ahearn, Cotton, Duggan, Miller and Carroll.

The various sub-committees were appointed, and this year's celebration promises to be the best ever.

It was decided that the General Committee meet every Monday evening until Labor Day.

KING MAY NOT ASSENT

London News Writer Forecasts Startling Denouement

LONDON, July 21. — (C. A. P. Cable.)—"The King intends to withhold his assent to the Home Rule bill unless the amending bill is presented along with it," says A. P. Nicholson in The Daily News to-day. He says that it may seem incredible to Liberals that the King should refuse to sign the Home Rule Bill despite the advice of his Ministry, but the explanation apparently is this:

The view, expressed in court circles, is first, that the Government has violated the Parliament act procedure in the third session by the introduction of the amending bill to a bill designed to pass unchanged under the Parliament Act, secondly, that since the Parliament Act procedure has not, as it is suggested, been complied with, the King is not bound by the provisions of the Parliament Act in the case of the Home Rule Bill.

Regarded from a constitutional point of view this is a very serious situation, since it would bring the King into direct conflict with the democracy. A feeling of dislike to the conference was expressed very strongly by many Liberal back-benchers last night. Unionists, too, of different shades of opinion, pronounced unfavorably upon it.

There are, however, many Unionist members who do not take a hostile view of the conference because they hope it will lead to a settlement although they do not see how the leaders who will enter the conference room with their hands tied can arrive at a settlement.

FLEET REVIEWED

His Majesty Leads Ships Out to Sea

PORTSMOUTH, Eng., July 21.—The British home fleet, composed of over 200 fighting ships and an equal number of auxiliaries, including submarines, torpedo boat destroyers and seaplanes, was led out to sea by King George yesterday morning. His Majesty was on board the royal yacht, accompanied by the Prince of Wales, Winston Churchill and the other Lords of the Admiralty.

At the entrance to the English Channel the royal yacht dropped anchor and the ships in line abreast passed in review before his Majesty, while a fleet of seaplanes from the Calshot airship station flew in pairs above the royal yacht and circled about the slowly moving ships. It took the great fleet two hours to pass before the King.

Escapes From Insane Asylum And Takes Himself a New Wife

Chicago, Ill., July 21. — Harold Fabyan Hoops is still rocking the boat.

He took a day off from the State Asylum for the Insane at Elgin, where he has been since last December, and ran over to Chicago and took unto himself a wife. Of course he has another wife, who has been striving desperately for a divorce, but then Harold never did stop for conventions.

He came to Chicago with Dr. O. Hogan, from the asylum, and went out to see his millionaire father, Wm. H. Hoops. He borowed $25.00 from his father and hurried down town to buy a suit of clothes.

On Jackson Boulevard he stopped before a scene of beauty. It was Hortense Carson, tall brunette.

"I'm a young doctor from Elgin," said Hoops to the girl. "I've got a dandy practice out there and am making loads of coin. What I want, though, is a wife, just about your size. What do you say?"

"What do I say?" cried the girl, joyously. "Let's have it over with right away."

The pair were married by Judge Burke. In getting a license, Hoops denied his identity or that insanity existed in his family.

Then Harold took his new-found bride to a hotel and gave a dinner. It was a jolly party. Harold left in the midst of it.

"I've got to cut over to the Annex and get a cheque cashed," he explained.

He went out to his father's home at 4105 Drexel Boulevard.

"Say, you'd better get back to Elgin," his father told him.

And an hour later the bridegroom was on his way back to the asylum, where he is a patient.

MR. MONK'S CRITICISM OF POLITICS.

THE PUBLICITY that has been given to a letter of the late Hon. F. D. Monk, in which Mr. Monk said that "public life in Canada is rotten and over-run with gang rule," calls for some comment. In the first place, the statement should not be taken too literally, should not be torn from its context, but considered with regard to prevailing circumstances.

Mr. Monk was a political idealist and a man of very sensitive honour. He was a kind of man needed in politics, and in business as well — a kind all too scarce in the life of today. But what appears so bad to men like the late Hon. F. D. Monk is measured by a standard that is their own. To be sure, it is a high standard, one capable of trying to realize a modern Plantonic Republic. It shuns politics as they exist and longs for the Utopian. The practical politician who sees things as they are, and tries to make the best of them will, usually, accomplish more for his age than the dreamer of Utopian commonwealths. The idealist and the practical man are both needed in Canadian life, but when the former says that it is rotten, he means it is bad, judged by a measure applicable to an age many years distant in the future. That Canadian political life, judged by its standing with that of other countries, like the United States, is freer from impurity than it ever was before, is probably due to the idealism of a few men, of which Mr. Monk was an outstanding figure.

People should not forget that the history of parliamentary government shows it has vastly improved, that it has changed its ethical standards in harmony with changes in the moral standards of the people in general. Thus it was considered quite legitimate at one time for a member to sell his vote, and in the social life of that age a man was not a gentleman until he could swear good round oaths, drink so many bottles, and possibly supported a mistress. Political life is only a part of the national life or of society, and to condemn the part is to condemn the whole. Public life needs reproof; it is by no means as good as it might be, but the progress it has to its credit should not be swallowed up in a draught of idealistic pessimism.

THE ARMY WORM.

AN ACCOUNT of the ravages of the army worm appears in some Western Ontario papers. These army worms are caterpillars about an inch and a half long, with horizontal stripes on the sides.

They have broken out in vast numbers in Brant County, and were not recognized until they had done a great deal of damage cleaning off pasture fields and cutting down corn, oats, timothy and nearly all green things in their path. Wherever there was a creek, wherever there was low-lying land on which water had accumulated, wherever there was a marsh, there the worms were present by the billions. They have already done a great deal of damage to the pasture and are now up in the higher lands. The younger farmers in the district did not know what was the matter, for there has been no pest from the army worm for the past sixty years.

Some of the dairymen had commented on the fact that their cows were giving a can of milk less every day. They thought this serious in the case of large herds, and not knowing any other cause than that the pasture must be failing, they went out to see it. It was then that they found that the army worms had practically cleaned out the pastures, and the cows could not get the feed necessary. The worms having cleaned the pastures out, started into the higher land and the grasses. They swept a field of three-foot corn as clean as if the field had been summer fallowed. They have also gone through the oats, but do not seem to have touched the clover, wheat, or rye, the raspberries, or strawberries, or the potatoes. However, if they once clean the others, they will undoubtedly go for the latter, and the damage will be enormous. Another report says these worms have also broken out in Oxford County and caused much damage.

While we have heard no reports in this district of army worm depredations, it would be well for the farmers to keep a sharp lookout around the breeding places where this terrible pest arises. If it once gets even a small start, it will prove expensive to many farmers and ruinous to many a fine field.

STORY OF A BIG BUSINESS.

ABOUT THIRTY-FIVE YEARS ago two men, an employer and an employee, rented a room in the little town of Huntingdon, Pa., and began the business of making machinery. The other day the firm gave out a contract by which the plant will have three and a half acres of floor space, making it one of the biggest industries of its kind. The original employer, after having brought the enterprise to assured success, was succeeded by the original employee, now the head of an industry in which there is as much co-operation and contentment to the square foot as can probably be found anywhere else in the industrial world. Team work as between employer and employed, taste and refinement in the environment of the workers, and a loyalty on the part of the customers and the community —these give this instance of big business as to what is being done in the anti-trust line of legislation. This country wants more than anything else such industries that build up communities and do not need a hundred thousand dollar lawyer to keep their officers and directors out of jail.

THE SOOTFALL OF PITTSBURG.

AS DETERMINED from careful measurements during the past year, the sootfall of Pittsburg ranges from 595 to 1,950 tons per square mile per annum. The destructive possibilities of this immense deposit may be illustrated by stating that if an equal amount of lampblack were ground with oil so as to form black paint it would cover from 17 to 57 square miles with two coats. Statistics of sootfall at certain places in Great Britain are as follows; Industrial section of Leeds, 529 tons; centre of London, 426 tons; Glasgaw, 830 tons.

ATHLETICS IN THE NATION.

A PEOPLE that crowd to the ringside and the bleachers are not necessarily an athletic people. A nation which produces only a few highly skilled champions is not necessarily an athletic nation, and it is the athletic nation, not the nation producing a few great athletes which must become dominant by reason of the energies of its people. Enthusiasm about persistent "fan" or "rooter" may be an asthmatic skeleton or a physical sluggard, who never walks the length of a city block in the course of a week.

SHIRT WAISTS FOR MEN.

THE KINGSTON STANDARD, following the bent of a Montreal paper, advocates shirt waists for men in hot weather, because women wear them. It says a coat is uncomfortable, but that convention forces men to wear coats. It would throw convention to the dogs and be comfortable at all hazards.

Some way or other we are inclined to favor the idea. At present there is not enough trimming on men's clothes to give bargain sales the necessary gusto. Shirt waists for men might regain some of the masculine frills and furbelows that decorated male attire in the seventeenth century. If men wore shirt waists with insertion at the wrists, open work across the shoulders, and a handsome frill around the neck, wouldn't they be dandies? Why does not our Kingston friend set the pace by originating and wearing a man's shirt waist?

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THOSE THREE TORONTO people under arrest in California were locked up doubtless as soon as the authorities found out that they were from Toronto the Good.

IN AN OTTAWA YARD there is the most remarkable looking wash hanging out on a clothes line that the Capital ever saw. It consists of the bones of a whale. Near by are the fins called by whalers the front feet of the sea monster, and the big vertebral bones are strung together on an iron water pipe. The yard adjoins the building of the Dominion fisheries exhibit. Another interesting exhibit would be those figuring in the T. V. C. scandal.

An Excuse for Militarism.

Montreal Star.

If the Empire were menaced tomorrow morning at any point in the world, Canada would not be represented by a man or a gun in the line of defence—unless the menace came on this continent, in which case the appalling unpreparedness of the Dominion to defend itself would be far more of a handicap on the British campaign, than all our militia, be they ever so brave, could possibly offset. In two words the most vulnerable part of the British frontier is that possessed by Canada. It is absolutely undefended. We are not one of those who urge that this should be changed. We are quite frankly of the opinion that war between Britain and the United States is today an impossibility. But we think it only fair to call attention to this condition in any statement of the case which is to include the fighting power of the Canadian militia.

The Whipping of Children.

London Free Press.

Should children be whipped? The question is answered by the American Humane Education Society with an emphatic "No," despite the declaration of the Wisest of Men that to spare the rod is to spoil the child. The humane educators fail to see that to be free with the rod is to better the child. They have much to back up their view. It is curious that the punishment which we administer to adults only for the most degraded and hideous of crimes is the punishment which in a majority of homes is inflicted upon the children. A revulsion of feeling arises every time we hear of a man being whipped. Nothing is regarded as more degrading. We even have a phrase to express shame when we describe a man as a "whipped dog." Are children proof against the degradation that comes to the adult who is so punished? It does not appear so. Whipping is destructive of self-respect, both to man and child. It provokes bitterness, hatred, and even revenge — in child as in adult. It tends to produce a warping of character. The parental control that is wise and good will cultivate self-respect as well as respect for elders. Where there is that kind of parental influence, the barbarism of the whip is not needed to bring up the child in the way it should go.

OLD MOTHER HUBBARD

By Walt Mason

Old Mother Hubbard, she went to the cupboard, to get her poor dog a bone, but when she got there the cupboard was bare, and so the poor dog got none. Then old Mother Hubbard she sat down and blubber'd, and roasted the scandalous trusts: "They're surely inhuman, to rob a poor woman of even the bones and the crusts. I'll write to the papers and show up their capers, and prove that we need a reform; I'll skin them completely, and do it up neatly, while I am indignant and warm." The old woman's neighbors, who stuck to their labors, had plenty of grub in their flat, they promptly made payment of bonnets and raiment, their bow wows were rolling in fat. But old Mother Hubbard, she idled and rubbered, at suffragist meetings, and-sich, and so she was hollow, with nothing to swallow, while sensible beldames got rich. The wise dames are baking, the johnnie-cake making, they work the old stove till it busts; with ladylike ardor they stock up the larder, and so they can laugh at the trusts.

COURTESY.

IT pays to be courteous, no doubt of it! There's no place in the world that a discourteous person seems ter rightly fit, while a sunny, obligin' person seems to fit any place. Nine outin' ten people who succeed in life, air kindly and courteous; the tenth chap won success by a fluke. You'd find it a hard job to produce a man who had lost anythin' through courtesy, but it's mighty easy to find one who has lost somethin' through lack of it. Right to-day the feller who is goin' to bore through and win things wuth while is the one with the sunny smile and the hand-grip and the wish to be obligin' and courteous.

Respecting His Prejudice.

There was a man in Cleveland who entertained many progressive ideas, and one of these ideas was a prejudice against burial. He wished to be cremated. His weeping widow took the remains to the crematory in due season.

"How do you wish this done?" asked the manager.

"I know nothing about it," sobbed the widow. "I want his last wishes carried out. That's all I know."

"Well, we have the French method, the German method and the very popular Milanese method of cremation. Have you any choice?"

"Oh, please use the German method! My poor husband always hated French and Italian cookery!"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Too Much to Ask.

Little June Marie's mother is very indulgent, but there are times when even she draws the line.

One very hot day, when all nature drooped, a neighbor saw June Marie and her mother toiling along the street under a blazing sun. June Marie was weeping aloud, struggling and holding back, but her mother dragged her firmly on over the road.

"Why, what's the matter with June Marie?" the neighbor asked.

Her mother looked patiently at the neighbor, while the perspiration ran down her glowing face. "She's crying because I wouldn't let her wear her mittens," she said.

SPECIAL CORNER FOR AFTER DINNER READERS

A NEWSPAPER EPISODE

By EVERETT P. CLARKE

Just before the war that led to the evacuation of northern Italy by the Austrians Edward Wharton, a young American newspaper correspondent, went abroad to seek his fortune by practicing the profession he had adopted. There was not enough—at least on the surface—in European affairs to warrant an expenditure by American newspapers in keeping a special correspondent abroad, but Wharton found a position as such on an English newspaper the patrons of which were more directly interested in the continental political complexion of the times.

The young journalist was sent to Vienna, where, possessing those qualifications calculated to make one a social success, he became a favorite in the court circle. He won the good will of the wife of the army officer charged with preparations for the mobilization of troops so far as to be admitted on familiar terms to her home. One day he was left alone in her husband's cabinet and on the desk found spread out a schedule showing the movements of trains intended to carry a large army.

Hastily noting the important features in his memorandum book, he was about to leave the room when the major domo entered.

He found Wharton studying a picture on the wall.

"I beg your pardon, sir," said the servant. "No one is allowed in this room."

"Not allowed here?" said Wharton, looking about him with well affected surprise. "I supposed this was the library."

"It is the general's private cabinet."

Wharton left the room and the house. He dared not let the grass grow under his feet. Should the man who had seen him in the cabinet speak of the matter to the general some means would doubtless be taken to prevent what was exposed on the desk from being revealed. Wharton did not even go to his hotel, making straight for the railway station. He hoped to catch a train for Munich or Nuremberg which would enable him to go west, but unfortunately there was no train leaving in that direction for several hours. But a train was pulling out for Trieste, lying southward, and Wharton, not having time to secure a ticket, got aboard without one. Indeed, he did not know where the train would take him until informed by the guard.

The fugitive's object was to get out of Austria, thinking that once across the border he would be safe. But he had great doubts about escaping—that is, if an effort were made to detain him. Trieste is on the northern extremity of the Adriatic sea and about sixty miles from Venice, in Italy, by either land or water. On reaching the former city Wharton jumped off the train just before it had rolled into the station, realizing that telegrams might be sent in every direction ordering that he be stopped.

Going to a hotel, which he entered by a rear door, he sent to the office to learn how soon and by what route he could go to Venice. He was informed that a boat would leave in an hour. He went down side streets to the landing, looked ahead of him and saw standing at the gangway one of the menservants of the house at which he had purloined his information. He knew at once that the man was there to identify him, though he must have been there for some time or had been sent on a special train ahead of the one on which Wharton had traveled.

Glancing foreward and astern of the boat lying beside the dock, the fugitive looked for an opportunity to get aboard elsewhere than at the gangway. There was but the one entrance, and if he undertook to go aboard except through it he would surely be observed. To go by that route was hopeless.

Wharton retreated and determined to go by land. Of course if he attempted to telegraph his news in Austria he would be arrested, and he did not try such a course. Going to a dealer in hair goods, he bought a wig and beard to represent an old man, then hired a room in an obscure apartment house, where he put them on. Learning that a train left Venice at 10 o'clock at night, he went to the first station at which it stopped and there boarded it, thus escaping any one attempting to prevent his leaving the city.

At the next stop the door of the compartment in which Wharton traveled was thrown open, and a man stepped upon the footboard and examined critically every one in the compartment. Wharton recognized him as a waiter who had often served him at his hotel in Vienna. But the wig and beard saved him, and after satisfying himself that the man required was not there the waiter withdrew, and the train moved on.

This enabled Wharton to enter Italy. The Italians hated the Austrians, and he knew that where he had one enemy to fear he had a hundred friends to help him. He left the station, entered a gondola and was rowed to a hotel. While on the canal he gave 10 francs, besides his fare, to the gondolier and to the latter's astonishment pulled off his beard and wig and dropped them in the water.

Within half an hour Wharton sent a cipher telegram to his paper revealing news of the political situation that astonished all Europe.

As to his right to make use of this information, that is a matter of opinion.

May Lose Other Eye.

KINGSTON, July 21. — Eleven years ago in Toronto Joseph Flynn, aged 28, lost the sight of one eye while shooting off firecrackers. At Gananoque while employed on the new Government dock a piece of stone lodged in the other eye, and at the Hotel Dieu here it is feared he will lose the sight of this eye.

He Knew No Fear.

Prince Metternich was driving in Vienna one day during the congress of 1815 when the horses bolted, the carriage was overturned and Metternich was thrown into the roadway. Finding he had no bones broken he picked himself up and walked quietly away. The same evening he met the King of Naples, who had seen the accident.

"How horribly frightened you must have been," said the King.

"Not at all," answered Metternich. "It is no merit of mine, but I am constitutionally inaccessible to fear."

"It is as I thought," replied the King. "You are a supernatural being."

Early Methods of Curing Skins.

The original process of curing skins was probably the simple one of cleaning and drying them. Removal of the hair by maceration in water seems to have been common among the very early tribes, and one writer has suggested that the idea was obtained from the natural process of depilation. They must certainly have been familiar with it in the case of drowned animals, where maceration can be plainly observed. Following this smoke, sour milk, oil and the brains of the animals themselves were found efficacious. Many of these primitive methods are employed in remote places at the present time.

AREA IS WIDENING.

Scourge of Army Worms Reported From Many Places.

BRANTFORD, July 21.—The army worm has made its presence known by the millions in new sections, one being around Blue Lake, north, where it has wiped out pasture and is now in the crops working devastation; around Mount Pleasant, to the southwest, where it is cleaning up pasture land; on Cockshutt road, to the south, where it has congregated in millions and is doing great damage, and around Paris, especially on the low banks of the Nith, where it is cleaning out pastures.

Several New Outbreaks.

WOODSTOCK, July 21. — Several districts have now been added to the list of those already infected by the dreaded army worm. An outbreak of the worm has developed on the Epileptic Hospital farm on the 12th line in the city limits. The worms have attacked the grass along the barley field and have started on the march into the field.

Word has come from a number of farms in both West and North Oxford that the pest has commenced its ravages in those districts.

Niagara District Feared For.

HAMILTON, Ont., July 21.—Fearing that the army worm which has swept across Western Ontario, will now march through the Niagara district, fruit growers and farmers are greatly alarmed. The parasites have appeared at Waterdown, and yesterday they swooped down on the Hendrie farm and other properties along the Plains road by the millions.

PREMIER AGAIN ON STAND.

Denies That Any But Lumbermen Aided Party Funds.

ST. JOHN, N.B., July 21.—Premier Flemming was again on the stand when the Dugal timber graft inquiry was resumed yesterday afternoon.

The Premier could not recollect any of his colleagues having asked him if the lumbermen were not paying more than their bonus for the renewal of their licenses. It had been reported to him that the Bathurst Lumber Co. were cutting undersized logs and he had referred the matter to Mr. Berry. He denied that the company had maintained their right to do so because they had paid well for the privilege. He said he did not know of any lumbermen claiming special privileges on account of their contributions. In 1913, he had given the Dominion Pulp & Paper Co. the privilege of cutting logs slightly under size to thin out a thicket and improve the growth. He did not know until recently that they had continued this year, and did not know that they protested that they had paid dearly for the privilege. He denied that fishermen or liquor men contributed to party funds.

To Dig Up Their Past.

MONTREAL, July 21. — Twenty-five pictures of each of the ten men arrested in an alleged fake poolroom on Dorchester street last Friday night are being sent out by the police department to the chief cities of the continent with a view to finding out something about the suspects.

FOR HOUSEWIVES

TO WHITEN LINEN.

Table linen, towels and other linens that have become yellow with age or through other reasons may be made beautifully white by boiling in a lather made of one pound of white soap to one gallon of milk, says the Memphis News Scimitar. After boiling rinse in two waters and add bluing to the last water. A teaspoonful of peroxide of hydrogen to a gallon of water is also a good whitener and safe to use.

WORTH KNOWING.

Net veil, either black or white, can be made to look quite new by a very simple process. Half fill a small bowl with alcohol, and dip the veil up and down in it till the dust is well out. After the veil is clean, remove it and squeeze out the fluid and dry quickly by swinging it back and forth shaking it gently in the air. It will be dry and crisp as new in a few moments.

Black velvet or silk hats can be wonderfully freshened by rubbing the entire surface with a small piece of black velvet dipped in olive oil. A few drops of oil are sufficient.

The next time your silk glove is found wrong-side out, don't waste any time pulling and picking at it. Put it on as you find it, then curl the thumb and fingers slightly inward and remove the glove by taking hold of the top of the wrist and pulling it firmly, but gently over the hand and fingers. It takes but an instant to have your glove right-side out again; and it is a great saving on the glove.

Strengthening the Eyes.

An eye wash that will be found very helpful for weak eyes is the following: Take pure boric acid, one teaspoonful; camphor water, fifteen drops; boiling water, two-thirds of a cupful. If your eyes are in need of an oculist's attention it is advisable for you to consult one before the trouble grows worse and harder to cure. Do not read when your eyes burn and smart.

Banishing Warts.

Warts, so it is claimed, may be removed with an eradicator which is made of the following ingredients: Sublimed sulphur, 120 grains; glycerin, 5 fluid drams; acetic acid, 1 fluid dram. Apply repeatedly to each wart, continuing the treatment for several days. The warts dry up and then drop off.

Don't have a lamp in the drawing room unless it is to be used, and in any case avoid fragile chiffon trimmed or gathered silk shades, which harbor dust.

MONTREAL, July 21. — Detective Charette, who shot Melvin G. Cowie, real estate dealer, 2,050 Park avenue, through the foot by mistake for a burglar while Mr. Cowie was standing in his own yard on the night of July 13, has been suspended for an indefinite period, pending an investigation by the police authorities.

CORPS OF ONE THOUSAND MEN TO GO ON RAINBOW; HINDUS MUST GIVE IN Every Effort is Being Made First to Persuade the Would-be Immigrants on Board the Komagata Maru to go Peaceably.

Canadian Press Despatch.

Vancouver, B. C., July 21. — At nine forty-five this morning the Hindus aboard the Komagata Maru were given the ultimatum of allowing them until noon to decide whether they would surrender or fight.

VANCOUVER, B.C., July 21.—Upwards of a thousand men, comprising the sixth regiment, Duke of Connaught's Own Rifles, and the newly formed Irish Fusiliers, were called out last night by a special order signed by Col. Duff-Stewart and Col. George C. McSpadden. More than a thousand men should be on the Rainbow when the cruiser goes out to-day to take possession of the Komagata Maru. Unless the Hindus suffer a violent change of mind, they will show a stubborn resistance and a bloody fight may result.

Japanese Consul Hori received cabled instructions from his Government yesterday morning to see that the Japanese crew of the Komagata Maru was not mixed up in any battle. To this end the whole Japanese crew was last evening taken off the ship, and will remain off until such time as the Rainbow bluejackets have the matter under control. Gardner Johnson, agent for the owners, and Sir Charles H. Tupper, counsel for the owners, had a mid-day conference, and the lawyer had addressed another letter to the Hindu committee of the Komagata Maru, pointing out that the ship has all the water she needs, and assuring them that plenty of provisions will be put on board for the trip across the Pacific. The letter goes on to point out the fact that the Hndus will have to return, and that, therefore, they might as well go peaceably.

The Hindus are not preparing for peace, however; they are preparing for war. To-day the forward and aft well decks on the vessel are short wooden barricades, backed up with coal, and it looks as if they are prepared to make a vigorous defence.

With a message from the Governor-General, H. H. Stevens, M.P., and Immigration Inspector Hopkinson, with a party, went out to the ship at one o'clock yesterday afternoon. The wire was from the Duke of Connaught to the Hindu passengers on board the steamer.

No one appears to know just what was contained in the message to the passengers on the Komataga Maru in reply to their message of a day or two ago, but it is quite definite that it was nothing definitely satisfactory to the passengers. The probability suggested is that the Governor-General simply said that the question was being taken up by the Departments concerned. This at all events would seem to be the reply which might be expected.

Mr. Hopkinson had quite an interesting conversation with Geldit Singh yesterday. Geldit Singh is Gurdit's secretary and no doubt officially represented the passengers on the boat at the conference with the immigration man. Mr. Hopkinson talked on the Maru itself, apparently having no fear the Hindus, although made the object of such a deadly attack during the night affray.

Geldit stood beside him and Mr. Stevens on the immigration launch, gave advice to Mr. Hopkinson, when the latter reported on the terms desired by the Hindus. Geldit opened fire with the proposition just as the message was received from Mr. Hopkinson. He said that the passengers were willing to leave if the provisions were put aboard at once; if medical attention was furnished for those injured in the night fight, and if they were given a chance to hold a talk first with some of the Hindus on shore in order to say good-bye to them and to ask forgiveness for all the trouble which they had caused.

Mr. Hopkinson came back with a counter proposition. He said that if the Hindus allowed the Japanese crew to get up steam, and agreed in writing to permit the boat to weigh anchor and proceed to sea five hours after steam was up, the immigration people would start putting the $6,000 worth of provisions on board. Arrangements would also be made to permit the secretary of the Sikh Temple and Rham Singh, one of the alleged charterers of the Maru, to go on board and talk to the passengers. Mr. Hopkinson demanded to see some of the Hindus said to have been hurt the other night, but Geldit Singh did not care to produce them.

Geldit further refused to agree to the suggestions and said that the provisions would have to be put on board at once.

This was so manifestly unfair that, after Mr. Stevens and Mr. Hopkinson consulted for a minute or two, they unhesitatingly refused, saying that an agreement in writing would have to be made, and before any provisions would be put on steam must be up. They pointed out that if the provisions were put on board now from the Sea Lion, the Hindus, with their 400 tons of water and $6,000 worth of food, could take life easy and laugh at the immigration officials. "Then you can send thousands of soldiers with us if you wish," declared Geldit Singh, dramatically. "We would sooner die here than go to sea, unless we get provisions right now. See our shore friends and have our sick attended to."

The conference ended right there.

Street Railway Men to Strike.

EDMONTON, Alta., July 21.—Edmonton street railway employes at a secret mass meeting, decided by a large majority to go out on strike. No date has been fixed. The trouble has arisen over the question of seniority, the employes desiring promotion according to length of service. This the authorities have refused up to the present time to recognize.

Great Shooting.

Smith and Jones were walking along the boulevard one afternoon when Brown was incidentally mentioned in the conversation.

"Speaking of Brown," thoughtfully remarked Jones, "I understand he is something of a shot."

"He is a wonder," was the prompt rejoinder of Smith. "We were out in a field practicing one day when he hit the bullseye at the first shot."

"Fine for Brown!" commendingly returned Jones. "Tickled him almost to death, I suppose?"

"Don't you believe it!" answered Smith. "He had to pay for the bull."

HERON AND WHITE ARE FOUND GUILTY OF THEFT

Money Was Taken From John Byne, Who Was Enticed Into Stable

George Heron and John White, the two strangers who figured prominently in Saturday night's fight and robbery in an outbuilding of the American Hotel, appeared before Magistrate Dumble this morning. They pleaded not guilty and after summary trial were found guilty.

Judgment was reserved for one week.

John Byrne, the complainant, said he was a lumberman. He left the Cavendish Lumber Company last week with over $50 on his person. On his arrival here he stayed at the American Hotel. The smaller man, Heron, asked him for a couple of dollars. He gave him the money. The other asked, but he refused to give him any.

"Where did you have the money?" asked Mr. Wearing.

"In a bag, my pocket, and several places," answered the witness.

They didn't have anything to drink and all went up into the hayloft to go to sleep. After that, in some strange manner, he lost all knowledge of anything. He missed the money when he found himself with the detectives.

"Where did you go?" asked the magistrate.

"I didn't go any place." Witness said he wouldn't recognize the men if he saw them, but after a careful inspection he finally recognized Heron and White.

Detective Newhall stated that in consequence of information, Detective Meagher and he went to the American House. White went into the stable, and they followed. White seemed flustered. They asked him what he had in the stall, and he replied, "Nothing." He denied the presence of Byne in the stable. When they were searching the first floor they heard scuffling in the loft, and a cry. Detective Meagher then climbed into the loft and found the old man and Heron. On going to assist Meagher, he found him struggling with Heron, during which he was bitten on the thumb.

Heron claimed the money found on him was his own money. Afterwards he admitted that he was broke, as he hadn't been working, but that he was strictly honest.

Detective Meagher corroborated the former witness's evidence.

Came From Port Hope.

Heron, in the box, claimed he came from Port Hope. He told of meeting the old man and giving him a coat to put on. He was without a coat. He admitted asking for some change, Byne handing him a $2-bill. He then called White and asked him to take care of the old man. After a few minutes' conversation the old man gave White his money to keep for him. The old man had been drinking. He and the old man went to the loft to sleep. He knew no more until disturbed by the detectives. At first he didn't know who it was, and naturally put up some resistance. He never had $5, said to have been found in his hand, or the bag containing the money. He was a good sleeper, as he had a good conscience. He admitted being arrested before for being drunk. He admitted coming here last Wednesday, and had but fifty cents. He couldn't account for the loss of the old man's money.

White admitted that they had had part of a bottle of whiskey. He couldn't account for the disappearance of the money.

NOT A VAG BUT 'LISTER'S FRIEND

Mike Larone Goes to the Hill for Thirty Days

Mike Larone, charged with vagrancy at this morning's session of Police Court, sprung a surprise when he denied being a vag, but stated that he would plead guilty to a previous charge against him, that of supplying a blacklister with liquor. The court took back the vag charge and Mike was fined $25 forthwith or thirty days in jail. He accepted the thirty days, being without funds.

Bound Over to Keep the Peace

John Coros, a local Greek, charged with assaulting his wife, was bound over to keep the peace at $500. The wife, questioned by Mr. Widdifield, counsel for the husband, admitted that she was sorry she had laid the information against her husband. She had been angry and had laid the information during a passion. The trouble arose over the payment of some bills and her husband, Coros, lost his temper and slapped her.

She was quite willing to return home with her husband.

"Any man who beats his wife who is just out of bed a few days, must take all the punishment I can give him as long as I am Magistrate here," said his Worship.

C.P.R. OFFICE IS ROBBED

Safe Taken From Office at Lindsay

HAND CAR USED

Gang Made Away With About $150

About four o'clock this morning yeggmen executed one of the most open faced and daring acts that has ever been performed in this section of the province. A gang, the number is unknown, entered the ticket department of the C.P.R. depot at Lindsay, and made a get away with safe and all. They secured entrance via the waiting room and tried the safe.

The door was too small to permit the safe to pass, so the sides of the door were chopped out sufficiently and the strong box placed on a hand car. It was conveyed along the Bobcaygeon track a mile or so and dumped off into the ditch. The men at first drilled holes along the top of the door, but evidently changed their minds for there was no trace of the use of explosives. An axe was used to burst the hinges and the door in that way was opened.

A section man coming to work this morning noticed two men shoving a hand car along the track but thought no more of it until the operator opened the depot and made known the loss. No clue was left whatever, but it is thought that it is the work of the same gang who visited Campbellford a few nights ago. In all it is estimated that they secured only $150.00 for their trouble. The exact amount was not known by the operator, as it is customary to count up one day's receipts the following afternoon.

The depot is not included on the beat of the night policeman, and as there are no trains and no night operator, the men had everything in their own hands, with no chance of being disturbed.

A Ploughmen's Association for West Peterboro

West Peterborough is to have a Ploughmen's Association that will rival both in size and interest the big associations that hold their annual ploughing matches in Western Ontario. This is the decision of the representative famers who met in Peterboro on Saturday last, and were unanimous in the forming of such an association.

The following will be the officers for the coming year:

President—J. H. Garbutt, R.R. No. 4, Peterboro.

1st Vice-Pres.—Joshua Smithson, R. R. No. 8, Peterboro.

2nd Vice-Pres.—Alex McGregor, R.R. No. 2, Peterboro.

Sec.-Treas.—Fred Campbell, R.R. No. 3, Peterboro.

Auditor—Wm. Collins, 242 Romaine Street, Peterborough.

Directors—J. W. L. Hatherly, R. R. No. 6; H. B. Cowan; C. E. Moore, R.R. No. 2; E. L. Duffus, 195 Simcoe Street; H. Stubbs, R.R. No. 4; John Henderson, 265 Burnham Street.

Through the holding of annual ploughing matches, the new association aims to interest farmers' sons in becoming first class ploughmen, thereby largely increasing the yield and quality of the field crops. Already the association has a membership of over twenty wide-awake farmers, and everything points to having one of the strongest organizations of its nature in the Province. Full information regarding membership, etc., can be secured from the secretary.

A hot iron held just above the white spot on a polished table will remove it. Polish the place with a little sweet oil.

MAKE BY-LAWS CONFORM WITH THE NEW ACT

Dealing With Expropriation of Local Power Plant

From present indications and from the stand by the Power Committee at their meeting last evening, it looks as if the matter of expropriating the property of the Peterborough Light and Power Company, will reach a climax on Wednesday evening. The committee after considering the draft for bylaws to expropriate and appoint an arbitrator in connection with the Peterborough Light and Power matter, decided to repeal both By-laws and to drfat new ones. The change is made to bring the bylaws under the Act pased for the city at the last session.

On the motion of Mayor Buller and Ald. Duncan, the committee decided that the By-law expropriating the property of the Peterborough Light and Power Committee, also appointing an arbitrator, be repealed and a new by-law prepared by the City Solicitor be passed expropriating the property of the Peterborough Light and Power Company. The matter resulted in a very little discussion, the facts of the matter being conversant to all present.

The letter from the Peterborough Light and Power Company stated that employees of the city had taken their repair waggon without permission and therefore enclosed a bill for same to the extent of $5. The matter will be dealt with by the Committee at their next meeting.

Messrs. Henry Hope and Son wrote the committee stating that before they could get the power turned on they had to pay the Peterborough Light and Power Company for the transformers and stated that they would expect to be re-imbursed by the city. The communication was received.

No action was taken by the committee in regard to the petition from the residents of McGill Street for an extension for lighting purposes.

"They had better go to the North Monaghan Council, we have nothing to do with the matter," was the opinion expressed by both the Mayor and Ald. Duncan.

"What about the street car trolleys smashing our globes o nthe corner of Charlotte Street and George Street?" asked Ald. Johnston, chairman of the committee.

Ald. Duncan stated that he had been informed by officials of the Peterborough Radial Railway Company that this would be stopped at once as they had made alterations with their trolleys.

"Well, I've had Mr. Gordon write them, stating that they were responsible for the damage," remarked the Chairman.

The meeting then adjourned.

FAINTED AND FELL INTO CISTERN

Fatal Accident to Miss Kennedy of Port Hope

(Port Hope Guide.)

The town was shocked yesterday, when it became known of the sad fatality which befell Miss Mary Kennedy.

Miss Kennedy had lived at Judge Benson's for the past fourteen years, and yesterday, after preparing dinner, went out to the backyard. After being absent for a rather unusual length of time, the housemaid went to look for her. The garden and surrounding premises were searched, but without avail, and finally Judge Benson and the neighbors were notified and they assisted in the search. The homes of relatives and houses where Miss Kennedy was accustomed to call were visited, but no person could throw any light upon her disappearance. Continuing the search for more than half an hour, the party noticed the top of the cistern on Judge Benson's property was off, and here the body was found. It is thought that Miss Kennedy was seized with a fainting spell, and from the position of the body, fell headlong into the cistern.

Deceased was a member of the Methodist church, and very highly esteemed by a large circle of friends. Two sisters, Mrs. John Douglas, and Miss Kennedy, of town, and four brothers, Joseph, of Orillia; David, of Parry Sound, and John and Robert, of Cochrane, are left to mourn her loss.

DOMINION ALLIANCE RETARDING TEMPERANCE CAUSE IN ONTARIO

William Munns, Well Known as an Advocate of Provincial Prohibition, Charges That Official Body is Swayed by Partisanship and Witholds Recognition of Good Work of Whitney Government.

(Toronto World.

William Munns of Toronto, who has gained considerable recognition as a temperance campaigner for a period covering many years, has written a letter to The World, in which he clearly charges that the Dominion Alliance has shown more eagerness to oust the Whitney Government than to advance the temperance cause. Mr. Munns lauds the manner in which the Ontario Government has enforced the liquor license law, and expresses the belief that local option is the safe and sane way of dealing with the question. His letter follows :

"Many honest voters in the recent 'banish the bar' campaign refused to march with the Dominion Alliance procession, or to be hoodwinked into supporting the Grit party with the tag or label 'banish the ar' attached. Notwithstanding the declaration by the editor of the Pioneer, that the Alliance was 'non-partisan,' there has been a strong suspicion growing for years that the Alliance was manipulated and existed, not for the purpose of 'banishing the bar and the drink traffic,' but for the purpose of banishing the Whitney Government and the Conservative party. The overwhelming majority and endorsation by the electors of the Province of Ontario in favor of Sir James Whitney and his policy of 'banishing the bar,' and keeping it abolished, fully established beyond a doubt that the sane policy introduced by Sir James Whitney when he came into power in 1904, requiring an endorsation of 60 per cent. of the voters behind local option, in order that the measure should not be repealed as the Duncan Act and Scott Act had been repealed because of the simple majority vote. The recent endorsation at the ballot box demonstrated further that the electors believed the Whitney government 'banish the bar policy,' allowed the electors in each municipality not only to abolish the bar but the liquor shops and clubs as well, as rapidly as public sentiment would measure up with sufficient voting strength to sustain and enforce the measure after once adopted.

The Safest Way.

"The verdict of the people on June 29 clearly approves of the above method, and demonstrates that the safest way to abolish the drink traffic, that we all so much deplore, is by uniting our forces, ministers and laymen, to bring in under local option all the municipalities that evidence their desire by a majority vote in favor of local option. If temperance and social reformers would rise to the occasion and resolutely determine to take the necessary steps to bring into line every municipality that has carried local option in our province by a majority vote : If the temperance men, ministers and laymen, who fought the battle of the referendum in 1902 and won by 66 per cent. vote under the policy of Ross (who strove to polish the bar, instead of abolishing it), surely the Whitney government, which during its term of office has reduced the number of licenses by 1214 under a 60 per cent. vote, and has enforced the law in such a satisfactory manner, will pay serious heed to their demands.

"Accepting the figures in the Pioneer of June 29, the organ of the Dominion Alliance, we find there were 50 attempts to repeal local option by laws in places in which the three-fifths vote was necessary to success, and repeal has been carried only in two of them, proving most conclusively the wisdom and statesmanship of Sir James Whitney, legislating and placing in the statute books of our province laws that the public sentiment will respect, and support. The Liberal party, when in power, made a mockery of the liquor laws. Now, out of power, they are prepared to repeat promises and pledges like their predecessors, who never fulfilled them.

A Pointed Query.

"The question the electors of this province are asking is : 'Does the Dominion Alliance exist for the suppression of the liquor traffic, or does it exist for the suppression of the Conservative party and Sir James Whitney ?'

"Read what The Pioneer says in an editorial, Jan. 2, 1914, headed 'How Local Option Stays,' whitten doubtless by the editor, Mr. F. S. Spence, who was not expecting a provincial temperance campaign. I will give the editorial in full, so as not to be charged with misrepresentation, although I do not support the reasoning against the three-fifths clause which has made local option a permanent measure and given a backbone to temperance legislation :

How Local Option Stays.

"Probably the most satisfactory proof of the success of any measure is its giving general satisfaction to the public and especially to those who are interested in promoting the objects it is intended to attain.

"A striking feature in the history of local option bylaws is the Province of Ontario is that when adopted they are rarely, if ever, repealed. This is not because a three-fifths vote is sometimes required for repeal. There are about a hundred municipalities in which local option bylaws could be repealed by bare majorities, having been carried on the majority plan before the three-fifths requirement came into operation. Moreover, the defeats of repeal movements which have come about during the past three years were not aided by the three-fifths requirements, as in every such contest there was a substantial majority in favor of sustaining the local option bylaw.

"In 1909 there were 97 Ontario municipalities where repeal contests were possible. Barroom advocates were only able to bring on 29 contests, and they were beaten in 27 of these.

"In 1910 there were 111 possible repeal contests. Voting was brought on in only 12 and local option was sustained in 10 of these.

"In 1911 there were 134 possible repeal contests. Repeal bylaws were only voted upon in three municipalities. Local option was sustained in all.

"In 1912 there were 178 possible repeal contests. In 163 municipalities the liquor interests could not muster up strength enough to bring on a contest. Fifteen places voted and all sustained the law.

"Local option satisfies the people who know from practical experience how it works."

Lesson of Peel Contest.

The foregoing figures show conclusively that the electors of June 29 believed in Sir James and his government. One of the most fragrant actions of the Dominion Alliance during the recent campaign was to be found in the County of Peel, where the contest was between Mr. James R. Fallis, Brampton (who was returned by a majority of over six hundred) and A .H. Milner, the Liberal and alliance candidate, who was defeated, notwithstanding that the alliance monopolised the pulpits throughout the county the Sunday previous to the elections. To the credit of St. Paul's Methodist Church, the trustee board absolutely refused to allow Mr. F. S. Spence to occupy the pulpit on Sunday: possibly they got some "inside information." Perhaps Mr. Spence forgot the certificate of character which the alliance gave to Mr. A. H. Milner in the by-election of 1913. Mr. Milner, the alliance candidate, admitted upon the platform that he was not personally an abstainer and that he had voted against local option, and had a few months previously signed a recommendation for a license in the Town of Brampton, while Mr. Fallis, the Conservative candidate, was a total abstainer and an active local optionist. Was the alliance out in Peel to smite the "rum demon?" No, to smite James R. Fallis, the total abstainer, and Sir James Whitney's Government, that refuses to be led by the Liberal party's donkey engine and 'banish the bar' cry.

What About Campaign Funds.

Temperance men in the Conservative party have been led in the past to believe that the Dominion Alliance was supposedly non-partian, but for the past ten years—since the Whitney Government came into power—the alliance has shown scant courtesy to Sir James' honest effort to banish the drink traffic through the adoption of local option. The strong amendment making local option workable is treated with indifference. The Pioneer is used as a campaign sheet to slander the honest enforcement and administration of the Whitney Government. More money has been received and contributed to the alliance during the Whitney administration than during any previous government, showing that temperance is a live issue and that people have confidence in the honest endeavor of Sir James to banish the drink traffic in our province by local option methods, and majorities that prevent the repeal once a municipality adopts the law.

Sinews of War.

It is instructive to observe the advance in contributions to the Alliance under Sir James Whitney's three-fifths adoption:

Year	Subscription to Alliance
1907	$14,394.85
1908	19,506.00
1909	31,996.14
1910	51,242.58
1911	55,484.35
1912	72,209.65
1913	84,115.45

Now that the funds of the Dominion Alliance are being used for "campaign purposes," to defeat the Whitney administration, it is time for temperance and moral reformers in the Conservative party to cry a halt and refuse to support an organization and keep in office a paid staff and official organ for the advancement of the Liberal party and the suppression of the Conservative party, whose administration of honest enforcement far excels any record of temperance legislation by any Liberal Government.

It is quite evident by the recent vote that the "Spencerian" movement of using the Alliance and the churches in the interests of the Liberal party, and against Sir James Whitney's "banish the bar and shop policy," was repudiated by the electors at the ballot box, and that a plan whereby every elector can unite independent of party, and banish liquor shop, bar and club regardless of party affiliation, is the only true policy to win this fair province of Ontario for ultimate provincial prohibition.

Cause Is Injured.

The last number of The Pioneer, July 10, declared as follows: "The recent contest is only the start of a great warfare. It is but the preliminary skirmish of a grand campaign that will not cease till the last barroom and liquor shop and drinking club have become things of the past."

The Conservative temperance men are ready for the annihilation of the drink traffic, root and branch, but they reserve the right to say who shall lead the forces to battle and whether they shall march to failure or success. The packed nominating committees of the Ontario branch of the Dominion Alliance in the past has resulted in producing in the minds of many temperance men in both parties a suspicion that has done great injury to the advancement of the cause in our province. If the Dominion Alliance continues to use their funds for providing campaign literature to support the Liberal party then, it is up to the Conservative party at the next meeting of the Alliance to insist on change of the Alliance paid leaders, or have a fair representation on its executive who will see that party politics are eliminated.

Yours for an independent non-political Alliance.

William Munns.

THE SPORTING WORLD

SENATORS BIFFED THEIR WAY THROUGH TWO PETES HURLERS

Blountmen Also Helped With Their Misplays ---Score Was 9 to 3

The "we should worry" clan had a bad time of it at the ball lot yesterday afternoon. The count was 9 to 3, and the gang from Shagville had the better of it. Incidentally, the discoverer of "I am the candy kid" concoction was let loose again, and the rain you noticed to-day is the result. It is the easiest thing in the world to guess that the arrival of the "highest paid player in the Canuck League" started the dewdrops from the waterworks above.

It was a bright idea of the Bordentown pilot to allow him to get the greater part of it out of his system, as the scene would have been horrible had the exhibition presented itself this afternoon with the fair following looking on.

We would respectfully beseech Mr. Rogers, as he is the gent, to forget, and allow the past to be a blank. That being accomplished, the atmosphere might be cleared, the attendance would be larger, the fans would enjoy the game, be it a Waterloo or a victory, and the Riverside populace might give him the glad hand, for, after all, the "general utility" of a twice champions club plays a fairly good game wherever the pay clerk may call him to duty.

As for the afternoon's proceedings, little else need be said. Our Mr. Creswell started out against the invaders, and, after doing well, despite the faltering of his supporters, he fell by the way and took a ride on the derrick. His successor tried to stem the tide, and did fairly well. But it was not to be. His hurlings were biffed here, there, and in other places, much to the satisfaction of the other fellows, but he stayed with the ship and went down with her.

The locals were in the swim while the water was warm, but, sad to relate, cold shivers were distributed along about five o'clock. About this time Mr. Lill, the opposition heaver, sent out the S. O. S. The reply came quickly, and it was all over.

Here's the entire bill:

First Innings

Ottawa — Mitchell, with three and two, singled through second, and made third on Byrne's slow work following Rogers' tap. Shag sacrificed, and both Mitchell and Rogers scored on Kelly's wild throw to third base. Stewart grounded out. Lage singled, but was out on his attempted steal.—Two runs.

Petes — Blount walked, was sacrificed by Welsh, and Rogers caught Dolan's hard drive with one hand. It was great grandstand stuff. Then Rooney gave Rogers one that he didn't cop with both hands. Lage took Byrne's foul.—One run.

Second Innings

Ottawa — Dolan flew to Blount. Nill singled through second. Welsh took Smykal's fly, and Lill was passed. Mitchell doubled, scoring Nill. Rogers flew out to Blount.—One run.

Petes — King sent a fly to Shag. Fox swiped in vain, and Kelly grounded out.—No runs.

Third. Innings.

Ottawa—The crowd cheered when Creswell fanned Shag. Stewart grounded. Lage was safe when Byrne "fell down" on his easy bounder, and Dolan forced Lage. — No runs.

Petes — Cressy walked after two straight strikes were registered, and was sacrificed along by Blount. He scored on Welsh's single, which neither Rogers nor Shag could bget under. Dolan took his namesake's roller for an out, Welsh going to second. A wild pitch sent Welsh to third. Welsh fell asleep on another wild pitch, when he might have scored. Rooney grounded out.—No runs.

Fourth Innings

Ottawa — Nill walked. Smykal singled, and Lill fanned. Mitchell singled, scoring Nill, and Smykal scored on the error by Blount — a wild throw-in. Rogers' single scored Mitchell. Shag singled. Stewart popped to King. Lage grounded out. —Three runs.

Petes — Byrne grounded. King was passed. With three balls on Fox, Rogers came in to pitch, Powers taking left field. Fox drew the pass. King stole third, and came in on Kelly's sacrifice fly. Belting, batting for Creswell, flew out to Powers.—One run.

Fifth Innings.

Ottawa — Dolan walked. Nill singled, the ball bounding away from Blount, allowing Dolan and Nill to score. Fox threw out Smykal and also Powers. Mitchell walked, stole and came home on Rogers' single. Shag flew to King.—Three runs.

Petes — Blount bounced a hit off Rogers' shins, only to be forced at second by Welsh. Dolan shot a single across second. Rooney fanned, and Byrne dropped the ball in Stewart's mit.

Sixth Innings.

Ottawa — Stewart walked. Lage fouled to Kelly. Stewart stole second, but was caught getting into third. Dolan was caught off the bag on a peg from Kelly.—No runs.

Petes — Stewart took King's long fly, and Nill grabbed Fox's pop foul. Rogers "posed," and Kelly collected a double to right. Belting grounded out.—No runs.

Seventh Innings

Ottawa — Nill drew a single. Smykal sacrificed. Powers grounded, and Mitchell went out the same way. —No runs.

Petes — Blount drew a hit on his grounder to Mitchell. Welsh forced him, and Dolan hit into a double.—No runs.

Eighth Innings

Ottawa — Rogers grounded out. Shag also grounded out. Fox took Dolan's fly.—No runs.

Petes — Powers took Rooney's fly. Nill threw out Byrne. Mitchell grabbed King's fly.—No runs.

Ninth Innings

Ottawa — Lage flew to Rooney. Dolan walked. Nill singled. A squeeze play went wrong, and Dolan was caught between the lines. Smykal fanned.—No runs.

Petes — Fox went out, Dolan to Rogers. Shag took Kelly's fly. Schettler, batting for Belting, singled across second. Blount flew to Stewart.—No runs.

MITCHELL ADDS STRENGTH TO THE SENATORS

New Shortstop Looks Good in All Departments.

SCHETTLER WANTED ?

Mitchell, the Senators' new short fielder, and Frank Smykal work well together. The one thousand dollar beauty fields and hits the ball in fine style. He made a momentary fumble of Blount's grounder, the only semblance of an error on his part, but the local speed pilot had the ball beaten, in any event.

Our old friend Rogers played to the grand-stand for further orders on Dolan's hard drive, but failed to deliver on Rooney's hit to the same territory.

The Ottawa scribes scent a possible deal with the local club for a pitcher, and the Free Press says that Schettler is the man. But Curly Blount will have something to say.

When Lill was replaced by Rogers, the wild man had three balls on Fox. Rogers made it four on the first pitch, and accordingly the free ticket is charged against h.mi

BOBBY DIBBLE TO TRY AGAIN

Canadian at Diamond Sculls Chatted at Station

Bob Dibble, accompanied by his father, Joe Thompson, President of the Don Rowing Club and Mat Scholes, his trainer, stopped off at Peterboro, yesterday between trains 3.31 and 4.23 en route from Montreal to Toronto. While in the city the party were entertained by a couple of Review scribes. In speaking of his unsuccessful attempts to win the Diamond Sculls, Bob claimed that his victor, Sininigalia, the Italian, was the better man. He was not discouraged, however, and hoped for another try. In August he will defend his Canadian Championship at St. Catharines and a month later his national championship at Boston.

The champion sculler looked to be in perfect condition and as a reastated that the peolpe on the other side of the pond could not have used him better. When preparing for his race, his trainer was assisted by Jimmie Barry, champion professional sculler of the world. Last night the Dibble party were given a big reception at Toronto.

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

WHEN a man buys a piano he may not think so much of educating his daughters as he does of disciplining his neighbors.

The average man thinks himself handsome enough to suit any girl. When he has the courage of his convictions we say, "How conceited!"

A pull at the city hall cuts more ice than papers showing that the family came over in the Mayflower.

The one fear that harasses a lazy man is that the scientists may find an anti-lazy virus and his wife will insist on experimenting in the family.

Fewer people would be pessimistic if they didn't have a fool notion acquired by listening to some base flatterer that the part becomes their dark, satanic beauty.

When hot air rushes through an empty head the noise is sometimes terrific.

People who need tonic for their spines can safely be classed among the hopeless invalids.

Uncertain.

The great, unfathomed mystery
Is what lies just ahead—
What does tomorrow hold that comes
With slow, soft footed tread?
You know the tale of yesterday,
Its failure or success,
But what is in the coming day
You cannot even guess.

Will it be like the days that have
Vanished from your view,
Or will it turn some different tricks
And show you something new?
Will life serenely glide along
Just like a story book?
Will it contain some sweet surprise,
Or will you get the hook?

Most of the days that come along
Are like the days that go
Or like some soldiers of the line
All standing in a row.
When they have served their little time
And tumbled in the ditch
It puzzles you in but a week
To know just which was which.

But, ah, tomorrow—what of it?
Will it be dull and tame,
A day of routine and, in short,
Another of the same,
Or will it be a day that lives,
A landmark, tall and bright?
What lies beyond that blackened ridge
That marks the coming night?

Moving With the Times.

"A man to get along these days must accommodate himself to conditions."

"But suppose he can't?"

"Then he must go by the board. There is Comoner. He started in life running a delivery stable. Then he turned into a bicycle repair shop and next to a garage."

"I suppose he is satisfied now?"

"No; he is thinking of transforming it into an aeroplane station."

LINER GOES DOWN IN MID OCEAN

Atlantis is a Remarkable Production by Movies.

One not acquainted with the modern methods of cinematography would scarcely believe that the production of "Atlantis," which is now being shown for the first time in Ontario at the "Princess Theatre," and all this week, has cost approximately one hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

The services of five hundred actors and actresses were required, in addition to over one hundred professional swimmers, divers, life savers and sailors, to give realism to this remarkable picture.

First is seen the sailing of the vessel, pasengers bidding farewell to their friends. Next, the steamship is heading for the ocean, with flags and handkerchiefs of passengers waving. During the height of the festivities in the various cabins and steerage comes the alarm that the "Roland" is in danger of sinking, and immediately there is a scramble for the upper decks. Many of the passengers have retired, and to them is left the task of adding realism in the scanty clad state. Lifeboats are lowered, life belts are distributed, and all is made ready for the worst.

In her critical position the "Roland" is seen to sink gradually, and here is where the professional swimmers and divers are seen clambering down the sides of the huge vessel, while the more foolhardy dive into the sea, and are rescued after many feats of bravery by the professional swimmers, after which they are taken aboard the rescue ship, which has arrived at the scene of the disaster.

Body of Woman is Dug up by Ghouls

Head and Limbs Removed and Carried Away

Welland, Ont., July 21.—The surmise of a few weeks ago that the grave of the late Emmeline Barnes in the private cemetery in the Walter Upper farm, near Allanburg, had been tampered with, and the body removed, was put to the test under the direction of Dr. Park, Medical Officer of Health, when the grave was excavated and the casket opened. Nothing but the trunk was found remaining. The head, both arms at the shoulder joint and both legs at the hip joint had been removed. "This mystery is the most puzzling in my experience," said Dr. Park. "The rumor goes that medical students are responsible, but that is an absurdity, for various reasons which I could state to you. The deceased woman had not an enemy in the community, nor have any of her relatives." The discovery that the grave had been tampered with was made by Mr. Upper on the first day of June. He saw that an excavation had been made. The grave had not been refilled again to within a foot and a half of the top. The relatives at once got Harry Theal and Reuben Upper to complete the excavation, and in doing so they found a human jaw and a lock of hair. When the casket was reached the top was found to be cracked, and, looking through the crack, the men declared the body was still there. As a matter of delicacy the relatives ordered that the grave be refilled without opening the casket. The finding of a skull in an adjoining field on July 5th, however, brought the matter to a head again, but it was not until the other day that the grave was opened. The penalty for offering indignity to human remains is a very serious one, and the attention of the county crown attorney has been drawn to the case.

ADDITIONS TO GRADY'S STORE

So great has the trade of Mr. William Grady's store, on the corner of Lansdowne and Lock streets, increased, that he has found it necessary to enlarge it to about twice its present dimensions. The addition is being added to the rear, and is so arranged to increase the floor space of the store, afford more commodious ice cream parlors, and have considerable storing accommodation.

Increasing the store will mean that Mr. Grady will be able to carry more extensive lines of groceries and sundries. The work will be completed in the course of a couple of weeks.

Edmonton Grows.

Edmonton population is now over 72,315, according to the official census. The first count gives the total number of persons in the city who have registered as 72,315, but there are a few coming every day.

Last year the official result was given out as 67,243 and this year's census will show approximately from 5,000 to 5,100 of an increase over that of last year. The largest percentage of increase has been found on the southside of the river although there has been a decided increase on the north side.

NO PROSPECT OF AN ELECTION

Sorek, Que., July 21.—Enthusiastic crowds greeted the arrival here of the Government tug Lady Grey, with a party, including Hon. Louis Coderre, Hon. L. P. Pelletier and Hon. B. Nantel, who were the principal speakers at a Conservative rally held here in the Royal Park, where about 2,000 persons listened to the speeches.

Hon. L. P. Pelletier, Postmaster-General, spoke of his indifference to criticism in the newspapers to which, he said, he had become so accustomed during his thirty years of political struggle that he had come to disregard it. He would continue, as had always been his habit, to act up to his convictions and set at nought the "poisoned breath" of his opponents. He then referred to an interpretation of his recent speech at Louisville, that a general election next Fall was probable, saying that the present Government had a mandate for five years, and had no intention of precipitating an election. The Government at Ottawa, he added, would no more be influenced by what Mr. Roblin did in Manitoba than it would by what Mr. Whitney did in Ontario, but would be guided by their own acts entirely.

"But the time is coming soon," he continued, "when we shall have a majority in the Senate and, with the aid of Providence, we shall be in a position to give Canada some of the best roads in the world."

A SIMPLE FIRE EXTINGUISHER

Exhaustive tests have been carried out by the National Fire Prevention Association as to the most efficient means of extinguishing fires occurring in dip tanks containing paint or other inflammable liquids. Hitherto sand has been almost universally considered to be the best extinguisher, but these tests have proved conclusively that for this purpose sawdust is vastly superior. Where sand merely makes a hole in the fire, afterwards sinking to the bottom of the tank and allowing the flames to close up again, sawdust spreads over the surface of the liquid and, although it may itself smoulder, smothers the original flames. The formula adopted is one bushel of sawdust mixed with ten pounds of commercial carbonate of soda. The experiments were conducted with hardwood and softwood sawdust, and both were found equally good. — Industrial Canada.

Canadian Fur Harvest.

The British fur market is almost as much interested in the fox rearing industry on Prince Edward Island as are the ranchers themselves, says London "People." Litters of young silver foxes are reported from the numerous ranches from week to week, and from these reports, it is estimated that the fox crop of this spring will be worth at current prices from $5,000,000 to $6,000,000, which would yield to the Provincial Government a tax revenue of $50,000 to $60,000 from this source.

Was The Genuine Brand of Cold Tea

On July 13th the 224th anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne was celebrated by several lodges at Kinmount, and a gala day was held. On the same day a gentleman drove into town and proceeded to dispense wet goods from a buggy to the thirsty crowd. The goods were not labelled with the trade mark of any particular brewing company, but at the same time it was suspected by some of those who indulged that they were securing a nip of the real goods.

Just as it happened, a couple of Government detectives, commonly known as "spotters," were in the village on business, and believing that they had an easy catch, it is stated that they purchased some of the bottled goods to the value of $1.50, and after securing the name of the vendors, forwarded the wet stuff to Toronto, where it was analyzed.

The laugh is now on the "spotters" as the report of the analysis came back stating that the supposed liquor was none other than cold tea. —Lindsay Warder.

PASSENGERS ON KOMAGATA MARU YIELD TO ARGUMENT AND GIVING UP FIGHT TO LAND, WILL RETURN HOME

ORIENTALS ACCEPT MEDICINES AND FOOD FOR THE RETURN TRIP

Government Refuses Them Fares or Recompense For Their Fruitless Voyage.

VANCOUVER, B.C., July 22.—Just before seven o'clock last evening the Hindus, through their shore committee, agreed to accept the terms of the Government and have agreed to allow peaceable possession of the Komagata Maru. There will be no fighting.

The Hindus made many new demands, but were finally forced to accept the proposals of the officials, which were to provide them with medicines and $6,000 worth of food for their return trip. They absolutely refused to give money for their return fares and to allow anything to the local Hindu committee by way of recompense.

At seven o'clock Capt. Yamamtto started out for his ship to get steam up.

Hon. Martin Burrell, Minister of Agriculture in the Federal Government, was largely the director in negotiations yesterday afternoon with the Hindus.

After the return of the local Hindu committee, at 3.15 from their talk on the Komagata Maru, the seven Hindus held a private meeting in the immigration headquarters to draft a written reply [illegible] the Government. Then they decided they wanted legal advice and went uptown to see A. H. McNeill. They brought him back with them at five o'clock and submitted new written proposals.

They made new demands. Not only they ask for food and medicine immediately as a price for restoring peace on the ship and also renewed their demand [illegible] their return passage to Calcutta but they insisted that the Government reimburse the local Hindu committee for the money spent recently in sending food to the Maru and for the charter of the vessel.

In the early evening the crowd which gathered downtown to view the waterfront was almost larger than the throng of the early morning when the Rainbow arrived. The upper windows and even the roofs of office buildings were crowded.

The waterfront looked like regatta day with the number of small craft that were out. Uptown lawyers and business men were making telephone engagements to go out on the inlet in the afternoon. Nothing in remembrance has had such a disturbing effect on the minds, and daily duties of the citizens of Vancouver. There was all the excitement of war, mixed with the humor of a comic opera.

Baron Singh, one of the five who were ten days ago marooned by the other Hindus aboard the Komagata Maru, and who was off that vessel for several days, yesterday afternoon threw off a message in a bottle which reached the immigration authorities. He wanted to be rescued. He says that his compatriots yesterday threatened to throw him into irons. It is probable that the immigration authorities will attempt to get him off, for they fear for his life. On the occasion of the previous incident Baron Singh was accused by the men on the ship with being a traitor.

The Drastic Measures of St. Petersburg Authorities Leads to Big Strike of Workmen.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 22.—Serious strike disturbances broke out yesterday in St. Petersburg, where 100,000 workers have laid down their tools as a protest against the drastic measures of the authorities at Baku and elsewhere against demonstrating strikers. The Cossacks in the capital were mobilized in the Viborg quarter to disperse the strikers, who indulged in much stone-throwing and also fired some revolver shots. The troops succeeded in clearing the streets without resort to bullets, as a couple of rounds of blank cartridges proved sufficient to rout the demonstrators at least temporarily. Several of the strikers were hurt during the disorder, but the casualty list was small.

Later in the morning the strikers made a raid on the street cars, driving out their occupants and overturning the vehicles. The strikers appeared to be in an ugly mood, disregarding the summonses of the police to disperse.

Limbs of the Law After Blind Pigs; Two $100 Fines

Monday was a red letter day in police court circles at Kinmount, when some half dozen or more liquor cases engaged the attention of the authorities and also afforded some excitement for the villagers.

For some time past it has been known that liquor was being illegally sold, not only at Kinmount, but also in Galway township, Peterboro County. Provincial License Inspector Ayearst and an assistant have been in that neighborhood for some time looking up evidence, and the result was the court proceedings on Monday.

Court was held before Judge Wilson, Alex. Morrison and Dr. White, the accused being defended by Mr. G. A. Jordan of Lindsay.

Mrs. Simpson, proprietor of the hotel at Kinmount, was charged with keeping liquor for sale in a local option territory. A quantity of cider which tested 8 per cent. alcohol was seized on the premises. The court found her guilty, but sentence was not pronounced. Her son James was fined $100 for selling liquor, and a similar fine was imposed on Roy Watson, formerly of Bobcaygeon, for a similar offence. Several charges were preferred against parties for being drunk in local option territory and will be disposed of later on.—Lindsay Post.

HUSBAND TAKES BLAME FOR CALMETTE SHOOTING

In Dramatic Testimony at Trial of His Wife For Murder French Ex-Minister of Finance Declares That He Did Not Realize How Editor's Calumnies Had Preyed on Mme. Caillaux.

PARIS, July 22.—Joseph Caillaux held the court for two intense hours yesterday, testifying in defence of his wife, who sat in the prisoner's enclosure, charged with the killing of Gaston Calmette, editor of The Figaro, on March 16 last. The appearance of M. Caillaux was hardly less dramatic than that of Mme. Caillaux Monday.

"I accuse myself," he cried in one climax. "I committed a fault. I should myself have acted, but, absorbed by public affairs, I failed to realize the ravages Calmette's calumnies had made on the soul of my wife."

M. Caillaux spoke as if in the Chamber, his voice of high tenor, softened in quality sometimes rising in falsetto in moments of excitement.

He would, he said, tell the jury the history of his private life from his first marriage down to the sad event which caused his presence on the stand. He explained the incident of the two letters, which he supposed had been destroyed before his divorce from his first wife. He only knew of their existence when a friend warned him that they were about to be published.

When he married Mme. Raynouard he knew for the first time what true happiness was. When he spoke of her, Mme. Caillaux blushed crimson and bowed her head in her hands and sobbed silently.

"She was a most tender affectionate wife," said M. Caillaux. "We lived and live in the closest communion of heart and mind. My wife, however, took alarm at the dangers my political campaign exposed me to. She tried to dissuade me from entering Doumergue's Cabinet. The income tax, she said, had formidable adversaries and I should be the object of fierce press campaigns.

"As she foretold, the attacks recommenced with redoubled fury, but I refused to adopt the means employed by other politicians to stop them. I pursued my way unfettered. I could not believe that any one would publish the 'Thy Joe' letter, although I had been warned by Pierre Morder, by the Princess of Monaco and by the Princess of Mesagne-Estradere."

In January, 1914, M. Caillaux had a conversation with Jean Barthou, the former Minister of Justice, who said: "Your wife (first wife) is against you. You made a great mistake in writing those letters."

After the publication of "Thy Joe" letter M. Caillaux's first wife telephoned him to clear herself of any suspicion he might have had that she was responsible for its divulgence.

"At that time," said M. Caillaux, "I firmly believed that other letters would be published. My wife shared my belief, which was confirmed by information from a number of persons."

Up to this time M. Caillaux had been moderately calm, but now he worked himself up to a violent fit of indignation as he denounced the calumnies levelled against his honesty.

"Never have I touched a single stock with my personal fortune while Minister of Finance," he declared. "Never did a Bourse order come out of my office. I affirm it in the strongest terms."

Returning to the "Thy Joe" letter, he described the effect of its publication on his wife. Finally he became so impregnated with her fears that other letters would be published that he consulted President Poincare, who had been one of the witnesses of their marriage. The President did his best to reassure him and advised him to consult a lawyer.

"My lawyer told me," continued M. Caillaux, "that nothing could be done. I then said to my wife, "Be reassured. I will go and smash Calmette's snout myself.' After that I felt relieved in mind, but my wife, on the other hand, was depressed.

"At the police station, on my way home from the Senate, I learned of the tragedy. My wife's constant prayer was, 'I hope he is not seriously hurt, I meant to only give him a lesson'."

M. Caillaux then entered upon the purely political phase of his deposition.

The campaign carried on by The Figaro, he asserted, was meant to strike him down at any cost because he stood for the income tax.

BLAZE DOES PRINCE ALBERT HEAVY DAMAGE

$10,000 Law Library Among Buildings Gutted

PRINCE ALBERT, Sask., July 22.—Fire yesterday morning gutted the McKay and Adam block, destroying the Manville Hardware Co. stock, the McKay and Adam law offices, the office of McMaster and Christie, surveyors, office of the West Lumber & Supply Co. and part of the furniture of the Carlton Club. It started in the basement of the hardware store and soon after there was a terrific explosion, which blew the plate glass across the street.

Mrs. Mary Walker, wife of the janitor of the building, was severely cut as she had just come out of the building when the window blew out.

The losses which total $118,000, are as follows: McKay and Adam block $40,000, insurance $24,000; Manville Hardware Co. stock $40,000, insurance $25,000; McKay and Adam, probably $25,000, not much insurance. The $10,000 law library of James McKay, M.P., was destroyed with no insurance. It was reported to be the best law library in Saskatchewan. Other losses of personal effects in the building will not total over $3,000, with little insurance.

MR. KENNY ALSO TAKES THE GOLD

A huge surprise was given the large number gathered on the Sacred Heart grounds last evening to hear the result of the C. M. B. A. and C. O. F. voting contest, and to witness the drawing for the $50 in gold, when the name on the lucky ticket read P. J. Kenny, 182 Simcoe street. Mr. Kenny, the evening before, won the gold watch.

The contest was very close, and the result was not announced last evening, as it was deemed advisable to recount the ballots. This has been done, and proves that the Catholic Order of Foresters had 1,644, while the C. M. B. A. had 1,477, which gave the former a majority of 167. The total amount realized from the voting contest was $312.10.

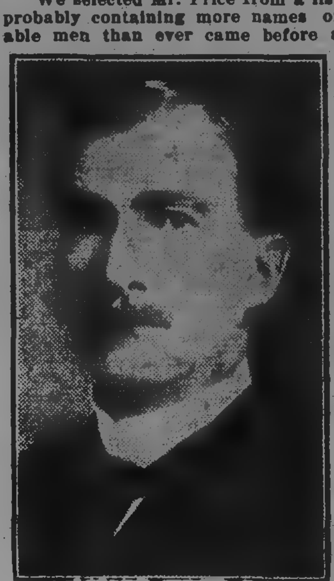
APPOINTMENT IS ANNOUNCED

St. Thomas Man as Chairman of Compensation Commission

TORONTO, July 22. — Samuel Price, K.C., has been appointed chairman of the Workmen's Compensation Commission at a salary of $10,000 per year and will at once take up his work. This was the announcement Sir James Whitney made after yesterday afternoon's Cabinet council. The Premier said the other two members would be named "in due time" and asserted that ability was alone considered in choosing Mr. Price from the many applicants.

The chairman will confer with F. W. Hinsdale, the Washington expert engaged by the Government, to put the act in force at once.

"We selected Mr. Price from a list probably containing more names of able men than ever came before a Government in Canada before," said the Premier. "We chose him after considering all and we believe we have got the best man. The people of Ontario are anxious to see the Compensation Act in force. We believe it is the best in the world and will be a success.



SAMUEL PRICE, K.C.

"No question but the capacity and fitness of the individual was considered by us in making this appointment."

Samuel Price, K.C., has served the Governments of Ontario and Canada for many years in various capacities. He has been a royal commissioner in investigations, he is a mining and railway legal expert of prominence and has at different times helped frame laws and settle disputes in these industries. He once declined the chairmanship of the Ontario Railway Board.

FALLING OFF IN IMMIGRATION

Little Business Being Done by Local Agency

In conversation with the Review yesterday afternoon, Immigration Agent Might stated that during the past few months immigration had fallen off in connection with the local agency. Throughout the Dominion the official figures gave a decrease of over seventy per cent.

Mr. Might has also received a notice to the effect that in order that there may be a clear understanding of the situation, he is informed that owing to the over-crowded condition of the labor market and the consequent exisiting unemployment, the present policy of the department of immigration in dealing with immigrant arrivals other than bona-fide agriculturists and domestic servants is to reject them, when under existing laws and regulations that action can be taken.

For over two years immigrants such as farm hands and domestic servants have been the only classes advised to come to Canada. On May 26 of this year the department by advertisement and otherwise in the British Isles and Continental Europe warned intending immigrants against coming to Canada at the present time owing to labor conditions.

It is therefore felt that anything less than the strictest enforcement of the restrictive regulations would not be justifiable and a hardship upon the unemployed already here.

Mr. Might also states that during the early part of the month he received numerous calls for farm help from the farmers, which he filled from the ranks of the unemployed in this city.

ELMA MEIER NOT KILLED

The well circulated rumor that Miss Elma Meier, the high diver with the Washburn's Shows was killed while performing her feat in North Bay last night is incorrect. On investigating, The Review learned that the story was told as a joke by two of J. J. Turner Co.'s men, who returned from North Bay yesterday.

OUTLOOK FOR NEXT WINTER NOT ANY TOO PROMISING

CHAIRMAN HOWARD ELLIOTT
Present directing head of the New Haven Railroad.

Charity Board May Have to Provide for Increased Demands for Help

The Charity Board is due for a rather strenuous winter unless the labor situation becomes more hopeful, according to remarks of Finch Miller, the relief officer. This morning Mr. Miller remarked to the Review that he had noticed over twenty able bodied men sitting in Central Park, men evidently out of work. He had also noticed numerous men standing around the street corners. Such times have not been witnessed for some years, and with the large foreign population, the winter situation may prove to be serious. The summer workers are handicapped from earning sufficient to keep them going through the summer, let alone the winter. Even now the Board has a large number of cases to attend to, which is rather unusual during the summer months.

PREMIER ASQUITH MAY SUBMIT NEW PROPOSAL

May Also Change the Time Limit Embodied in Amending Bill

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, July 22.—Crowds again assembled around Buckingham Palace gates this morning to see the members of the Ulster Conference Board arrive. While openly the two sides declare they cannot withdraw from their present positions, it is understood that Premier Asquith is likely to submit a proposal to allow the Protestant counties of Ulster to vote together on the question of exclusion from a Home Rule Parliament, and that he may go as far as to change the time limit of six years embodied in the amending bill. Sir Edward Carson will doubtless make a fight to have Tyrone included in the "Protestant" Counties. The Manchester Guardian to-day comments on the fact that King George saw fit to summon to his presence without word of rebuke, the Ulster leaders. The Guardian also says the King has been unduly alarmed by reports of certain of his unofficial Councillors, and the impression thus made on his mind may, unless he wisely determines to be guided henceforth by his official councillors, have consequences more serious than any yet produced.

London, July 22.—Premier Asquith to-day assumed full responsibility for King George's speech to the Conference at Buckingham Palace, telling the House of Commons, that the "speech was sent to me in the ordinary way by His Majesty the day before it was delivered, and I take the entire responsibility for it. The King left it to the discretion of the conference to determine whether or not the speech should be published and the conference decided unanimously in favor of its publication. His Majesty throughout this matter has followed the strictest constitutional practice. He has not taken any step from the beginning until now, except in consultation and on the advice of his ministers."

The Prime Minister further said that all who attended the conference did so unconditionally. He declines to discuss why it was being held in Buckingham Palace instead of the House of Commons, and said "time would show" whether there would be opportunity to discuss the subject in the House.

The King's Speech.

London, July 21.—King George, in receiving the Ulster conferees at Buckingham Palace, made the following speech:—

"It is with feelings of satisfaction and hopefulness that I receive you here to-day, and I thank you for the manner in which you have responded to my summons. It is also a matter for congratulation that the Speaker of the House of Commons has consented to preside over your meetings. My intervention at this moment may be regarded as a new departure, but the exceptional circumstances under which you are brought together justify my action.

"For months we have watched with deep misgivings the course of events in Ireland. The trend has been surely and steadily toward an appeal to force, and to-day the cry of civil war is on the lips of the most responsible and sober-minded of my people.

"We have in the past endeavored to act as a civilising example to the world, and to me it is unthinkable, as it must be to you, that we should be brought to the brink of fratricidal strife upon issues apparently so capable of adjustment as those you are now asked to consider, if handled in a spirit of generous compromise.

"My apprehension in contemplating such a dire calamity is intensified by my feeling of attachment to Ireland and of sympathy with her people, who have always welcomed me with warm-hearted affection.

"Gentlemen, you represent in one form or another the vast majority of my subjects at home. You also have a deep interest in my dominions oversea, which are scarcely less concerned in the prompt and friendly settlement of this question.

"I regard you then in this matter as trustees for the honor and peace of all.

"Your responsibilities are indeed great. The time is short. You will, I know, employ it to the fullest advantage and be patient, earnest and conciliatory.

"In view of the magnitude of the interests at stake, I pray God in His infinite wisdom may guide you and your deliberations so that they may result in the joy of peace and an honorable settlement."

FAMILIES CAMP AT THE T.A.S. PARK

The T. A. S. Summer Camp opened this week at T. A. S. Park on the Otonabee River, is being fairly well patronized. Some twelve or fifteen young men are living there all the time, and two or three more are working, and staying at the camp at night. For the convenience of the latter a yacht leaves the street railway wharf at 6.10 in the evening and brings the passengers back in time to be at work at eight in the morning.

Several families have signified their intention of camping on the grounds and having their meals at the T. A. S. camp. Two have already arrived. Rev. Father Cote is at the camp all day, and celebrates Mass every morning.

IRVING'S ESTATE

Letters of administration were granted to Henry B. Irving, brother of the dead actor.

PETERBOROUGH, WEDNESDAY, JULY 22, 1914

WHY CANADA SHOULD HELP BRITAIN.

THE REVIEW of the British Home Fleet, composed of over two hundred fighting ships and an equal number of auxiliaries, by King George, should have a salutary effect on German ambitions and German war scares. The fleet is in itself the most powerful and dangerous aggregation of fighting machines in the world, and what is of equal importance is the vast amount of wealth behind that armament that maintains and replenishes it. Germany is building its war vessels out of borrowed money, while Britain builds hers out of current income. The difference is that Britain has tremendous money resources for war purposes, and which are unimpaired by her vast expenditures for floating forts. This system is what really gives Britain her ascendancy, and not until Germany or any other nation can equal or surpass this system of financing navies and wars, will Britain's leadership be displaced.

But there is another point of importance, and that is that the British system may break down by its own weight. Constant increases in expenditures for naval purposes make an increasing drain on that current income, and at some point it will be exhausted, or, in other words, the maximum will be reached. To maintain increasing expenditure for armaments after the limit of current income is reached, borrowing must be resorted to, as Germany has done, and then Britain's unique position in financing navies will be equalled or displaced. She will be on a footing doubtless not a bit superior to some other nations, like Germany. That is why the self-governing Dominions like Canada and Australia must co-operate with the United Kingdom to maintain Britain's power in the world of war and finance. As long as that power is unbroken, the integrity of the Empire is a fact, while at the same time each part is assured of the safety necessary to work out its own political destiny.

A CASE IN POINT.

THE TRIAL of Madame Caillaux is likely to be as interesting and dramatic as any shiver-producing melodrama. In stating her case she made skilful use of stage methods by playing on sentiment, appealing to sympathy, explaining how she was torn by conflicting forces, acted half blindly in a self-sacrificing effort, which has turned out tragically unsuccessful to preserve the respectability of her own name and family. Her appeal was well staged, and, if the trial proceeds in the same fashion to the end, acquital or a light sentence may be the result.

French temperament allows and encourages such exhibitions. Fortunately, British respect for law and justice makes much less use of an appeal to sentiment. The result is that we face out our afflictions and do not carry exposure and revenge to the same extreme degree. For the same reason we do not take attacks, especially in politics, with the same seriousness. The case brings out well the great differences existing between English and French mind, thought, temperament, or whatever you may call it.

HON. T. W. CROTHERS.

LIBERAL NEWSPAPERS, having run out of ammunition for political editorials and news, resort to the expedient of manufacturing dope of a political character. Of late, these paper balls have been aimed at the Hon. T. W. Crothers, who has been slated for four or five different positions, while reconstruction of the Borden Cabinet is frequently the subject of comment. These are all nothing more than surmises, and, having no foundation in fact, are not to be taken seriously.

As for the Hon. T. W. Crothers, only ill-health could cause him to seek a change of office, and even then it is very probable that the change he would seek would be the quiet retirement of his own garden in St. Thomas. A member of the House of Commons since 1908, he has taken a prominent part in Dominion affairs. The Liberals have had but one thing against him, and that was the Vancouver strike. It was not his fault. From the start he did everything possible to secure conciliation, and at the end of the difficulties he even made a trip to the coast and used all his influence to bring about a settlement. However, neither side would agree to arbitrate. Neither the men nor the company would apply for an Arbitration Board. There is no law which can compel them. It was a fight to a finish, in which both sides took an uncompromising position. If ever a man has been attacked unfairly, it has been Mr. Crothers over the Vancouver labour troubles.

In the labour troubles with the dock hands in Montreal he put on an old suit and spent a couple of days talking to the men. He became convinced that they had grievances, and these were righted, so that a great strike, that would have tied up ocean traffic, was prevented.

In the case of the Grand Trunk, he opposed it vigorously until that company complied with an award of the Railway Board. His strong stand was successful. In many other cases, he has done a great deal for labour that has not found trumpets in the newspapers, among which are a comprehensive review of the course of wages since 1900, special reports, and protection for immigrants.

The Review has had occasion to comment on cases where employment agencies have exploited helpless persons, usually immigrants, who seek work. Mr. Crothers has taken this matter into consideration, so that no employment agency may secure work for an immigrant without first securing a license from the Department, and they must keep a detailed record of transactions. The Minister of Labour visited England last summer, studied the Labour Bureaus system there, and doubtless will bring in further legislation to give greater protection to those seeking employment.

The Hon. T. W. Crothers has done good work in his department, and his own constituency has reason to be proud of his record in office, made up, as it is, of real accomplishment, and not, as in the case of his predecessor, of fulsome reports in the party press.

PETERBOROUGH'S SMOKE NUISANCE.

EVERY DAY Grand Trunk and C. P. R. trains coming into this city may be seen belching great clouds of black smoke into the air. With increasing freight and passenger business naturally arising from the growth of Peterborough, the nuisance must continue to increase.

Quite a long while ago the City Council took up this matter, and was successful, we understand, in abating the nuisance. Apparently the aldermen of the present Council have not troubled the railways on this matter, with the result that things have lapsed into a very bad condition—one worse, perhaps, than when the municipal authorities were complaining. The railways will not bestir themselves for the comfort and convenience of the citizens of Peterborough unless the local authorities "go after them."

In other cities locomotives are required to shut off their stacks or carry smoke mufflers, with the result that people living along the line of railway track are not deluged with smoke and soot, nor is the city covered with a grimy pall.

It is high time the local authorities bestirred themselves, as the nuisance has reached such proportions that complaints are becoming numerous. There is no occasion for inflicting such inconvenience on the citizens, when a few simple things can reduce the nuisance to a minimum.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

A REPORT from Tamworth states that it is proposed to use dynamite in the lake. Reading between the lines, it seems that if the dynamite were applied to some persons of that district, more satisfactory results might be obtained.

IT WOULDN'T surprise us if Huerta created a revolutionary furore in Paris cafes when he starts to "do" them.

ONE GREAT DANGER of most Canadian waters is that they take most people over the head.

Feminine Economy

Puck

Is your wife so very economical, then?

Oh, yes, very. Why my wife can take an old, worn out $10 hat, spend $15 on it, and make it look almost as good as new.

Where Huerta Was Resigned.

Ottawa Free Press.

The official resignation of Huerta was at the National Palace, but the real joyous or sorrowful event took place at that cafe where the cognac has the greatest kick.

The Foolish Question.

Saturday Journal.

Salt—Yes, miss, we had an awful storm here last week. That lighthouse yonder was washed away except for a few blocks of stone.

Miss—Dear me! What ever did they build it in such an exposed position for?

The Agitator's Influence.

London Free Press.

The kind of agitators who are behind the bi-lingual movement in Eastern Ontario can be gauged by the fact that their support enabled Gustave Evanturel to return to the Legislature from which he had retired disgraced.

Willing Workers.

Lethbridge Herald.

"On every committee of thirteen there are twelve men who go to meetings having given no thought to the subject, and prepared to accept someone else's lead. One goes having made up his mind what he means shall be done. I always make it my business to be that one." This is what Joseph Chamberlain said of himself. He instanced a truth which is evident in every organization. Usually one man leads, and the others, because they are unprepared and uninformed, follow in the rear.

Beef a Luxury.

La Patrie.

If we are to believe the experts, our neighbors, and ourselves, also, alas, will in the future consider beef as an article of luxury, and class the purchase of a fillet among our sumptuary expenses. Beef is dear, and always will be, affirms one of the largest stock raisers on the American Pacific Coast, because an animal weighing 1,200 lbs. costs $98 to produce, as against only $47 twenty years ago. A well considered boycott, he says, would have no result but to lessen the consumption without influencing the price.

The Sentiment for Sobriety.

Calgary Herald.

In Ottawa the other day the city hall caretaker was discovered drunk and incapable on his job. He was fired by the mayor, later reinstated by the council and later still put off the job by the mayor again, with police assistance. In addition, the mayor has issued an order prohibiting the drinking of intoxicants by city employes in any public place at any time, either when on or off duty. This series of incidents is illuminative. It goes to show that while in Ontario the people refuse to defeat a good government for the sake of securing a half measure of prohibition, they are steadily setting their faces against drunkenness and everything having to do with drink. The mayor of Ottawa was quite justified in taking the steps he did, and the people at the capital are backing him in his stand for sobriety.

The Fight Craze.

Montreal Mail.

The craze for prize-fighting, which is evident in England just now, is causing various leaders of religion and social uplift unusual alarm. Thousands of people flock to the ring encounters, and a feature of the attendance at every fight is the number of ladies of all classes.

It is to be hoped that Britain's craze for fighting does not assist towards bringing on the great fight of the century in Ulster. The present craze, indeed, may be useful as hastening the end of prize fighting as a recognized public amusement in good standing. In England exhibitions of pluck have always made an irresistible appeal to the people, especially the working classes, where shown in the prize ring, in the playing field or even on the political platform. It is not surprising, therefore, that the masses have responded to the appeal of the ring at this time, when England is not concerned with any particular foreign affair and is steadily developing self-consciousness. If England gets its fill of prize-fighting and turns against it, the effect will be world-wide.

THE CROOKS

By Walt Mason

The people who beat you, hornswoggle and cheat you, don't profit for long from the kale; for folks who are tricky find Nemesis sticky—it never abandons their trail. I've often been cheated, the trick's been repeated so often I cannot keep tab; but ne'er has the duffer who thus made me suffer been much better off for his grab. It pays not to swindle; dishonest rolls dwindle like snow when exposed to the sun; like feathers in Tophet is burned up the profit of cheating, the crooked man's mon. The people who sting me unknowingly bring me philosophy fresh by the crate; Don't get excited—my wrongs will be righted, by Nemesis, Fortune, or Fate. I know that the stingers—they think they are dingers, and gloat o'er the coin they don't earn—I know they'll be busted and sick and disgusted, while I still have roubles to burn. I'd rather be hollow with hunger than follow the course that the tricksters pursue; I'd rather be "easy" than do as the breezy and conscienceless gentlemen do. Far better the shilling you've earned by the tilling of soil that is harder than bricks, than any old dollar you manage to collar by crooked and devious tricks.

WEATHER COMPLAINERS

THERE are people forever complain' about the weather. It's either too hot er too cold, seldom ever is it jest ter suit 'em. If it rains it's too wet; if it don't rain, things air perishin' from drowth; it seems thet some folks have but one ambition in life, ter slam the weather. And what's the use of it all? Complainin' never gets a person anythin', and lots of people who would regulate the weather conditions if they had a chance might as well stop hopin' thet they'll ever get one. I reckon that's good sound sense. Ye never hear tell of anybody with somethin' wuth while ter do complainin' about the weather. To him life's too short to sap it by worryin' over trifles, yebetye.

LATEST NEWS PARAGRAPHED

It is semi-officially stated in Parliamentary circles that there will be no session this autumn, and that the House will not meet till January.

Sir George Foster left Ottawa yesterday for Quebec, where he will proceed to Rimouski to meet the members of the Dominion's Royal Commission, and accompany them to Newfoundland.

Fire totally destroyed the beautiful summer home of W. H. Nichol of New York, on the north side of Howe Island, near Brockville. The loss, including contents, which were also destroyed, is placed at $100,000.

The license commissioners for South Renfrew, in session at Arnprior yesterday, refused renewal of licenses to three hotels and two liquor shops. This reduces the hotels to two and cuts off the shops altogether.

Herman McCrea, brother of the late Hon. W. McCrea, died at the home of his son-in-law, Dr. R. K. Kilborn, Kingston, yesterday. He was a native of Granville County, and came of United Empire Loyalist stock.

A Challenge.

A white haired lady, who had been awarded £160 for the death of her husband, applied for it to be paid out to her in the Bow county court.

Judge Smyly—Will you have a crossed check to save trouble if you have your pocket picked?

The Lady.—Certainly not. I've looked after myself all these years and think I can do it now. (Looking round the court)—Who is it that thinks he can pick my pocket?—London Tit-Bits.

Trouble Either Way.

"Who are those two weary looking men who both admit they are afraid to go home?"

"One," replied Miss Cayenne, "is the husband of a suffragist, and the other is the husband of an anti-suffragist."—Washington Star.

THANKS FOR A FAVOR.

The Lady and the Baker and a Little Bit of a Surprise.

It was after dark, and the French baker was about to close his shop when the telephone bell rang.

"Mr. Ovens?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"This is Mrs. Jimley of Hickorynut street."

"Yes, Mrs. Jimley."

"I am giving a supper tonight, and I discover that I need half a dozen more rolls. Could I trouble you to send them over?"

"I'm sorry, ma'am, but I haven't a roll left in the store nor even a loaf of bread. We are sold clear out tonight."

"This is very provoking," said Mrs. Jimley. "Are you sure you haven't anything that would do?"

"There isn't a thing in the place that I would care to sell you, ma'am. Hold on, though. There's a half dozen fresh rolls on my own supper table right now. I could let you have those if you think they would do. My kids can eat crackers instead. They'd rather, anyway."

"Those will do very nicely, Mr. Ovens. Will you send them over soon, please?"

"Right away, ma'am. The boy has gone for the night, but I'll take them to you myself."

In a minute or two he stood on her front steps ringing the bell and feeling well pleased with himself that he could do some one a kindness.

Mrs. Jimley opened the door and took the packages from his hands. Then she said in icy tones:

"The next time you bring any goods here, Mr. Ovens, I wish you would remember to ring the basement bell. I can't have tradesmen coming to the front door."—Newark News.

Why, the Very Idea!

"I had to pay $17 for a ticket to Chicago," said one woman.

"It seems expensive," commented the other.

"Terribly. And there wasn't more than a yard and a quarter of the ticket, at that."—Washington Star.

The Ugly Mug.

In homely guise I wooed Irene.
I had not power nor place nor gold,
But love's mad passion made me bold
To seek the heart of her, my queen.
But she, I found, was not so green.
She had no ear for passions told
In homely guise.

It wrung my soul with anguish keen
To prove unworthy in her eyes.
For she my wooing doth despise
Because she finds no charm, I ween,
In homely guys.

SPECIAL CORNER FOR AFTER DINNER READERS

A STRANGE WINDFALL

By Margaret C. Devereaux

"Goodby, mother, dear," said Martha Eldridge. "I shall work hard in the city and send you all my earnings. I shall be able to make enough to pay the interest on the mortgage and perhaps pay something on the principal."

It was very courageous for the little girl to talk so, but it availed little or nothing. She was going to the city, since there was nothing for her on the farm—only a mouth to feed. Her fate was to sew all day for a pittance making shirts for a department store. Her mother knew very well what was in store for her daughter and burst into tears. Martha put an arm around her, then, taking up a bag in which were all the clothes she had in the world, went out to where a wagon was waiting to take her to the station.

Ben Hughes held the reins, and he looked as sad as Mrs. Eldridge.

"Don't feel bad, Ben," said Martha, laying her hand on his sleeve. "Something will turn up."

"I don't see how," he said dolefully.

"We'll both work hard and save all we can. Some day I'll come back, and we'll be married and live here with mother and all be happy together."

But Ben refused to be comforted. How many farmers' boys remaining on the farm and girls in the city making shirts can look forward to a day of comfort?

On the cars a gentleman sat in the seat beside Martha and entered into conversation with her. He listened sympathetically to all she had to say—she told the whole melancholy story—and seemed affected by it. Not long before they reached the city he opened a bag and took out a package.

"Would you mind taking this to your room," he asked, "keeping it for me till I call for it? I expect to go on, not completing my journey for several days, maybe weeks, maybe months, and I don't wish to carry it with me. You know where you are to go, don't you?"

"Yes, and I'll take charge of your package with pleasure."

She gave him her address, and when the two rolled into the station the gentleman left the car ahead of her. She saw him as he passed through the gate and noticed a man tap him on the shoulder, take his bag and, putting his arm through that of its owner, walk away with him.

Martha asked a policeman to put her on a car to take her to her room and, as soon as she was in it, took some writing materials out of her bag and wrote her mother that she had a fine large room—it was 6 by 9—and in a pleasant location—really in a dirty street—and she would get on very nicely. She also wrote Ben not to be discouraged, for she was sure something would turn up to enable them to realize the dreams of happiness both had at least tried to indulge in. Then she sat down on her bed and sobbed as if her heart would break.

Later she unpacked her bag, first taking out the package the gentleman had given her, which she put in one of the drawers of the little bureau—there was plenty of room for it—and then went out to a restaurant to get a fifteen cent supper.

Several weeks passed, and she heard nothing of the gentleman who owned the package. When as many months had gone by and he neither turned up nor sent any one for the package she began to think that he must be making a very extended trip. Meanwhile she was making just enough money to keep her in clothes—ragged ones—and in food, not a sufficiency or of good quality. But she kept up a stout heart and wrote her mother and Ben cheerful letters.

One day while sewing in her room there was a tap on the door. She opened it, and a man in police uniform entered and handed her a note which contained an order to give him the package. She did so. She didn't know enough to take a receipt, nor did the man give her one. Martha saw several other men in uniform outside the door and wondered why so many of them had come. When they went away she resumed her sewing.

The next day the same man came again. He was alone this time and told her he wished her to go with him. She did so wonderingly in a carriage which she found standing at the door below. The carriage stopped at the door of a bank, and she was taken to a private office in the rear. A gentleman with gray hair and whiskers was sitting at a rosewood desk, and several men in uniform were standing near. What surprised Martha most was to see the man for whom she had been keeping the package.

"Is this the girl?" asked the man at the desk of the man Martha had met before.

"Yes."

"Martha Eldridge," said the former, "this gentleman is or was the cashier of the N. bank. The package he left with you contained bills he had appropriated, and, knowing he could not get them through the station gate, he left them with you. He was arrested and finally agreed to turn over the missing funds on condition of not being prosecuted and that the reward offered for the return of the funds be given to you. Please sign this."

He handed her a receipt to sign and a check for $10,000.

The mortgage on the farm was paid off, there was a wedding, and prosperity came for all.

Napoleon's Bible.

An Italian journalist has the copy of the Bible which Napoleon used during his compulsory sojourn in the isle of Elba. It is a copy of a cheap popular edition, illustrated with rough wood-cuts, with the initial "N" and the imperial crown stamped upon its back. A number of texts are underlined, and the inference is that the exiled emperor searched the Scriptures for passages appropriate to his misfortune and his hopes. "I will smite the shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered," is perhaps the most significant of them. The Bible was discovered in the sanctuary of the Madonna del Monte, in Elba.

Nightmare.

Nightmare, according to one theory, is due to a suspension of power in the muscles of inspiration. The weight, the want of breathing and the sense of suffocation seem to prove this, and a still greater proof is that after the sufferer can speak only one syllable the paroxysm is at an end. The word cannot be spoken without breath. Breath cannot come out of the lungs until it is brought in nor brought in without the action of the muscles of the breast and ribs. Nothing can be more simple than the cause. It is the temporary paralysis of the pectoral muscles, through the medium of the nerves which supply them with feeling.

FATHER GAVE HIM IDEA.

Bell Got Suggestion For Phone In Casual Chat.

Forty years ago, on the porch of an unpretentious little house in Brantford two Scotchmen sat talking. One was a middle-aged man, known to his neighbors as an elocutionist, deeply interested in helping deaf mutes communicate with each other. The other was a thoughtful looking young fellow of 25, professor of Vocal Physiology—whatever that was, in Boston University. Neighbors passing up and down the street heard snatches of their conversation, and passed on, wondering what all this talk about "armatures," and "current interrupters," and "induction coils," meant.

The young man was explaining a new invention he had been working on, a multiple telegraph instrument, which could send a number of messages over a single wire. It worked on the principle of an electric buzzer, with springs that alternately made and broke a circuit. The way in which these springs vibrated at the sending end was reproduced at the receiving end. Only, and this was the important feature, the single wire would carry the six different kinds of waves from the six different vibrating springs, without blending them. Each receiving spring had to be "tuned" to take the message from the corresponding sending spring. "I can reproduce musical sounds, father," declared the young man, in conclusion.

"How," said the older man, puffing thoughtfully at his pipe. "What about the voice?"

The young man considered for a few minutes, then looked up with shining eyes.

"If the air vibrations of the voice could set up electrical vibrations—" he began.

"You'd have it," declared the other positively.

Again the young man relapsed into silence, and again, looked up eagerly.

"Perhaps," he said, "with a membrane I might."

That, as nearly as can be determined, was the moment that the telephone was invented. The middle-aged man was Alexander Melville Bell, famous elocutionist, and the young man, his son, was Alexander Graham Bell.

"Brantford was my thinking place," said Dr. Bell, not long ago, discussing the invention of the telephone. "There I would go and spend my summer holidays and look over the line of experiments that had been made in Boston, and plan for the future. And in the summer of 1874, during my visit to my father's house in Brantford, discussing with my father the experiments I had made in Boston, relative to the reproduction of musical sounds by electricity for the purpose of multiple telegraph, the thought of the membrane telephone was elaborated. It was practically the same instrument that was shown in the patent. It was a theoretical conception of a magneto telephone, a very daring conception, if I may be allowed to say, so that the vibration of the voice might create electrical impulses like the aerial impulses, and produce an audible result at the other end. As a theoretical man I saw a speaking telephone, that theoretically we had the means of transmitting and reproducing speech in distant places."

Quaint Old Port Credit.

The news of the Government grant for harbor re-development has caused a renewal of interest in the picturesque little old town of Port Credit.

Except for a few small vessels, trading with stone and gravel there is little ship traffic at the harbor at present. The old piers have gone to wreck and the entrance is dangerous to large and small craft alike. For many years no tolls have been taken in view of the liability which the owners might incur if any vessels were damaged.

Port Credit has always been regarded as a suitable harbor of refuge in rough weather for small craft, and used to be the headquarters of the Canadian Yacht Club. Scores of yachts were at one time laid up in Port Credit during the winter for overhaul, but that, too, was discontinued, because of the bad state of repair, in which the harbor was allowed to remain.

The old harbor has an historical as well as a commercial interest, for the Indians had a wharf there over a century ago, and it was in the reign of George IV. that the charter was given for the harbors. The Hudson Bay Co. also had a post at this spot and made use of the port for many years.

Indians Are Prosperous.

At the recent Indian payday at Cape Croker, Ont., about $6,000, the annual allowance, was distributed among the claimants at the rate of $16 per head.

About 80 per cent. of the claimants were on hand to receive the money, the other 20 per cent. preferring to come the next day. Agent Duncan had a busy day while he and the chief did justice to all.

The Indians are prospering. This annuity comes handy at this season when seed has to be purchased. They all have farms which they are cultivating. Probably they sold $10,000 worth of timber this year, and besides nature has put large stores of fish in the Georgian Bay, and some of the Indians earn a great deal during the season, in fact as high as $1,00 and $1,200. In one day Robert Nadjewan caught 475 pounds which would mean between $35 and $40 to him, very good pay for a day's work.

Bisley Without Dominion Contingent Unthinkable Says Cheylesmore.

BISLEY, July 22. — Vociferous cheers greeted a speech by Col. Merril, commandant of the Australian contingent, at the general meeting of Bisley marksmen last night when he said that Australia would have nothing of the new conditions which the War Office had imposed on the National Rifle Association.

Col. Ross disclaimed any authority to speak for the Canadian Minister of Militia or the Dominion Rifle Association, but his personal knowledge, he said, convinced him that Canadian marksmen would not have any aspirations if the new conditions were imposed.

Lord Cheylesmore, the chairman, asked the overseas commandants to give him a written statement conveying their objections to put before the War Office. Bisley without a Canadian contingent, he added, would be unthinkable.

WOMAN HUNTS BIG GAME

Lady Hunter In London Tells of Jungle Thrills.

Long hours of "stalking," wearisome nights spent sitting over a "kill" awaiting the return of a panther and endless miles on the back of an elephant through thick jungle in quest of a tiger are amongst the incidents experienced by Mrs. Holmes-Tarn, who has just returned from India, whither she accompanied her husband on a shooting expedition, says The London Standard. The pursuit of big game is a sport which is attracting numbers of women.

The sportsman in India may shoot in two ways. There is the one which requires much preparation beforehand, when jungles are plentifully baited in advance with young buffalo to attract tigers to that spot ready for the guns, and there is the other when the sportsman chances his luck in a scratch beat, or a long stalk through the jungles, with a buffalo tied up at random on the chance of "drawing" a tiger. The later method, more sporting, if also more arduous, was adopted by Mrs. Holmes-Tarn and her husband.

Mrs. Holmes-Tarn's experiences of shooting are not, however, confined to India. She has probably had more all-round shooting experience than other women. "My first trip was to the Rocky Mountains, in Wyoming state," she said. "It was a rough trip; sometimes we slept on the ground in the snow. We were after deer, wapiti and bears." Later the speaker went to Canada where, amongst other animals, a moose and caribou fell to her rifle. East Africa is, however, her favorite hunting ground. A rhinoceros, shot with a .303 rifle, and an elephant and rhinoceros with a .400, are amongst her most prized African trophies.

"I was trapping small animals for the British Museum that trip," remarked Mrs. Holmes-Tarn, "and managed to capture two new general and ten rare species. Once when Mr. Cuninghame and I were out after elephant we were lost for 24 hours, dined off a zebra's liver roasted on sticks and only reached camp thanks to the help of a friendly herdsman. Another time it was touch and go whether we were charged by a herd of elephants, but, fortunately, they stampeded in the opposite direction. To my mind there is no country like East Africa for shooting. Snapshooting and stalking through the jungles in India may please people who have not shot anywhere else, but East Africa spoils you for other countries."

The Worst Writer.

Presiding at the annual dinner of the Readers' Pensions Committee Sir Frank Newnes related the result of an inquiry he had made with the object of finding out who was regarded as the worst writer among popular novelists of the day. Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's handwriting was described as "splendid," and one of the men called him "the proof reader's friend." Mr. Wells was described as "good," while Mr. W. W. Jacobs was "very tricky." When a reader was asked what he thought of Mr. Chas. Garvice's writing he went red and white, and stammered and shuffled, and finally said he was "fairly good." He really believed that the reader was doing his best for Mr. Garvice, and that what he meant was that his writing was very bad.

In a subsequent speech Mr. Garvice said he was once waiting in the office of a periodical for his weekly "screw" when a man came in, and, after finding out who he was, made a remark to the man behind the counter and went out scowling. Anxious to find out what the man had said he went over to the man behind the counter and asked him. The man replied, "'Oh, if you wish to know, he asked me who you were, and when I told him he said, 'I wish he was dead'." It appeared that the man was a proof reader.

Snail Food In London.

There is no reason why Londoners of modest means and adventurous taste should not eat snails, says a writer in an English newspaper. Snails may be had at several of the quite moderate Soho restaurants; I have eaten them (admirably cooked) as part of an eightpenny luncheon. There are also one or two shops in Soho where they may be brought ready prepared, and all you have to do is to carry them home and cook them. The trouble about snails is that if they are not skillfully cooked they are tough, and a tough snail is as bad as a whelk, which has been described as a mouthful that lasts half an hour. The snail has an original kind of flavor, not in the least like anything else. To eat him at his best he should be young and in excellent health.

Some Facial Resemblances.

Some notable coincidences of facial expressions as well as of character have occurred in celebrities born at different periods. Dion Boucicault, the actor and dramatist, was the very image of Sir Kenelm Digby, the seventeenth century philosopher. Douglas Jerrold and Montgolfier, the inventor of balloons, might have passed for twin brothers. Montagu Williams had only to don a flowing black periwig to become a perfect double of Charles II. as depicted by Sir Peter Lely. — London Daily Chronicle.

Western Methods.

The late Lord Strathcona used to tell a story of a merchant in the early days of the West who sold a shipment of goods to a dealer in one of the American frontier towns, and wrote a note stating that if he did not hear from him within ten days he would draw on him at sight.

"If you think you are any quicker in the draw than we are here," wrote the customer in reply, "try it on as soon as you like."

Heartless.

"That horrid woman broke up my home!" "Took away your husband?" "No; the cook."

THE ARMY WORM

On account of the crops in some districts being badly attacked by this pest, it is advisable for every farmer to be on the lookout and ready to combat it if it comes his way.

The army worm is about one and one-half inches long when fully grown, and is striped with black, yellow, and green, of a dingy appearance, and much resembling the cutworm. When detected, all efforts should be centred on keeping the worms out of crops not yet attacked. A deep furrow (several furrows are better) ploughed around the fields with the vertical or steep side of the furrow next to the crop to be protected, serves as a barrier to prevent the march of the worms, as they will not be able to crawl up the straight side of the furrow. Holes or pits should be dug in the bottom of the furrow every ten or twelve feet to catch the worms as they crawl along looking for a place to get out. They can then be destroyed with a blunt stick or by burning straw over them.

By thoroughly spraying or dusting a small strip of the crop in advance of the worms with Paris green, and liberally distributing poisoned bran (mixed at the rate of 50 pounds bran and one pound Paris green with enough molasses and water to sweeten it) large numbers may be destroyed. A field so poisoned must not be pastured until rain has thoroughly washed it. Whatever is done must be done quickly and at once, for a single day's delay may often mean the ruin of a valuable crop.

Vienna—a cariage belonging to the great Napoleon is at present in durance, under lock and key, having been impounded by the Australian authorities until its owner, Prince Blucher, pays up some thousands of pounds he owes in the way of taxes. Prince Blucher is a descendant of the famous Prussian leader, who went to Wellington's assistance at Waterloo, and the carriage was part of the booty which fell to his lot after the battle.

A BULLETIN ON CROPS

Ottawa, July 22. — In a bulletin issued by the Census and Statistics Office, revised estimates are given of the areas sown to spring crops this year, and of their condition on June 30, as well as estimates of the acreage under the later sown cereals and hoed crops, and of the numbers of farm live stock. The estimates are based upon returns collected from the crop reporting correspondents of the office at the end of June.

With regard to spring-grown crops, the estimates are fairly confirmatory of those issued a month ago, the areas of wheat, barley, mixed grains and hay and clover bring, however, somewhat less, and of oats, rye, peas and alfalfa somewhat more, than the preliminary estimates published a month ago, when it was reported as regards Eastern Canada, that seeding had been considerably delayed through the lateness of the spring.

Area Under Crops.

The area under wheat is now therefore, placed at 11,022,000 acres or 7,000 acres more than in 1913, Spring wheat occupies 10,045,700 acres, as compared with 10,045,000 acres in 1913, and the area to be harvested of fall wheat is placed at 973,300 acres last year, as compared with 970,000 acres last year. That under oats is placed at 110.814,500 acres, which is 380,500 acres more than in 1913, when the area sown was 468,000 acres more than in 1912. Barley is estimated to occupy 1,597,600 acres, as compared with 1,613,000acres last year; rye 111,280 acres, as compared with 119,300 acres; peas, 205,050 acres, as compared with 218,980 acres; mixed grains, 463,300 acres as compared with 473,000 acres; hay and clover, 7,997,000 acres, as compared with 8,169,000 acres, and alfalfa, 90,385 acres, as compared with 95,560 acres.

Northwest Provinces

For the three Northwest Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta the revised estimates of the wheat acreage is 10,063,500 acres, as compared with 10,036,000 acres last year, an increase being shown in Saskatchewan and Alberta but a decrease in Manitoba. Oats in the three Provinces occupy 6,106,000 acres, as compared with 5,792,000 acres in 1913, and barley 1,025,000 acres. The net increase in the three Provinces for the three crops is; wheat 27,500; oats, 314,000 and barley, 13,000 acres, a total of 354,500acres for the three crops. The largest increase of area in the three Provinces is for oats, 314,000 acres, which apparently shows that increased attention is being given to mixed farming.

Later Cereal Crops.

The acreage under the later sown cereal crops of 1914 are estimated as follows; Buckwheat, 354,000, as against 380,700 in 1913; flax, 1,163,000, as against 1,552,800; corn for husking, 256,000 against 278,000; beans, 43,830, against 46,200; potatoes, 475,900, against 473,500; turnips, etc., 175,000, against 186,400; sugar beets, 14,500, against 17,000; and corn for fodder, 317,000 against 303,650. It will be noted that the area under flaxseed is 398,800 acres less than last year.

The condition of spring-sown crops at the end of June was on the whole fairly satisfactory, except in regard to hay and clover, which, having been affected by the prolonged drought, has a standard condition of 73.7, as compared with 90.2 a month ago. All the other crops have receded from the high figure of June 1st, and at June 30th their condition in per cent. of the standard of 100, taken as representing the promise of a full crop, was as follows; Fall wheat 78.2; spring wheat, 86.3; all wheat, 84.5; oats, 87.3; barley, 86.2; rye 84.7; peas, 86.9; mixed grains, 87.3; alfalfa, 81.5, and pasture, 83.2. The condition of spring wheat is marked as high as 90 in Saskatchewan. Assuming the condition between now and harvest, will be equal to the average of the past six years, 1918-13, the percentage of the standard condition for wheat, rye, barley and oats represents the promise of yields per acre superior to the six-year average, in the case of spring wheat and barley by 3 per cent., and of rye by 1 per cent., equal to the average in the case of oats, and 1 per cent. inferior in the case of fall wheat.

Farm Live Stock.

Estimates compiled from the reports of correspondents as to the number of farm live stock at the end of June result for all Canada as follows; Horses, 2,547,738; milch cows, 2,673,286; other cattle, 3,363,521; sheep, 2,058,045, and swine, 3,434,261. As compared with last year these figures represent an increase in the case of horses, but a decrease for each of the other kinds of animals.

In making their estimates this year correspondents were requested to take specially into account the known large exportation to the United States of farm live stock consequent upon the reduction of the United States tariff last October, and, although many correspondents reported that new breeding stock will largely make up for deficiencies caused by these increases in the exports, it is apparent that the diminutions shown were caused by such exports. Tabulation of the returns by provinces shows that the decrease is mainly in the eastern part of Canada, since satisfactory increases in the number of live stock are shown for the north-west provinces, especially in Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Army Worm Makes its Appearance in Victoria

Lindsay Post.

A small outbreak of the army worm has been discovered on the farm of Mr. John Robertson, of the Scotch Line, South Verulam. So far the pest has been found only on a two acre piece of corn. A part of this has been pretty well stripped and the worms are gradually working across the field. Steps are being taken to poison them and to prevent their spreading by plowing a furrow round the field, throwing the earth towards the corn.

BUYERS SHARED AT CHEESE BOARD

One Factory Permitted to Sell off the Board

So anxious were the buyers that the total cost be kept down on the Cheese Board this morning that one of the factories did not dispose of its fortnight's make, and was given permission to sell off the Board.

Mr. G. A. Gillespie opened at 12 cents. W. S. Cook raised it to 12¼c, Mr. Flavelle 12 3-16c, Mr. John Riddell 12½c. Mr. Cook came back and boosted the price to 12 11-16c, and selected Villiers, Westwood, Ormonde, Daisy D., and Keene.

Mr. Morton offered 12⅝ for the balance, but Mr. Cook put forth his former price, and selected Norwood, Killarney, Warminster, Warsaw and Oakdale.

Mr. Flavelle then secured Myrtle, East Emily, Shearer, Fleetwood, and Indian River at 12 11-16c, while Mr. Morton took Selwyn, Young's Point, and Lang at 12⅝c. As there was no more bidding, Trewern was given permission to sell off the Board.

The factories boarded as follows: Keene 80; Warminster 30; Shearer 110; Selwyn 115; Villiers 86; Warsaw 105; Westwood [illegible]; Oakdale 75; Daisy. D. 90; Myrtle 120; Ormonde 120; Young's Point 57; Lang 80; Indian River [illegible]; East Emily 110; Norwood 160; Fleetwood 95; Killarney 60; Treewern 90. Total, 1,857.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

MINISTERS AT SOREL

Editor, Review:

Sir,—The other day there was a great meeting at Sorel, Quebec, addressed by Hon. L. P. Pelletier, Postmaster General; Hon .B. Nantel, Minister of Inland Revenue, and, Hon. Louis Coderre, Secretary of State. I would be obliged if you would publish the following raport in the Montreal Star;

A READER.

In regard to the Borden naval policy, Mr. Pelletier proceeded, he had done what he considered any man would do. "Sir Robert Borden," he added, "has given his promise that the country will be consulted before we embark on a permanent naval policy. And I declare that my fellow-countrymen should regard it as a sacred duty not to be behind the other portions of the Empire on the great question. The time has come for us to realize that we are an integral part of the Empire, prepared to assume our responsibilities."

Stand on the Naval Policy

The Hon. Louis Coderre, Secretary of State, declared that but for the action of the Senate, $2,700,000 would have gone to the improvement of roads; and further evidence of the interest of the Government in the farmer would be found in the assistance to schools in which instruction was given in agriculture.

In reference to charges of corruption in his election in Hochelaga, Mr. Coderre said:

"I have been charged with having stolen my election in Hochelaga. I have not been in political life long, but long enough to know there was scarcely ever a Federal or provincial election where charges of corruption were not made. It may be that in the course of the contest in Hochelaga certain frauds were committed, but do you remember with what a majority my opponent was defeated? You may steal a few votes—ten votes or a hundred votes—but you cannot steal the majority that I obtained. Furthermore, when the charges against me were debated in the House of Commons, four days still remained in which a Liberal or a Nationalist might have contested my return. But no one attempted to take such a step.

"I have no regrets on my attitude over the naval policy," Mr. Coderre proceeded. "I opposed the Laurier policy which would have created a permanent force without first consulting the people. I am opposed to it still. The policy of the Government does not provide for a permanent force, and Sir Robert Borden has promised that there will be no permanent policy without the electors first being consulted."

SACRED HEART SOCIAL FINANCIAL SUCCESS

That the Sacred Heart Lawn Social held a week ago last evening was a large success has been generally recognized, but the fact is more fully shown by a glance at the following figures:

Gross receipts	$2012.98
Total expenses	240.67
Total profit	$1772.31

Such success has never before been realized and if the social keeps forging ahead with the same lengthy strides, it will be one of Peterboro's most important annual events.

The Devil is Being Given A Hot Battle in This City

If Billy Sunday were to come to Peterborough, what would he say? The famous evangelist might remark that the devil was having a hot time of it here, or something to that effect. He might embellish his statement with specimens of his own peculiar vocabulary that would startle some of those who are engaged in the heated battle against the Evil One.

A look at the situation convinces one that it is some battle. On a Sunday evening there is a show of much hostility toward the keeper of what some people call hell, while others prefer to say Hades.

There are three Presbyterian churches, four Methodist, three Roman Catholic, two Baptist, four Anglican, one First Church of Christ Scientist, and the Free Methodists Then there is the Bethany Tabernacle, the Gospel Hall, and last, but by no means the least, the Salvation Army.

Added to these are several open air meetings and from each the call goes forth for man to seek the straight and narrow path. Several members of the Plymouth Brethren sing and exhort at a brief meeting held on George Street at the foot of the stairway leading to their hall. Detachments of the Salvation Army are also to be heard as the churchgoer wends his way to the evening service. Several members of another denomination, numerically small in this city, at all events, have selected the corner of George and Hunter Streets for their open air meeting and again the call goes forth.

After the regular church services, others follow. Members of the Gospel Hall hold service in Central Park and further down the street, the pastor of Bethany Tabernacle and his workers sing and speak.

And still they come. At the Grand Opera House, the movies provided by Pastor Russell of Brooklyn, N.Y., tell the story of the creation and subsequent happenings, all of which is very interesting. The local followers of Pastor Russell also have a room over the Nugent Drug Co. store.

During the week, while the program is not so extensive, there is still evidence that the fight continues. The Salvation Army is out almost every evening, the Gospel Wagon of the Bethany Tabernacle is used and open air meetings are held. Down at the foot of Dublin Street, the Seventh Day Adventists hold forth in a large tent, all of which goes to show that if it is not Peterboro the Good, it is apparently not the fault of those who would have it so.

EXACT COPY OF CORONATION CHAIR EXISTS IN TORONTO

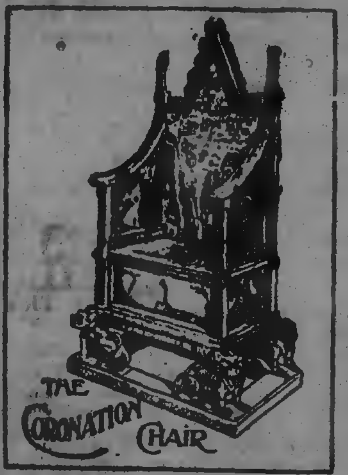
Historic Seat of British Kings Which Was Damaged Recently by Suffragette Bomb Has Suffered Greatly From Time and Vandals

The attempt by militant suffragettes to destroy with a bomb the historic Coronation Chair in Westminster Abbey, may prove to be the "last straw," so far as the toleration of the British public is concerned. An ornamental spike on the back of the chair, about a foot long, was blown away, and a splinter of wood, six by three inches, was ripped off, leaving a ragged edge. The pieces can be repaired.

Yet even if the chair had been utterly destroyed its form would not have been lost because an exact replica of the chair, with all its markings, is to be found in the J. Ross Robertson collection at the Toronto Public Library.

The original chair was made in 1297 by order of King Edward I., when he brought the regalia of Scotland and the Stone of Scone to Westminster. In this chair all the sovereigns of England have been crowned since that date. It is defaced with initials cut by the boys of Westminster School, some hundreds of years ago, on the centre panel and on the seat of the chair.

The boys of Westminster school have a privilege that is possessed by no other schoolboys in the world. That is, they have a right to be present at all coronations in the Abbey.



These boys had also a privilege that was not given them by royal or by any other authority. It was a privilege that they monopolized for a great many years. In brief, it was the right that they claimed to cut, carve and otherwise deface the oaken chair in which the Kings of England have been crowned for so many centuries. It is the wonder of these days how the boys could have been permitted to make these defacements.

From the dates, names and initials cut on the chair, it looks very much as if the youngsters who were at school between 1700 and 1840 did most of the work. Probably little of the work was done between 1800 and 1840, for there is only one cutting, that of "V.R." that would indicate so late a cutting in connection with the accession of the late Queen Victoria to the throne.

There is not very much written concerning these defacements. It is known that many of the boys had narrow escapes from discipline when the masters were in evidence. The boy who seems to have had the most serene time during the past century was one named "Abbott," who slept in the chair in 1800, and he hands down to history that fact by carefully cutting the announcement that he slept in the chair in that year.

The only boy whose name is traceable is that of Mayne. No one would think for a moment that an eminent divine and poet would do so barbarous an act as cut his name in the King's Chair, and yet we find that the Rev. Jasper Mayne, the poet and divine, and chaplain of Charles II., was the young man who used his jack-knife on this occasion. Other names are so far unknown.

The initials cut in various parts of the panels and seats give no indication of the family name. Probably the only way that these names could be traced would be by a very careful examination of the register rolls of the school from probably 1650 or 1570 down to 1837.

The decorations, few of which can now be seen were made by Master Walter, one of the artists of the Painted Chamber in Westminster Palace, by order of Edward I., in the year 1300. The chair is 6 feet 7 in. in height, 2 feet deep, the seat 2 feet 6 inches wide. The reproduction in Toronto is made of English oak 600 years old.

The stone shown under the seat is a reproduction of the famous "Stone of Destiny," the Stone of Scone. Tradition endeavors to identify it as the stone upon which Jacob rested his head at Bethel, and that it found its way to Ireland 700 B.C., and in 850 A. D. to Scotland.

But all these statements as to the origin of the stone and its travels are absolutely mythical. There is no doubt that Skene, the historian, in his monograph (1869), in which he discusses all the legends about the stone and its origin, is correct in his opinion that the stone is Scottish sandstone, and was originally quarried from the rocks near Scone.

Sometimes it is a pleasure to answer questions, even if the questioner may put them in an unpleasant way.

MORE DISTRICTS SUFFER.

Battle Against Army Worm Is Going on Apace.

TORONTO, July 22. — Yesterday brought reports from still more districts in rural Ontario of grave inroads by the army worm upon the field crops. Sections neighboring Brantford, Bolton, Galt, Guelph, Ingersoll, Aurora, Woodstock and Berlin are fighting the worm. Now it has started on its destructive march in Etobicoke Township. Though there has been suggestion of a province-wide campaign against the army worm by the Ontario Department of Agriculture, nothing so comprehensive has been done. Each district seems to be fighting its own fight. The Ontario Agricultural College at Guelph and the Department's district representatives are leading the farmers in the fight.

Some township and county councils have voted sums of money to give the army worm battle. Reports indicate that the farmers, in whose fields the army worm are working, are vigorously battling with it, but nothing is said of efforts to offset the worm before it places the crop in serious danger.

Reports last night from the affected districts show the outbreak very little, if at all, lessened.

Contractor Accuses ex-Provincial Secretary of N. B.

ST. JOHN, N.B., July 22. — John Scott, of Scott & Kelly, a sub-contractor on the Valley Railway, testifying before the royal commission, accused Hon. H. F. MacLeod, M.P., ex-Provincial Secretary, of asking and receiving graft.

The commission allowed the witness to produce his first contract with the Hibbards. MacLeod said they could get part of the work on the upper end and at better prices. He thought he could get it at 26 cents, and if he could there ought to be a consideration. "I asked what the consideration would be and he mentioned $100 a mile."

Witness said that on June 3 they saw MacLeod and told him they decided to take the work (about thirteen miles.) "He told us that no contracts could be given without his consent. We held out for 27 cents. He promised to try to get 27 cents instead of 26, but if he could get it he thought we should split it. I said that would be satisfactory to me. The extra cent would make $3,000 and half of that would be for him." On MacLeod's suggestion it was agreed that witness leave it with Major Massie, manager of the Bank of Montreal.

"On the day after his election I told him I would be paying soon, and he said it was a good time, as the election bills would be coming in. On June 27 I sent the $1,500 by express to Major Massie to be paid to MacLeod." The receipt was produced. Witness told of meeting MacLeod later. MacLeod said he had got the money.

"Was it necessary to pay this money to get the contract?"

"I confidently believed so, after what happened to us on the first contract. We got it, but it was taken away from us, and we did not want that to happen again. We did not pay anything for that contract."

Offer May Be Reopened.

KINGSTON, July 22. — Mayor Shaw is endeavoring to have Queen's University reopen negotiations with Major Leonard regarding military residences for Queen's students. He had an interview with Mr. Leonard in St. Catharines and the latter is willing to have the matter reopened, but insists on the board of management, consisting of three representatives from Queen's and three military men, including himself, commandant of the Royal Military College and the officer in command of the third military division.

PREMIER ASQUITH MAY SUBMIT NEW PROPOSAL

LONDON, July 22.—In compliance with the King's summons, which all speak of, in accordance with the time-honored tradition as a "command," the eight party leaders most vitally concerned with a settlement of the Home Rule deadlock, met at Buckingham Palace yesterday for the purpose of trying to reach an agreement.

The King received them with a speech, which also according to constitutional custom, was framed by the Prime Minister. In this speech the King pointed out the seriousness of the situation and the narrow margin of difference which now exists, and expressed the hope of a friendly solution of all difficulties.

The eight leaders, some of whom were not on speaking terms, included John Redmond, the Irish Nationalist leader, and John Dillon, who never before had come into personal contact with the King. They discussed the situation for more than an hour and then adjourned.

The mere fact that they will have another meeting shows that as far as the principals are concerned — and the principals are, of course, the leaders of the Liberal and Conservative parties — an agreement is in sight. But agreement by principals does not portend by any means a definite settlement of any scheme for the future Government of Ireland.

The Conservatives have the Ulster covenanters, represented in the conference by Sir Edward Carson and Capt. James Craig, to reckon with, and Premier Asquith cannot deliver any goods without the consent of the Home Rule leaders, Redmond and Dillon. Moreover, the Labor party, which is an important faction of the Premier's present majority in the House of Commons, is in revolt, and there is a bolting contingent in his own party.

Politicians who are conversant with the inside workings predict that if the conference reaches any agreement, the House of Commons will throw it out.

The fact that the Prime Minister considered it necessary to resort to such a conference is hailed by his opponents as a virtual surrender on his part. His opponents prophesy and his Radical supporters fear that he will consent to Carson's loudly proclaimed ultimatum of a clear-cut exclusion of the whole of Ulster from the projected new Irish Government.

Parliamentary experts assert that if such an agreement is laid before the House of Commons it will be defeated, because Mr. Asquith's majority is dependent upon the Irish and and Labor members, with several bolting Liberals, will vote against it. Under those circumstances a general election must follow, and so convinced are the Unionists of a general election that they have sent messages to all the party workers to be prepared for such an election within three weeks.

Sir Edward Carson and John Redmond are not in the conference as free agents. They represent their supporters, the Orange Ulstermen and the Catholic Nationalists respectively, and both Irish factions are in an attitude of no surrender.

There was an outburst of growling and warnings against the King by the Liberal papers yesterday. To people who do not understand English conditions, it might have looked as though the monarchy were threatened. But this happens inevitably under similar circumstances. In England the balance of power is so adjusted that all factors are remorselessly jealous of anything that looks like an attempt of one branch of the Government to trespass upon the prerogatives of another branch.

Factions In Fighting Mood.

LONDON, July 22—Messages from all parts of Ireland say that the Nationalists and the Orangemen are absolutely at the fighting point, and will not listen to talk of a compromise.

TERRIBLE IVAN'S LIBRARY.

Supposed Burned In 1812, May Be Still In Existence.

A short time ago a professor of theology in the university at St. Petersburg purchased at a shop in Moscow a manuscript copy of the Gospel dating from prior to A. D. 1000. On examination it was found to have belonged to the great library collected in his youth by Ivan the Terrible, when he believed that he had a divine mission. This library was supposed to have been burned in the great fire of Moscow of 1812.

On a subsequent visit to Moscow the professor traced his book to the family of a laborer, who said that he had found it with several similar volumes in a subterranean passage near the Kremlin.

The famous library of Ivan the Terrible is now supposed to be still hidden in some underground vault, which the efforts of generations have hitherto failed to discover. It was Ivan the Terrible—whose reputation as a great ruler has been obscured by the fascination of his extraordinary excesses—who established the printing press in Russia.

There is a wide field of conjecture as to what might not come to light in the event of this curious library one day being discovered. Ivan the Terrible was in close communication with all the rulers from London to Pekin. One branch of knowledge is almost certain to be well represented in this lost library, and that is the science of black magic. It is equally likely that new codices of Holy Scripture may yet come to light, for Ivan the Terrible undertook to print the Scriptures in the vulgar tongue. Only one thing is certain, that such a library existed and has never been found, nor is it even known to have perished in any of the numerous fires that devastated Moscow. References in the archives to its existence, as well as to the existence of the subterranean roadways, are sufficient to whet the keenest curiosity, but not enough to afford much practical assistance to the investigator.

SOME HINTS ABOUT LIGHTNING RODS

The protection of buildings from lightning is undoubtedly as important as the protection of transmission lines, still it is a matter to which little attention has been given. Where protection for buildings is provided at all it is usually inadequate, and, in many cases, the danger is increased rather than diminished. The following are thought by the Colorado Agricultural College to be the correct answers to some of the questions usually asked about lightning rods:

1. Should buildings in cities have lightning protectors?

Ans. No. On account of the increasing number of steel buildings and overhead wires, city buildings are reasonably safe. Contrary to the general belief, telephone and power lines offer splendid protection against lightning.

2. How many rods should be provided?

Ans. The more the better. Four rods and four ground connections should be satisfactory for a building 40 x 75 feet.

3. What kind of material should be used?

Ans. Probably copper is a better material where the air is full of gas and smoke. There seems to be no advantage in having a stranded cable. A solid rod is as efficient and is cheaper. In the country galvanized iron rods, or even galvanised iron pipe would be entirely satisfactory. The claim frequently made that copper should be used on account of its high electrical conductivity is not correct since the actual ohmic resistance of the material used has little to do with the efficiency of the rod.

4. What should be the shape and size of the rods?

Ans. Round rods or pipe are preferable. Sharp bends should be avoided as much as possible. The rods should terminate in a number of points five or six feet above the top of the roof. There is very little advantage in expensive sharp-pointed polished points.

5. How should ground connections be made?

Ans. In the majority of cases a galvanized iron pipe driven a few feet into the ground is entirely satisfactory.

6. Is it safe to stand near a lightning rod during a storm?

Ans. No.

7. Is it safe to stand in a draft during a storm?

Ans. No!

FREAK OF NATURE.

There was born at Didsbury, Alta., on the evening of June 1st a colt with a deformed head. The body of the colt was perfect, but the head was of the same formation as that of a sheep, with the exception of the lower jaw, which was shaped in the usual and natural manner. The animal was blind and had no nostrils, the only method of respiration being through the mouth. The animal was fed upon milk and was apparently healthy and strong, but only continued to live for about 36 hours. It appears that the mare was scared of sheep, and this is apparently the only reason by which this freak of nature can be accounted for.

Certainly no patient could receive a dose of medicine like that prescribed to Brown and have the patience to take it. Yet Brown's doctor was a land speculator. "One half down and the balance every six months for four years."

Life In Liberia.

The food supply of the African state of Liberia is so bad that a well known resident says he "resides in Liberia, but boards in Europe." The annual rainfall exceeds 160 inches and the climate is extremely enervating. Malaria prevails in a disastrous form, yet the Europeans living there are astonishingly indifferent, neglecting to mosquito proof their homes.

The Store That Satisfies

THE SPORTING WORLD

SENATORS STRETCHED FEWER HITS INTO FOUR COUNTERS

Despite the fact that Ken Tracey held the Senators to six hits, while Kubat was touched for nine, the Ottawa outfit took the second game of the series yesterday afternoon at Riverside Park. The Petes were out to win on account of dropping Monday's game, but they couldn't hit when hits meant runs. On the other hand, Ottawa had the breaks, and that alone won them the game.

Tracey held the visitors hitless till the fourth innings, when Mitchell secured a single, but died going to third. In the fifth. Cosy Dolan cracked out a double, but was left at the keystone sack, while in the sixth not a man reached first. The seventh opened with Shaughnessy at bat, and he was safe on Fox's error. Stewart sacrificed him to second, and then the big pilot sprung a sensation and stole third. Lage hit to Tracey, who threw to third to get Shag. The big fellow dodged back and forth between the sacks until Tracey dropped a throw at the plate, which permitted him to score. In sliding in, however, Shag twisted his ankle and had to be assisted to the bench. Dolan, the next man up, singled, scoring Lage, but a fast double on Nill's grounder to Byrne brought the session to a close.

The visitors made the total four in the ninth, when Rogers and Powers, who had replaced Shaughnessy at centre, singled, and Stewart got a walk. Lage then poked out a single, and the former two crossed the rubber.

Kubat, the big southpaw, who twirled for the opposition, was hit fairly freely all through, but no score resulted excepting in the seventh, when Byrne doubled, and scored on Fox's single. Both teams gave excellent support, the outfield being especially prominent. Welsh's catch of Nill's long fly in the ninth, and Lefty Rogers' one-hand stab of a drive from Welsh's bat in the third brought the fans to their feet.

Jack Mitchell, the kid shortstop of the Senators, had his first error in the Canadian League when he threw low to first, after gathering in a bounder from Dolan's bat in the eighth. The boy from Adrian covers lots of ground and is fast on the paths. He is a little foreign to the diamonds on the circuit, but in the course of a few series he should prove all the good things that have been said about him.

Mercantile League Games on Saturday

Two fast Mercantile League games are billed for Saturday afternoon at Riverside Park. At two o'clock the De Laval clash with the Printers, while at four the Red Caps and Wm. Hamiltons meet. The Drafting Room won from the De Laval, but fell before the Printers, so what showing the south end factory will make against the speedy newspapermen remains to be seen.

Art. Hall, who officiated in several of the games in that league last year, previous to his departure from the city, will be on the job to umpire the double header on Saturday. Fans who have not witnessed any of the Mercantile League ball games this season should take a look and get a line on some fast amateur pastime.

Victory is sure to perch on the banner of the chap who never lets doubt creep into his heart.

COMMENT

As You Like It

St. Thomas refused to sell Roy Wilkinson to Ottawa, and Peterboro refused to think of letting Louie Schettler out. There is a possibility of Ottawa getting Bob Sterling, as the Peterboro club has five high-salaried gunmen on its string.—Ottawa Citizen.

Hal Chase, stellar first baseman, formerly of the Chicago White Sox, is free to play baseball with the Federal League. Justice Herbert P. Bissell, in supreme court yesterday granted the motion to vacate the temporary injunction obtained by organized baseball to stop Chase from playing with the Buffalo Federals.

Gabby Ivers, the Brantford first-baseman, will join the Hamilton ball team and will hold down the initial sack for the Hams. This is the result of a trade which Manager Jack White pulled off with Manager Deneau, of the Brants, by which Hamilton gets Ivers in exchange for Roy, Dudley and Barrett.

Lawn Bowling

More bowlers are appearing lately at the Brock street bowling green than earlier in the season. They are getting in shape for tournaments.

CENTRAL ONTARIO BOWLING TOURNAMENT HERE IN AUGUST

The fourth annual tournament of the Central Ontario Lawn Bowling Association will be staged on the grounds of the Peterborough club, commencing Monday, August 3rd, at 9.30 a.m.

Invitations are being sent out to bowling clubs of Central Ontario, and it is expected a large number of trundlers will be on hand.

The Peterborough club will endeavor to defend the Stratton trophy, won last year, as two consecutive wins lands the silverware for keeps. Along with this trophy goes four thermos sets, and second prize is four cut-glass water pitchers and half a dozen glasses. This is the premier event, and stiff competition is assured. All games except the final of 16 ends, will be 12 ends.

The consolation prizes are: First, four thermos bottles; second, four cut-glass berry bowls; third, four pairs of brass candlesticks. The following gentlemen have been asked to act as umpires, to decide all questions or disputes:

A. Lambert, Oshawa; J. Deyman, Bowmanville; Dr. Aldrich, Port Hope; D. Moore, Peterborough; E. W. Hargraft, Cobourg; R. K[illegible], Toronto; Dr. McWilliams, Toronto; J. C. Kells, Millbrook.

W. Allan of Cobourg is president of the association, and R. J. Soden of this city is secretary treasurer.

LAWN TENNIS

On the Brock street tennis courts the players are beginning to come out in larger numbers. It is hoped that such will continue, so that good contests may be staged with other clubs when the tournaments start.

Coaching Revived.

In spite of the ever-increasing popularity of motors, coaching is by no means on the decline. As a matter of fact, there is a tendency among society people to revive the coaching trips, and during the coming summer between 40 and 50 coaches will be run regularly in the London districts.

Australian Marksmen Carry off Kolapore Cup

[illegible] CAMP, July 22.—(C.A.[illegible] Cable.)—The Canadian total in the Kolapore Cup competition was 253, Australia's 255, England's 249, India's 247, Guernsey 240.

This match finished under exciting conditions. Canada, among the three leading competitors, finished firing first, and when the Mother Country closed down a minute later, Canada was four points ahead. The Australians, however, who shot slowly, had several shots to go, managed to overtake the Canadians by two points. Reservist Cross scored the highest Australian aggregate of 99.

When the Australians were declared winners the Canadians heartily cheered the victors. Australia twice previously won the Kolapore Cup in 1902 and 1903. This year's winning aggregate is 14 points behind that of last year, when the Mother Country won.

The Worse Golfer.

An amusing incident was witnessed on the Braid Hill golf course. A gentleman, evidently a tiro, was going over the course, making futile attempts to propel the ball in the direction required, and, indeed, sometimes missing it.

His caddie meekly followed at his heels while he continued his exertions, and eventually the gentleman broke one of his clubs. At this he turned round and remarked deprecatingly to his caddie: "I don't suppose there are many worse players than I?" "Oh, ay, sir," responded the caddie "but I dinna think they play."

A Rabbit and a Whistle.

Did you know that a short, sharp whistle from the mouth would stop a rabbit? It surely does. Next time you see little Molly Cottontail leap from her burrow and make off don't shoot; just whistle. Whether from fear or curiosity I cannot tell, but she will stop still in her tracks. An antelope has been known to do likewise. An African hunter once said that the elephant is the most timid of all animals and can be frightened into a cold sweat by a mysterious noise.

Give Them a Chance.

Judge Hanington, when leader of the Opposition in the New Brunswick Legislature, representing the County of Westmoreland, was once delivering a vigorous address in the House against some measure of the Government, then led by Mr. Blair.

"Oh, that my constituents in Westmoreland could hear me now!" exclaimed the Opposition leader in violent tones.

Mr. Blair motioned to an attendant.

"Open the windows," he said.

DAMAGES FOR THE "MISSUS."

A man had taken his wife for a trip on a motor 'bus. There was a smash, and a number of people were injured. Some time afterwards he met a friend, who said, "Hello, did you get any damages out of that motor accident you were in?"

"Oh, yes," he said; "I got damages. I got $500 for myself and $350 for the missus."

"The missus?" said the friend. "Was she injured?"

"Oh, yes," he said. "She was injured. I had the presence of mind to hit her a clip on the head just before we were rescued."

NEWS NOTES FROM KEENE

Keene, July 23.—Mr. W. H. Lytle, who has the contract for the Otonabee Rural Telephone system, expects to have about twenty-five phones in operation about July the 20th. He is rapidly pushing the work, so as to complete the system as quickly as possible.

There are now 135 subscribres and it is expected when the system is completed it will reach 200 as a great many non-subscribers will see the advantages their neighbors have through the use of the phone. The farmers will find that the phone is indispensable. The expected cost of the entire system will be about $11,000. Dividing this among 175 subscribers it will cost each in the neighborhood of $63.00, taking a trifle over 10 years to pay for the share of the phone, which the subscribers will practically own. The line, it is understood, will extend from Keene, first west, then east, then south. The Central will be in the building of Mrs. William Macfarlane, and Miss Belle Macfarlane will be in charge. The commissioners are Mr. William Anderson (Reeve), Ford Easson, sec.-treas., and Mr. David Armstrong, Monaghan.

Mr. Pently of Peterboro will fill the pulpit of the Keene Methodist Church next Sunday evening.

Mr. John Kempt and mother, Mrs. Wm. Kempt, were in Peterboro last Friday.

Miss Kathleen Sutton, who has been spending the past month with her sister, Mrs. A. K. Edmison, returned to her home at Demerestville on Saturday.

Rev. and Mrs. F. T. Goodwill returned home on last Thursday from Toronto, where they have been the past three weeks.

Miss Jennie Plunkett of New York is spending her holidays at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Mark Plunkett.

BUILDING FELL OFF

There was a large decrease in building operations throughout Canada in 1913 as compared with 1912, according to figures obtained by the Labor Department from its correspondents in 100 localities.

In 1913 the amount of new buildings was $178,069,838. a decrease of $45,666,539. All the provinces, with the exception of Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Quebec, show a decrease. In three provinces there were gains of $190,400, $1,843,550 and $2,202,511 respectively. The decreases in the other provinces were as follows: Nova Scotia $118,757, Ontario $1,908,826, Manitoba $2,608,792, Saskatchewan $9,675,115, Alberta $17,183,007 and British Columbia $18,408,603.

Out of the 36 localities in Western Canada for which comparative statistics were obtained, 30 show a decrease.

In nearly all the big centres throughout Canada building operations reached the high water mark in 1912. The one outstanding exception is in the case of St. John, N.B., where an increase of $1,843,550 over the 1912 figures is reported.

IMPROVISED TIRE CHAINS HELP ONE MOTORIST CAUGHT IN MUD

Tire Casing Straps and Plush Robes Wound Around Wheels Saves Him From All Night Stay on Dark Road.

About the worst hole I ever got out of, says one auto'st, was last fall when I started for town, five miles away, to meet the 11 o'clock evening train. I had washed the car that day as well as the chains and had hung them in the shed to dry. When I started out that night my father told me I had better put the chains on before I left, but, of course, I—Willie Wise—said, "Oh I will wait until I have to." So I started out.

About three miles from home there is a slough a half mile long and, of course, all that rain of last fall mixed up with four horse grain loads, with the road bed six inches lower than the sides, made a rattling good combination for a car, believe me.

There had been two cars stuck in that hole by the culvert that day but I did not know it. When I got to it, it looked bad and I got out, went ahead, and said to myself, "Oh, if you raise some speed you can get through all right." But she slid. I kept on trying to back and go ahead until I saw there was no use, so I raised the cushion to get the chains, hook them around the wheels and slide them under, when lo and behold my chains were hanging in the shed dry and perfectly clean, and the whole car on the ground except the rear wheel which I could turn by hand.

There were some planks and pieces of boards which the other cars and grain loads had used, or rather tried to use and broken up. I stuck some short pieces between the spokes but could only make about three inches at a time, so that didn't work. A neighbor came along and said, "Let us lift the front end out of the rut to where it is high and dry." I forgot to say that I was within a foot of the ditch with two feet of water in it. But when he took hold of the wheel, he heaved a big sigh and said "I guess you are in for all night unless you hire someone to pull you out."

But not yet. I had an extra casing strapped on the side with two good straps and one cow hide, and one plush-lined, perfectly white, horsehide robe. I strapped these to the hind wheel, wrapped them around the tread and strapped them again. Then I had a wheel with about a ten inch tire.

"Now she'll come," thought I. "Oh no," says he.

But, dear reader, she pulled. I made the train, got two passengers, took another road home that was flat but not travelled, and when I would see water ahead, I would step on her tail and hit it fast enough to get through.

BRIDGE IS A HUMORIST AND ONE OF ENGLAND'S LEADING WITS

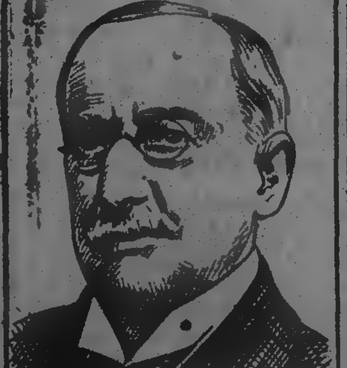
Sir Frederick Tells of the Wesleyan Hymn Book Committee, Which Did Not Wish to Disturb Handel In the Abbey — The Reversed Piano Roll Which Mystified the Music Lovers.

Columns could be filled with jokes—good, bad, and indifferent—which have been ascribed to Sir Frederick Bridge, the organist at Westminster Abbey, who has been cordially congratulated recently by his many friends on his engagement to be married. Sir Frederick, who began his musical career at the age of six by singing in the choir at Rochester Cathedral, has long been recognized as one of the leading humorists of the profession.

I remember, writes a London journalist, during a chat we had at his residence in the Cloisters at Westminster Abbey, asking Sir Frederick not long ago what he considered to be the most amusing experience of his career.

"It is a somewhat difficult question to answer," he replied, "but I don't think I was ever more amused than when, a few years ago, a certain committee drew up a new Wesleyan hymn book, the tunes for which I edited. It was an artful committee. They submitted to me a tune which they declared was by Handel. It was so bad, however, that I sent it back, with the intimation that, if it were included in the book, every time it was rendered in the new Methodist Church House Handel would turn in his grave in the Abbey.

"The committee submitted it again, this time with the promise that if I would include the tune it should be marked to be sung pianissimo at the Wesleyan Church House, so as not to disturb Handel in the Abbey.



SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.

"Equally amusing, perhaps, was an incident which occurred in connection with an automatic piano which I once listened to. It had played one or two records quite well; at least, everybody was able to identify the tunes without difficulty. But one piece we could not make head or tail of. The others sat round with that rapt attention peculiar to people who are listening to classical music—particularly if they don't understand it. I whispered to one of the ladies, 'What is it playing?'

"'Bach's Fugue in G minor,' she whispered back.

"Then it was discovered that the record had been put in upside down and was being played backwards!"

Sir Frederick is also very happy in his speeches at times, and not long ago he gave some advice in a humorous vein to the students of Trinity College of Music, as to how they should act when they began the serious business of their profession.

"Don't let your profession turn you into an ascetic prig," he remarked, when warning them of some "vulgar errors," "and don't let your hair grow too long. Beginners usually come up for examination looking like ordinary human beings, but if they make the slightest progress in a few months their hair is never brushed and seldom cut. Your brains will not be any better for a big and ugly head of hair."

And among other things he warned them against bursting out into "some abnormal German dress with true-lovers' knots flopping about."

Another illustration of Sir Frederick's sense of humor is provided by a little parody entitled, "Labby in Our Alley," which he wrote to the tune of "Sally in Our Alley" and sang at one of the Coronation Choir dinners in 1902.

It was written at a time when Mr. Labouchere resided near the Abbey. There were three verses, the last being as follows:—

The Ministers and members all
  Made game of truthful Labby,
Though but for him 'tis said they'd be
  A sleepy set and flabby.
And when their seven long years are out
  They hope to bury Labby;
Ah! then how peacefully he'll lie—
  But not in our Abbey.

Temperance Wave In England.

The temperance crusade long carried on in England is finally meeting with success. The latest statistics show a reduction of 412,000 kegs of ale compared with the last year quotations. At the same time the quantity of distilled liquors decreased by a third.

Always on Hand.

Stranger—The stock in this jewelry store seems to be pretty low down. Do you suppose I could get any sort of ring here?

Wag—Certainly. Rings are things always kept on hand.

Old Theatre Shut Down.

To the great regret of all theatre-lovers, London's oldest theatre, Sadler's Wells, has been shut down, and is in future to become a picture palace. "I was afraid it was doomed," Mr. G. E. Belmont (otherwise known as "Barnum's Beauty") remarked the other day about the theatre in his cosy hostel, not a hundred miles from Shaftesbury avenue. Mr. Belmont opened Sadler's Wells twenty-one years ago, on the twice-nightly plan, and ran it successfully for eight and a half years. In fact, he claims to be the only person since Samuel Phelps produced his Shakespearean plays there who has made the theatre pay.

A Long Continued Tribute.

In the cloisters of Westminster Abbey is a tombstone which has been polished every morning and decorated afresh with a bunch of flowers for nearly five years. It is over the grave of the late Mrs. Wilberforce, wife of the present Archdeacon of Westminster, who died May 15, 1909. Never a morning has passed but a fresh floral tribute has been laid on it, and more than 1,800 days have passed since May, 1909.

Drought In Guiana.

The severe drought that began the latter part of 1911 and lasted until April of the following year caused smaller yields in 1912 of the agricultural products in British Guiana and affected the lumbering, balata, cattle and mining industries through added difficulties of transportation. There being no roads in the interior, all transportation is by water.

Got Even With the Clerk.

Mr. Jawback—This gown is not becoming to you, and it is expensive. Why did you buy it?

Mrs. Jawback—Because the clerk looked as if he thought I couldn't afford it.

IN "INJU-LAND"

British Engineers Are Now Building a Bailway in Nigeria.

A new railroad is being constructed by the British through the territory of Nigeria, in West Africa.

It will penetrate the region known as "Juju-land," so called because the inhabitants were long enthralled by a horrible idol known as "Long Juju," white flesh is the finest kind of sacrifice.

It will be built by cannibal natives who have shown themselves the most intelligent and industrious workmen. It will open up the last region of Africa where white men have not yet settled.

The new line into Nigeria will be 530 miles in length and will take four to five years to build. It will cost about $15,000,000. It is being built by the Colonial Government, of which the head is Sir Frederick Lugard. The country which is to be opened up is rich in palm oil and coal, which the British expect to yield a handsome revenue on the money invested in the road.

Fifty thousand natives have been hired for the work of building the road. They will work under the direction of British engineers and foremen. Doubtless some Americans will be associated with the enterprise.

These natives of Nigeria are noted for their obstinate cannibalism. Although the practice has been suppressed wherever possible by the British officials, the Nigerians in the depths of this wild country frequently find an opportunity to indulge in their peculiar taste. They attack an isolated village, destroy the houses and feast upon the inhabitants.

Sometimes they take their victims to a lonely part of the forest, keep them in a corral and fatten them up for a great banquet. Several times the white men have accidentally stumbled upon the hiding place of these destined victims of the cannibals.

Many explorers and scientists have asserted that the cannibal tribes of Africa, were more industrious, courageous and intelligent than their innocent neighbors. The brutal and unscrupulous exploiters of the Congo Free State, under King Leopold, took advantage of this fact by employing cannibals to lead and drive the other natives. The white men, it has been asserted, deliberately encouraged cannibalism and offered portions of human flesh as a reward for bringing in large quantities of rubber.

The white engineers and workmen will have to guard themselves carefully, for the cannibals believe that white flesh is the greatest kind of meat. By eating it they imagine that they will acquire the cleverness and other qualities of the deceased person. Very few natives are daring enough now to attack white men, but there is no knowing what they might do in a moment of excitement. Half a dozen white men in a jungle 500 miles from help may be in a delicate situation.

Danger from lions and other wild animals will be very great. During the building of the Uganda railway hundreds of laborers were carried off by lions, and in recent months the beasts have walked into railroad cars and snatched off defenseless travelers.

In Nigeria lions are even more numerous than in Uganda. Their numbers depend largely on the amount of food they can find. Elands, antelopes and other game of various sizes are so abundant in Nigeria that the lions find inexhaustible food. Some times as many as fifty or sixty lions lurk in a patch of a jungle a few acres in extent, near a drinking place where the food animals gather.

The new railroad will run along the river banks and will cross the favorite hunting place of the lions. There will be a tremendous disturbance among the animals.

Peer's Daughter In Field.

Lord Rosebery's elder daughter, Lady Sybil Grant, has entered the literary field, her latest publication being a very amusing volume of verse.

Not only is Lady Sybil the author of small books of verse such as her friends have been accustomed to receive from time to time as they were published for private circulation, but she writes magazine articles and stories, some of which exhibit a gentle satirical tone against the aristocracy quite in keeping with her democratic sympathies which her elder brother, Lord Dalmeny, has publicly voiced in Parliament.

Nine of her short stories—all cleverly written—have been printed in a book entitled "The Chequer Board."

Homespun In the Commons.

In an interview published in the Christian Commonwealth Mr. Keir Hardie recalls his first entry into the House of Commons in 1892 as member for South West Ham, wearing a cloth cap, tweed suit and flannel shirt. "I had always worn a tweed cap and homespun clothes," he said, "and it never entered my head to make a change. I believe my wife thought about it and bought a soft felt hat, but it had not arrived when I set out for the House of Commons. I received eight or ten top hats from good-hearted people in the country afterward, and several people sent me orders on their tailors to get a suit of clothes."

Except for their mistakes, a great many men would never even be heard of.

ELECTRICAL DEVICES IN THE HOME

The magic force of electricity is the unseen power which is invoked not only to illuminate great cities, but to light the home; not only to move great electrical cranes, magnets, and complicated machinery, but to furnish motive power for dozens of helpful devices for housekeeping; not only to carry heat into huge welding furnaces, but to cook in a safe, sanitary manner the food for the family.

Although electricity has revolutionized many phases of work throughout the world, there is no place where it has more swiftly dismissed drudgery than in the home. It is helping to solve the domestic service problem.

Wherever electricity is brought into a dwelling there results the possibility for using electrical devices both for a great variety of laborious tasks and for additional comfort and luxury.

Every householder should be assured, however, in having his house wired for electricity, that outlets for appliances as well as for lighting be installed. The dining-room and kitchen should have at least two base plugs in addition to its lighting sockets; the bedroom should also be equipped for the attachment of appliances, such as heaters, fans, and other luxuries. Not only are convenience, comfort and cleanliness served by the use of electrical household devices, but safely and economy as well.

Lamps and Lighting Equipment.

The lighting of the home is no longer a haphazard affair, but has been developed to a high degree, both scientifically and artistically. It is engaging the attention of artists, scientists and manufacturers, who find the problem constantly developing new phases. No longer is it considered enough to have a light in each room. The light must be the best light for that particular room; it must have the right degree of brilliancy and be so placed as to give the most efficient service. The light must be toned by carefully chosen shades or globes so as to distribute it in proper proportion throughout the apartment and temper it to the most sensitive eyesight.

In planning the decorations of a home nowadays, the lighting fixtures make an important feature of the artistic result. The designing of the glass bowls, globes, shades, and of the metal fixtures for chandeliers, side bracqets, and table lamps, now occupies the entire time of hundreds of trained artists. Each year these designs become more unique and more adapted to the service required.

The incandescent lamp with its brilliant filament has been improved and developed to such a degree that the use of electricity is acknowledged the best and most economical method of illumination.

The new Mazda lamp uses but one-third the current of the old style carbon lamp and gives considerably more light. These efficient lamps are now inexpensive. The 40 watt 32-candle power lamp, such as is generally used in the home, costs but 30 cents. The larger sizes are but little more. At the average rate for electricity in Cleveland such a lamp may be burned for four hours at a cost of but one cent for current.

The electric coffee percolator takes from five to ten minutes to make six cups of coffee. The cost of current will be about one cent. The cost of the electric percolator is $8 upwards. The cost of the electric samovar is from $13.75 upwards.

Other cooking devices which cost more to operate than the toaster stove are the disc stove, chafing dish, sauce pan, frying pan, tea kettle, combination grill, egg boiler, corn popper, waffle iron, cereal cooker, and plate warmer. These various devices cost from $3.50 upwards.

For cooking in a larger way there are made now the electric oven and broiler, and electric range and fireless cooker.

The electric oven has in connection with it a radiant broiling attachment. The baking chamber is usually about 18 by 12 inches. Cost of electric oven is from $12 upwards. The cost per hour to operate is from 2½ to 7½ cents per hour, according to size.

The electric range is a still more pretentious appliance and is arranged to take care of all of the cooking for a full-sized household. The range costs from $50 to $150.

The electric fireless cooker is operated in the same way as any fireless cooker, except that electricity is the heat used to bring the steatite to the right temperature. The cost of the fireless cooker ranges from $16.50 upwards. The cost to operate is extremely low.

Water heaters and water purifiers, which add much to the efficiency of the culinary department of the house, may also be obtained at various prices.

In the laundry the electric ironing machine, which is made in several sizes, has simplified the method of pressing flat work. In many cases the power used for the electric washing machine may be diverted to drive the ironer. The machine costs $55 upwards. The cost to operate per hour varies according to size.

Electric flat irons, ranging in weight from three to ten pounds, are made for laundry service. The electric flat iron has the advantage of cleanliness and convenience in requiring only one iron for continuous work. It saves more than enough time to pay for the current required. The heat may be regulated so that the iron is in perfect condition for service the entire time is is in use. The laundry iron costs from $3.50 to $6.

The traveler's iron of three or four pounds weight is made in convenient form for packing. When a rack for holding it upside down is supplied the little iron may be used as a stove. These irons cost from $3 to $5. Cost to operate per hour, 2 cents.

To take the place of the hot water bag the electric heating pad has been invented. It is made in two sizes, 6¾ x 9 inches and 11 x 15 inches, and is flexible so that it may be used in any position. Its temperature may be regulated so as to remain uniform. The cost of the electric heating pad is $6.40. The cost to operate per hour, ½ cent.

One of the greatest conveniences to the mother is the electric milk warmer. The infant's food may be prepared before retiring, and the current turned on without rising from bed. The milk will heat to the right temperature in four minutes. The cost of the milk warmer is $3.50 upwards. Cost to operate, 2¼ cents.

Another nursery convenience is the sterilizer whose cost is practically the same as the milk warmer.

Bedside reading lamps and turn-down bedside lamps are variations of lighting equipment that add to comfort and convenience. The cost of these varies from $3 upwards.

Christmas tree lighting outfits consisting of tiny incandescent lamps in equally tiny sockets, with cord and attaching plug, may be obtained for Christmas tree lighting, making this feature of the Christmas festival absolutely safe. These outfits cost from $2 upwards, according to the number of lights furnished.

ADAM SHORTT KNOWS WHAT HE WANTS AND GETS IT HAS A REAL BACKBONE

Head of Canada's Civil Service Commission Is In One of the Most Delicate and Difficult Positions In the Public Employ—His Native Village Has Disappeared From the Map.

There are not many men, even in this land of "mushroom" growths, who lived to see extinguished the village in which they were born. Villages are usually slow growing and usually are persistent as well. Especially is this true in the old settled Province of Ontario. Yet the tale that I am now telling is of such a man. He was born in the village of Kilworth in the valley of the Thames, and he is yet in the prime of life. The man is Dr. Adam Shortt, Civil Service Commissioner, says Francis A. Carman in The Toronto Star Weekly.

The village in which Dr. Shortt saw the light was one of the old mill villages of the early days of Ontario. It was situated on the River Thames, not far below Springbank, which again is not far below the City of London. London was chosen as the site of the capital of Canada by Sir John Graves Simcoe, who was Governor of Canada at the end of the eighteenth century, and this portion of the province was settled early in the century that followed. Kilworth consisted of a mill, a store, and a half dozen houses. Its reason for existence was the mill, to which the farmers from roundabout brought their grain to have it ground. In the middle of last century the mill was prosperous, and gave a living to two partners, of whom Dr. Shortt's father was one. With the growth of London and the drift of business thither, however, the mill fell on evil days, and had eventually to be closed down, and then dismantled. A few years ago Dr. Shortt visited his native village, and found not a building standing. Even the old bridge was gone. The only means of identifying the spot were the few remains of foundations that it had not been profitable to carry away. The place has gone, and the name has been picked up and bestowed upon another hamlet in a slightly varied form. Kilworth Bridge is in the same valley of the Thames, but is some miles distant from the hamlet in which the present Civil Service Commissioner was born.

There is a tendency to consider university men as narrow. Dr. Shortt is an outstanding figure among university men in the Dominion. Yet, whatever justification there may be for the tendency just referred to, there is no justification for regarding Dr. Shortt as narrow. He came into public notice first as an economist, and perhaps the dry-as-dust reputation of political economy may have attached itself to him. But Dr. Shortt was not one of those men who was a "calculator and economist" from his youth up. His first love in the halls of learning was philosophy, and his turning to political science was an evidence of his underlying practical bent. He was a gold medalist in philosophy at Queen's Univerity; and he began his career as a teacher in the department of philosophy at the same university. In the meantime, however, his mind had turned to the practical problems of the science of wealth, and at the end of the eighties he transferred into the department of political science.

It was while engaged in this branch of university work that he became a public figure in the Dominion. Soon after the organization of the Labor Department by the Dominion Government he was chosen as chairman of commissions under the Conciliation Act, and later under the Lemieux Act. In his capacity of combined mediator and judge he showed a keen insight into labor troubles, and won a reputation as a skilful adjuster of relations between employers and employes. He entered upon this work known only as a college professor. By his success in it he became a national figure in the world of practical affairs.

Dr. Shortt has always been a student, and he is a student to-day. He was a close student when he was attending high school at Walkerton. He was a student while he was teaching school and putting himself through Queen's by the extra-mural course which has made that university a blessing to so many men, who have had the zeal for knowledge, but not the financial basis of leisure. When he was teaching philosophy, he was delving into economics, and when he was teaching economics he was studying the problem of labor and capital at first hand in Government commissions. Now that he is a civil service commissioner, he is devoting his evenings in the investigation of the history of the Dominion.

As civil service commissioner, Adam Shortt is the cynosure of the eyes of all politicians and of all civil servants. He is also the head at which all criticism is directed. He is doubtless human, and consequently he may err. But one does not have to be a champion of all his official acts to recognize that here is a man who is somewhat of a rarity in our political machinery. He is not afraid of the politician, even of the politician in power. He has backbone. If he thinks he is right he is not easily to be moved. Such men are needed if we are to have an efficient staff of public servants. The principle of competitive examinations may be pushed too far in choosing Government employes, and there must be allowance made for other qualities than come out on a written test. The Minister and his Deputy have points of view which require consideration. But after all, it is quite impossible to "take the service out of politics" unless you have men of backbone at the head of the Civil Service Commission.

SHE KNOWS HER WEST

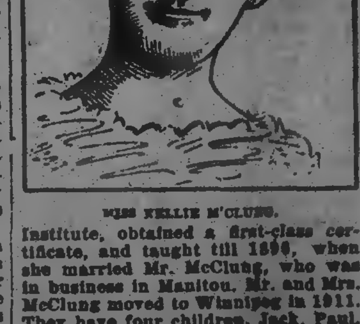
MRS. M'CLUNG HAS SEEN IT IN ALL ITS PHASES.

Authoress, Who Has Found Fame In Tales of Canada's Great Plains and Their People, Was Born Near Owen Sound, But She Went to the Wheat Country When a Child —Was Teacher at Sixteen.

Mrs. McClung's name is Nellie Letitia. The look out of her eyes is sweet, fearless, and steady. No matter how much her readers have enjoyed her stories, one thing is certain: unless they have met Mrs. McClung they can have no idea of how much greater her charm is than the charm of her stories.

Nellie Letitia Mooney was born in the County of Grey, near Owen Sound. Her father was Irish and her mother was Scotch. Nellie was the youngest of a family of six. She was still very young when the family started on their Western journey. They traveled by train as far as St. Boniface, crossed the Red River to Winnipeg in a little rowboat, tented on the river bank for two weeks, and then moved to Silver Heights for the summer. In the autumn they drove one hundred and eighty miles by ox-train to Millford. The little girl had lived on the prairie for three years before a school was opened two miles away. Going to school was one of the most beautiful things that ever happened to Nellie Mooney. She learned lessons as other children go to play, and yet she loved play as dearly as any girl ever could. That pioneer journey, the pioneer life with its joys and heart-breaks, its intense reality, all these years on the prairie, have stored up for Mrs. McClung incomparable material for story-writing. She knows real people by heart. How can she help knowing them?

Miss Mooney had passed the second class teachers' certificate examination by the time she was fifteen years old. The autumn of that year, 1889-90, she attended the Normal School in Winnipeg. The next August she began to teach in Hazel which is three miles from Manitou, Manitoba. In 1892 she was appointed to the Manitou school staff. Later she went to the Winnipeg Collegiate Institute, obtained a first-class certificate, and taught till 1896, when she married Mr. McClung, who was in business in Manitou. Mr. and Mrs. McClung moved to Winnipeg in 1911. They have four children, Jack, Paul, Florence and Mark. Mrs. McClung is an influential member of the Canadian Women's Press Club. She was president of the Winnipeg Women's Press Club in 1912. She is one of the foremost advocates of suffrage for women in Western Canada.



MISS NELLIE M'CLUNG.

Her first book, "Sowing Seeds in Danny," began as a short story and ended as a little book so full of humor, originality and local color of uncommon value that it won for her the staunch belief of her publishers. "The Second Chance," followed quickly, and was by far a better story than her first. "The Second Chance" is a typical story of the West. Its optimism, kindness, common sense, humor, the closeness with which the delineation cling to everyday human nature, with a shining light of idealism, makes this book refreshing, wholesome, and stimulating. "The Black Creek Stopping House" is a collection of short stories of much the same quality as "The Second Chance."

Dark hair, eyes full of light, wisdom and kindness, beautiful coloring, a winsome Irish beauty belong to Mrs. McClung. She is a writer, a reader, a wit. The stories she tells to her friends are as full of laughter without an edge to it as a summer day is full of sunshine.—Marjorie MacMurchy in Toronto Star Weekly.

POTIFER'S INTERFERENCE

It Found a Job for Him

By CLARISSA MACKIE

"No luck today," reported Henry Potifer smilingly as he entered his home after another day's unsuccessful search for a position.

Ellen Potifer was putting supper on the table.

She was a tall, thin, sallow woman, who faced the world with an expression of perpetual melancholy.

"I don't know what we will do!" she groaned, sitting down and pouring out a cup of strong tea for herself. "There is just $100 left in the bank, and when that is gone where will we be?"

"Right here, as usual," responded Henry Potifer cheerfully as he helped his wife to a spoonful of corned beef hash. "That $100 will keep the wolf at bay for six months if your economical hand is at the helm, my dear," he went on, mixing his metaphors while he consumed hot biscuits and hash with an excellent appetite, "but happily it will not be required to last that long. I feel sure that I shall find a job tomorrow."

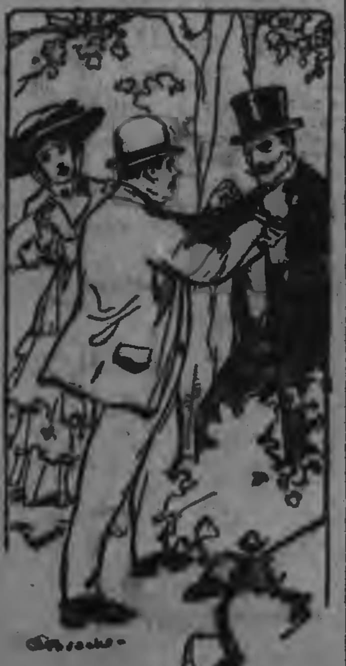
"You've felt that way ever since Mixon & Co. discharged you three weeks ago," retorted Mrs. Potifer, refusing to have her gloom pierced by a ray of hope. "That makes four perfectly good positions you've lost simply because you can't attend to your own business and let other people's affairs alone."

"Miranda," he said chokingly, "please understand that when I go out to look for a job tomorrow morning I shall not return until I get one. No, ma'am, not if I'm gone 500 years!"

"Henry!"

"Yes, you can 'Henry' me, and you can henpeck me, too!" went on the angry Potifer. "You women get together and ask, 'Why do girls leave home?' I don't know, but I can tell you why half the men leave home. It's because they're nagged there!"

Whereupon Mr. Potifer left his supper unfinished and slapped on his hat and slammed the front door and went downtown and enjoyed a moving picture show.



"I INTEND TO SPOIL IT," ROARED HENRY POTIFER.

Mrs. Potifer washed the dishes and dripped tears into the dishpan and then sat down and wrote a long, complaining letter to her married daughter by her first husband.

The next morning when Mr. Potifer awoke it was with a vague sense of some impending calamity. Presently he recollected his rash threat of the night before. He jumped out of bed and dressed carefully.

So when Henry Potifer appeared, well brushed and shining from his morning toilet, he carried a suit case and an umbrella.

Mrs. Potifer, who had been making waffles for breakfast as a sort of peace offering to her husband, poked her head into the dining room, saw the suit case and fell to weeping noisily.

"I never thought I'd be deserted by my husband," she moaned. "Now, Augustus Hakle, my first husband, was devoted to me and"—

Mr. Potifer put up his hand with a new, commanding gesture. He was enjoying the scene. He felt like an actor on the stage. He believed he would have made an excellent actor.

"Miranda," he said kindly, "your first husband did desert you when he died. I am not ready to die yet, but I'm not coming back until I get some kind of a job. If I find one today I'll be home tonight. If I don't come there's money enough to keep you until I do return. I may—I have thought of going on the stage," he ended with a dramatic gesture.

"An actor, Henry?" gasped Mrs. Potifer. "Well, you needn't come back at all, then!"

"So be it, Miranda," returned Mr. Potifer sadly. "I will take my leave. I will breakfast at a dairy lunch downtown. Farewell, farewell, cruel Miranda!" He felt very tragic as he waved an adieu, cocked his hat rakishly over one ear, picked up his bag and umbrella and left the house.

Going downtown in the car his spirits lifted wonderfully. He felt as if he were on the eve of some adventure.

Leaving his bag and umbrella in the check room of a hotel, Henry Potifer ate his breakfast and then set forth to look for a job. He had scanned the morning paper while he ate and there were several places where he might apply for a position as bookkeeper.

At 4 o'clock that afternoon Mr. Potifer acknowledged to himself that it was useless to look further that day. He had been too late or too old or too something for every job that he applied for that day, and late afternoon found him wondering whether he should brave Mrs. Potifer's ridicule and go home in spite of his threats of the morning or whether he should really remain downtown and stay at the hotel until another day promised better luck.

He decided to take a trolley ride, and while he cooled off from the heat of the day's exertions he could decide what to do.

The trolley car whirled him into the green country and through pretty villages. At the end of the line he got off and went for a walk along a babbling brook that reminded him of his boyhood days on the farm.

And on the banks of the brook Mr. Potifer found adventure waiting for him and a steady job lurking in the background, although he didn't know that until afterward.

A pretty girl in a pink sunbonnet was struggling with a tall, dark, villainous looking man, who held her slender hands in his big ones.

"Unhand me, villain!" shrieked the girl just as Mr. Potifer came running upon the scene, his heavy gold headed cane poised for action.

"Never!" cried the man angrily as he dragged her toward the path that led across an open field, beyond which appeared the red roof of a farmhouse. "What are you doing here, old Buttinsky?" he roared at Henry Potifer. "Get out of the way. You're spoiling this."

"I intend to spoil it," roared Henry Potifer valiantly. "Let the lady go, you rascal!"

The lady laughed hysterically, the villain swore lustily as Mr. Potifer's cane circled around the man's head and finally fell on his shoulders.

Suddenly the man grasped the girl's hand and shouted:

"Beat it and leave the old meddler behind. We'll get the sack for this."

Whereupon the couple flew along the path into the field and across the field, with Mr. Henry Potifer in hot pursuit, his gray coattails flying, his fat face dripping with perspiration and his mouth wide open like a gasping fish's.

And there fell into the pursuit from behind trees and an ancient barn several policemen, who waved their sticks and fired revolvers into the air.

Mr. Potifer stopped at the first pistol shot just as a bee winging homeward grazed his bald head. Mr. Potifer thought that he had stopped a bullet with his cranium, and he fell to earth and groaned.

Immediately there was a circle of oddly dressed people around him, most of them laughing, some of them scolding, but all of them most concerned in the appearance of a dapper little man who almost danced up and down as he surveyed the recumbent form of Henry Potifer, professional meddler.

"I'd like to kill him!" roared the little man, brandishing his fist before Mr. Potifer's startled eyes. "Man, you've spoiled fifty feet of film!"

"Film?" echoed Mr. Potifer blankly.

"Yes, film!" mimicked the little man, and then he proceeded to explain to Mr. Potifer that he had interfered in the making of a moving picture film—that it would cost hundreds of dollars to make good the damage he had done that afternoon.

Mr. Potifer listened and stared and looked aghast, and with each change of expression the actresses giggled and the men smiled until the manager of the company smiled too. The star whispered for awhile in the manager's ear, and the manager slapped his knee and cried:

"I believe you're right, Barton! I'll talk to the old duffer."

So he smiled upon the perturbed Mr. Potifer and took him aside and made him a proposition.

The proposition almost took Henry Potifer's breath away.

He was to enact the part of the fat uncle in the play. Just be himself, a professional meddler, and it would be all right. And there was a job of keeping the books of the stock company, which Mr. Potifer could have on the side if he wanted it. The manager was sure that there were other plays where Mr. Potifer could just be himself and get away with the part.

So Mr. Potifer accepted the position with becoming gravity, made an appointment to come the next morning and repeat his involuntary entrance into the scene by the brookside and go cavorting over the turf after the lady and the villain while the police brought up the rear.

He arrived at home at 10 o'clock that evening. Mrs. Potifer hardly knew him. He wore trousers and coat of a large check pattern, a pale gray derby hat and white spats.

But she was so kind to see him that she threw her arms around his neck and hugged him tenderly. "No matter about the job, Henry," she assured him when he would have spoken; "I'm so glad to see you again!"

"What if I tell you that I have a position as an actor?" asked Mr. Potifer, thrusting a hand in his breast and striking a dramatic attitude.

"I don't care what it is," cried Miranda warmly, "so long as it brings you back to me!"

Growth of Eucalyptus.

In a period of ten years the eucalyptus tree will grow twelve inches in diameter and ninety feet in height, while it will take white oak and hickory 90 to 100 years to attain the same growth, and other hard woods, such as walnut, will take fifty to sixty years to attain the same size. This in itself is a tremendous advantage, and together with the fact that it reproduces itself from the same stump makes it of special commercial value.

FIRST MORMON TEMPLE.

Pioneer Structure In Canada Is Now Under Way at Cardston.

Work on the first Mormon Temple on British soil is now well under way in the Mormon centre for Canada, Cardston, Alberta. The structure will be of granite from the Rocky Mountains of British Columbia. Machinery valued at $10,000 has been installed on the temple ground and cutting will be done there as fast as the rough material can be delivered. As each stone is cut and dressed it will be placed in the wall.

The structure will cost at least $300,000. This money will come mostly from tithing sent to headquarters at Utah, and the contractors have the assurance of the church that all money needed will be forthcoming when asked for. Bishop Nibley, who has charge of the business affairs of the Mormon Church throughout the world, will have direct control of the work, but will not be on the ground. A local inspector and superintendent of construction will direct the local activities.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints have no temples at present outside of the State of Utah where the great Salt Lake Temple stands. The new Canadian building will be the first to be erected on British soil and the first outside of the State of Utah. The Salt Lake Temple cost $4,000,000, and was 45 years in building. The other Utah temples Manti, St. George and Logan, cost all told about $3,000,000. Material at the time they were erected was very costly and transportation difficult. It is stated by the authorities to-day that as good building can be done to-day for about one-third of the cost. So it would seem that the Canadian Temple will compare favorably with any of the Utah structures outside the great Salt Lake Temple.

There are in Canada to-day close to 10,000 Mormons, and the Cardston Temple will be for their own use. Mormons in the northern United States, who are much nearer to the international boundary than the State of Utah, will also have the Canadian temple as their shrine for receiving the higher ministrations of the church.

As a regular place of meeting the Mormons of Cardston have a tabernacle seating some 1,500 people, and this on all special occasions is filled to overflowing. It has been necessary to divide the Cardston church, making two separate organizations.

Mayor Rules the Time.

His Worship Mayor Martin of Montreal has taken charge of a new department at the City Hall. Not content with his usual assertion that "I am the mayor!" he has added to it another: "I rule the time!" He is the head of the city, he says. He "hires" and "fires" at will.

The Board of Control was opening some tenders for street work. The box with the papers in it had just been placed before the city fathers, when in rushed a noisy man waving aloft his tender.

"It is too late!" said Controller McDonald. "The clock says it is two minutes after 12."

"No, no!" answered the mayor, pulling his big watch out of his vest pocket. "See, it is 30 seconds to the hour."

"Your watch is wrong!" replied the controller.

"No, sir, it is not! The mayor's watch rules here, and it is right!"

Then, turning to the would-be tenderer, he said: "Poke it in the box!" and in it went.

"While I am mayor, my watch will rule!" the mayor added, as the incident closed.

Explained.

"You seem to be getting out rather early for you, Brown."

"Yes."

"Feeling pretty spry, eh?"

"Naw!"

"Then why this thusness?"

"The confounded bill collectors get around awfully early this year, and I just have to beat them to the few dollars I have got."

Whom He Suspected.

"Does any insanity run in your family?" asked the examining physician.

"Doctor, I didn't come here to be insulted."

"But I must know your family history."

"You are not hinting at my mother-in-law, are you?"

Bad Case.

"Is he sick?"

"Yes."

"What is the matter?"

"Enlarged pocketbook and inflamed self conceit."

For the Children

Shearing a Sheep in Central Park, New York.

Many young people who live in the country, especially those who reside on farms, would think it no novelty to witness the shearing of sheep. In big cities, however, it is a most unusual sight, and when the shepherds of Central park, New York, get ready with their shears the little ones crowd around to witness the operation. For many years the park department of the city has maintained flocks of sheep in the larger parks, not alone because they lend beauty to the landscape, but because their presence on the lawns tends to improve the grass. The constant grazing keeps the herbage at just the right height to give it a velvety appearance, and the sod is at the same time benefited. In Central park there is a large flock, and when the lambs come the little New Yorkers never seem to grow weary of watching their gambols. Older folks take great interest in the beautiful little animals. The camera man happened along the other day and took a shot.

Geographical Game.

Give each of your guests a piece of paper and pencil. The hostess gives out the sentences, and the guests write the answers—a geographical name—on their papers.

1. Name of an ancient city whose downfall was caused by a woman?
2. A farmer who was twice dictator of Rome?
3. Name of a king of France?
4. An exclamation, a short name for mamma and a laugh?
5. An opera encore?
6. A city whose end and aim is "go?"
7. An improvement on Noah's home?
8. A great engineering feat?
9. Where all have "bean?"
10. A surgical operation?
11. A high stalked vegetable against a structure?
12. Named for the "father of our country?"

A Life For a Life.

A well known man was recently saved from death by a mouse. One of these troublesome little pests was nibbling in the room where the man slept. A trap was set. In the night the mouse came, the bait was seized, the trapdoor fell with a crash. The man awoke to find the room full of gas which had escaped from a half turned burner.

The best part of this story (which is true) is that the man said he believed that a life demanded another life. Consequently the mouse was released with only a sprained paw. Let us hope that the incident taught him to beware of traps in the future, no matter how good the cheese smells.

A Trained Pig.

Probably the most original "horse" to be found on any farm is in a Maine town, where Joseph and Annie Cottle have trained a pig to be harnessed into a miniature wagon, and this animal is driven about as readily as a trained dog. A harness has been made that fits the animal, and he has bits the same as a horse.

A Man.

Such a busy man is he
All the sunny hours,
Up and down the garden beds,
Digging weeds and flowers.
Never man so bold and brave
In the house would stay
When the sunshine and the earth
Beckon him away.
See the dog, obedient
To his every whim.
How the little chicks will fly
At the sight of him!
How the geese will hiss
When he gives them chase!
Chanticleer and Brindle, too,
Join them in the race.
Every inch a valiant man
In the broad daylight.
Search and find him if you can
At the fall of night.
Folded close to mother's breast
Lies the head of gold—
Just a little baby boy,
Only four years old!

Toronto Students Instructed to Drop Playing Real Politics.

After a brief and tumultuous existence, the Conservative and the Liberal parties of the University College Literary and Scientific Society appear to be on the point of dissolution. Hereafter the undergraduates are only to discuss national politics in an academic and non-partisan way. The experiment of making the chief student organization of the University of Toronto a school for statesmen, like the Oxford Union, where Asquith and Balfour were trained for after-life, is soon to be abandoned. Politics among the practical-minded young men who make the student body of a Canadian university have become too practical to suit the taste of a state university, and pressure is brought to bear to abolish partyism. The Oxford Union idea has not worked out in Toronto in the way that it was anticipated. The "Lit." is apparently destined to become a debating society, pure and simple, without party organization. The story of national politics in the "Lit." throws some interesting sidelights on Canadian national character.

Up to seven or eight years ago the society was much more than a debating society. It was the representative body of students. It controlled the undergraduate newspaper, the undergraduate dinner, the undergraduate dance. Through it the students made requests to the university authorities. As a result of the importance of the Lit. as a business body little attention was paid to national politics, the issues at the elections being purely local to the student body, such as "Who is to pay for the damage on Hallowe'en?" Every spring the rivalry between "Old Lits." and "Unionists" reached an intensity incomprehensible to the outsider.

Eight years ago the first great change came in the Lit. It was made more like a house of parliament. The old Lits. and the Unionists sat facing each other across the floor of the house, as government and opposition. A table separated the two parties. The president, as speaker, sat on high, in a carved chair.

In the term of 1911-12, after the excitement of the "reciprocity election," many of the students were fired with the desire to make the Lit. a real force in national politics. They believed that dropping the old party names of old Lit. and Unionist, and re-dividing the "Lit." on the basis of Conservative and Liberal would mean a great awakening of interest in the society, and a much keener realization on the part of the student body of the importance of national politics.

After three sessions of red-hot campaigning, which would put real national politics to the blush for bitterness and intensity, it has occurred to the university authorities that political partizanship and machine methods are not desirable things in a university. The hint was passed that the Liberal and the Conservative parties in the "Lit." should cease to exist. Canadian students are too practical in their methods to make politics an academic pursuit with them, even in the University.

Toronto Got Lion's Share.

Over $3,500,000 of Andrew Carnegie's philanthropy has found its way into British North America.

Most of this amount has been spent for libraries, although the hero fund and university professors' pension fund have also contributed their shares.

No less than 133 towns and cities now boast public library buildings contributed by the Pittsburg steel man.

Toronto succeeded in securing over $400,000, while the next largest grant, to Montreal, was only $150,000. Ottawa the capital, secured $100,000.

Thirteen Canadian professors and three widows of professors are now on the pay roll of the Carnegie pension fund. Seven belong to McGill University, Montreal; three to Dalhousie, New Brunswick; two to the state-owned University of Toronto, and four are unattached. The total of the pensions capitalized amounts to $612,000. There are twenty Canadian beneficiaries under the hero fund.

Arctic Ducks and Geese.

Concerning certain features of Eskimo life along the north coast of Alaska, the account written by Vilhjalmur Stefansson says: "In the spring and summer ducks and geese, especially the former, are an important item of diet. They are pursued in kayaks when molting and killed with clubs, and large numbers of them are also secured by bolas throwing, for the migration route of the ducks along the coast is so definitely known that a man can stand in one place all day and rely on it that three out of every four flocks will fly within throwing distance. So thickly do the birds come that nowadays a competent man with a shotgun has been known to secure as many as 600 ducks in a day."

Interchange of Teachers.

An experiment, arranged for the first time in the scholastic history of the Overseas Dominions, has been accomplished by Canada and New Zealand, who have exchanged a small body of school teachers for a year. Three lady teachers from Brandon, Man., have gone over to take service for a year with the South Canterbury Education Board in New Zealand, while three from South Canterbury have come to teach in Canada for a year. The interchange was arranged by the Hands Across the Sea Club.

Search For Radium.

That there should be a quantity of radium-bearing pitchblende on the Thunder Bay district is the opinion of Prof. Goodwin of Queen's University, Kingston. A search is being made for the mineral in the hope of obtaining the $25,000 reward offered by the Ontario Government for the discovery of radium in the province.

Participating versus Non-Participating Life Policies Again

FIFTEEN YEARS AGO a Publisher of this City at age 43 took out a Ten Pay 15 year Endowment Policy of $2,000, No. 81226 in The Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada paying therefore an annual premium of $187.20.

The Non-Participating Premium would have been $170.40.

The extra paid for profits per year (for 10 years only) was $16.80.

Had this man taken a Non-Participating Policy he would have saved $168.00 extra in premiums paid for profits during the ten years, but he would have lost $620.25 at maturity of Policy as he would have received only $2,000.00 instead of $2,620.25, as he did.

Where is there a man that would not like to invest money at such a rate and that too in the Largest and Strongest Life Insurance Company in the British Empire?

Clementine's Silent Partner

A Plan That Worked Well

By Clarissa Mackie

Miss Alvira Pitt's thin nose was poked close to the grating of the post-office window when Clementine Dilley called for her mail that February morning.

"Letter for you, Clem," shrilled Alvira as she poked the missive through the bars. "Lawyer's letter. I guess your rich uncle in Australy has died and left you $1,000,000!"

"Never had a rich uncle, and he didn't live in Australia, anyway," was Clementine's tart retort as she took her letter and went away.

As the alert little form disappeared from view the postmistress turned to her assistant.

"Another lawyer collecting letter," she explained. "Clem Dilley's business is tottering to ruin."

Josie Ricks, the little black eyed assistant, nodded sagely.

"If village folks would only trade with Miss Dilley instead of going way over to Bayport she might make a living," she vouchsafed.

"Clem Dilley couldn't keep up a stock that would satisfy Long River folks," retorted Alvira. "Mark my words, Josie, there's going to be a change in Clem Dilley's affairs pretty soon. She's looking worried to death."

There was to be a remarkable change in Clementine Dilley's affairs if she read the lawyer's letter aright. It was a wonderful letter and one hardly to be believed, so unexpected was it. The letter read:

Dear Madam—I have a client who is anxious to invest some surplus funds in a small but lucrative business, and after investigation I am authorized to make you the following offer—viz: My client to put $5,000 into a partnership with you, you to manage the dry goods business and the partnership to be a silent one. My client believes there will be a good opening for a profitable business that has financial backing. If you will call upon me some day this week I will go into the details of the matter with you. Very respectfully yours, SIMON DAY.

Three days after Clementine Dilley's return from New York there was a sensation in Long River. Wagon after wagon stopped before the door of her little shop and unloaded great boxes of dry goods.

Clementine hired several girls to help her, and soon the shop was transformed from its former cosiness into the well stocked appearance of a city store. Clementine had a new front put in the store and two large plate glass windows.

At last Clementine had an opening day. She brought all the flowering plants from her sunny windows, and the store looked very attractive.

From that day Clementine Dilley's business flourished mightily. Dozens of people who had always traded in Bayport, fifteen miles distant, drove up to Clementine's door and made their purchases there.

Clementine was very happy on that day when she went down to New York and presented her books for Mr. Day's inspection. The books proved that Clementine was doing a splendid business, and the lawyer said he was sure that his client would have no cause to regret his investment.

Clementine often wondered about the mysterious partner whose money enabled her to prop up a crumbling business. Why, at the end of five years she might be able to buy out her partner, and at the end of ten years she might retire from business altogether and enjoy the quiet domestic life for which she had always yearned.

But now she was glad of the business, for it kept her from being lonely. At home there was nothing save a parrot and two black cats, and at forty-five one yearns for human companionship.

Clementine's friends were delighted at her good fortune, although she was not able to impart the details to any one. When he heard that Clementine Dilley was making money "hand over fist" Deacon Marberry stumped thoughtfully home to his bachelor fireside and stared at the almanac all the evening—and never read a word.

The next day he dropped into Clementine's store and asked for collar buttons. It happened to be the noon hour, and Clementine was all alone.

"Ten cents, Mr. Marberry," said Clementine briskly as she gave him the small parcel.

The deacon fished out a wash leather bag from his pocket, untied the string that confined it, counted out the money in coppers and then replaced the bag.

"Clem," he said hurriedly, "the Scripture says 'tain't good for man to be alone."

"I expect that's why dogs were created—and cats—and parrots," returned Clem tartly. "Dogs and cats are good company."

"Yes—yes—yes!" returned the deacon impatiently, and then warily he added, "I don't reckon you can guess who your silent partner is, Clementine, can you?"

Clementine was startled for a moment. There could be no mistaking the deacon's meaning. He wanted her to believe that he was the silent partner whose name she did not know.

But she stiffened her neck coldly.

"I might guess, Deacon Marberry," she said.

"He ain't a thousand miles away from where I be standing this minute," went on the deacon craftily.

"I don't see him," said Clementine curtly. And she was glad when a customer came in and the deacon was compelled to take his departure.

Still the deacon's mysterious tone rankled in her mind. What if it were Deacon Marberry who had been backing her business? If it were Clementine vowed that she would close the doors the very next day. But on further thought where would Deacon Marberry get $5,000 that was not needed in his grain and hay business? The answer was forthcoming—Deacon Marberry's uncle, Jehoshaphat Bean, had died six months ago, and it was rumored that the deacon had come in for the money.

It was after 6 o'clock that same evening, when Clementine was about to lock the door after the last clerk, when there came heavy footsteps on the porch and the great form of Captain Tommy Lisk loomed into view.

"Howdy, Clem?" he said cheerily as he leaned against a pile of pasteboard boxes on the counter. "I ain't seen you in a dog's age, and I reckon we used to see each other pretty often—what say?"

Clementine remembered, with some amusement, that Tommy Lisk used to call upon her once a week in the long, long ago. That was just before David Marsh had come to town. After that Clementine had not had eyes for any one save the handsome David.

"How's business?" pursued the captain genially.

"Very good," replied Clementine. "What can I do for you, captain? It's after hours, you know, and I want to go to the lecture tonight."

"Ding it all, Clem, that's what I stopped in for!" cried Captain Lisk, slapping his huge hand on the counter. "I want to take you to the lecture tonight."

"I'm sorry, but I've arranged to go with some one else," returned Clementine, hiding her surprise at this belated attention on the part of Captain Lisk. "Thank you just the same."

"Well, better luck next time," murmured the captain. "What you say to moving pictures next Tuesday, Clementine?"

"I'll let you know later," said Clem hastily. And she breathed easier when he opened the door. At that moment he turned back again.

"I say, Clementine Dilley, I'll bet you can't guess who your silent partner is," he said jokingly.

"I might," said Clementine dryly.

"He ain't a thousand miles from where I'm standing," said the captain significantly, and, with a mysterious wink of his blue eye, he disappeared.

"The old sinners!" laughed Clementine as she put out the lights in the store. "They must have heard that I am doing a good business. Imagine my marrying Hen Marberry—or Tommy Lisk!"

She grew very thoughtful as she walked home under the winter stars. Her house was at the top of the hill under a group of tall locust trees. Since she had enlarged her business she had hired a capable housekeeper, and now she felt a glow of pleasure when she saw that the windows were lighted.

There was a sad thought back of it all—a brief romance of a few months, the hurried departure of David Marsh to assume his father's responsibilities in caring for a mother and several young children and then the gradual drifting of romance out of her life. David Marsh and romance were a dream to Clementine.

So when she opened the door and found David Marsh waiting for her in the cosy sitting room Clementine Dilley discovered in a splendid rush of joy that romance was not dead after all. David Marsh was a little changed, a little gray and worn, but still the fine, upstanding lover of her youth.

No one save Clementine heard all of his story, but we may know that after David had helped to educate his brothers and sisters he had met with great financial success and that in a roundabout way he had learned of Clementine Dilley's business troubles. So David, always true to the love of his youth, had become Clementine's unknown silent partner.

It was 9 o'clock, and the little group around the stove in Pinney's grocery still lingered, loath to go out into the cold.

Deacon Hen Marberry was winding a red muffler around his stringy neck and barking sharp retorts at Captain Tommy Lisk.

"What if I did stop in to buy some collar buttons of Clementine Dilley?" he cried angrily. "If you knew who Clem Dilley's silent partner was you'd say he had some right to buy there!"

Captain Lisk stared incredulously.

"If you knew who Clem Dilley's partner was you'd never speak up like that to me, Hen Marberry. I'll venture to say that Clem Dilley's going to marry her silent partner, and he's standing not a thousand miles from where I be this minute!"

"Ding bust it, Tommy Lisk, "'tain't no such thing!" snarled the deacon.

"When I say he's standing not a thousand miles from where I be this minute I'm speaking the truth!" reiterated the captain.

"Right you are!" said a deep voice from the doorway, where a tall, dark man was observing the scene with visible amusement. "Miss Dilley's partner is standing right here, Captain Lisk, and when you say she's going to marry her partner you're right again. I ought to know, because I'm David Marsh, and I'm the man!"

Five minutes later the deacon and the captain went out into the bitter night, and their hurts were not salved by the muffled laughter that followed their departure.

"Wimmen are vipers!" muttered Deacon Marberry from the gloom that encompassed his soul.

"Some wimmen are serpents—sea serpents," amended Captain Tommy Lisk.

ANCIENT SURGERY.

Instruments of Two Thousand Years Ago Are Exhibited In London.

A set of 37 very remarkable ancient Greek surgical instruments has been discovered near the site of Kolophon, in Ionia, and has been brought to England. The instruments (says a correspondent of The London Times) show a type of workmanship unequalled in any other extant specimens, and generally reveal the very great progress in surgery which the ancients achieved. The date, though somewhat uncertain, is probably the first or second century A. D. With two exceptions, all the instruments are of bronze. The blades of the knives were originally of steel, but in each case this metal has been almost completely destroyed by oxidisation (rust).

It is an interesting fact that in ancient times knives were made either of stone or bronze. The custom was followed, not because iron was unknown, but because that metal was held in superstitious fear. Amongst the five pairs of forceps or grippers in the find is a large and beautifully made instrument, the handles of which are shaped to represent two dolphins. This is probably a pair of "polypus" forceps, used for removing growths. The "bite" of the teeth is strong and close. Another interesting pair of forceps is that used for extracting arrow and lance-heads from wounds. An elevator for raising depressed bone is another interesting exhibit. Its presence in the collection would seem to prove that after battle, efforts must have been made to treat surgically even the most serious wounds of the skull. Modern surgeons are apt to imagine that brain surgery is a recent discovery, and that operations for the elevation of pieces of depressed bone were invented within living memory.

Another and still more remarkable brain instrument is the "drill-bow" for operating a skull trephine. This instrument proved a very great puzzle at first, and was supposed to represent some sort of measuring appliance. Research, however, has shown that it is a bow which, when fitted in a string, was used to rotate a bone drill or skull trephine—very much as drills and trephines are still occasionally rotated. Far from being a triumph of modern surgery, skull trephining or trepanning is a very ancient manoeuvre. Skulls have been discovered again and again showing trephine openings, and the natives of the South Sea Islands are actually known to practice the operation.

In classic times this was not undertaken, as at present, to relieve the pressure from an abscess or an effusion of blood, but to allow exit to the evil spirit supposed to be troubling an insane or epileptic patient. That the Greek and Roman surgeons achieved good results is certain. Probably the purity of the atmosphere in which they worked made them to some extent independent of antiseptics. They used mandragora juice or atropin as anaesthetics.

Whales.

The largest of all mammals are not the elephants, but the whales. A large elephant weighs about six tons, but the largest whale reaches the immense weight of 150 tons and would furnish four carloads of flesh and blubber. About forty different kinds of whales and dolphins are known and, although they live in the open sea and look like fish, they are not fish at all, but are true mammals breathing air and feeding their young on milk, like cows and horses.

Romance of Few Words.

"Why are you so pensive?" he asked.

"I'm not pensive," she replied.

"But you haven't said a word for twenty minutes."

"Well, I didn't have anything to say."

"Don't you ever say anything when you have nothing to say?"

"No."

"Will you be my wife?"

Woman's World

Miss Alice Beckington, Who Paints Wonderful Portraits on Ivory.

MISS ALICE BECKINGTON.

The woman who succeeds greatly does so by striking out a new way for herself. Whether one paints pictures or designs gowns this holds true. Possibly it may be rather more difficult to achieve originality in painting than in other work. At any rate, America can point with pride to a small group of brilliant women who have accomplished this in the face of difficulties.

One of these is Miss Alice Beckington of New York, who paints portraits on ivory. Her special excellence is said to be in the delineation of elderly persons, her old ladies having the rare loveliness and her old gentlemen the seasoned courtliness that made the miniatures of Malabone and Isabey famous. Besides this, she has the faculty of painting character—a much more difficult feat, as any artist will tell you, than the mere portraying of beauty.

Miss Beckington belongs to a little group of American artists who have been making history. They are known as the miniature secessionists, and through their efforts the art of miniature painting has been revolutionized. Instead of being conventional copyists, as are most of the English miniaturists, or painters of candy box loveliness like those of the French school, the Americans are style creators, each as individual in his or her way as any idealist on canvas. Their miniature portraits are painted directly from life, and they have the talent and insight to make their creations real works of art.

Recognizing this new school and American pre-eminence the Metropolitan Museum of Art has just purchased specimens of the work of five of the leading miniature artists of America and will add them to the famous collection in its galleries. It must be gratifying to feminists to know that all the artists so honored are women. Among them is Miss Beckington, who was one of the founders of the American Society of Miniature Painters. Those who admire Whistler's famous portrait of his mother say that Miss Beckington's miniature, "My Mother," which has been purchased by the museum, is an equally worthy if less pretentious masterpiece.

One finds in this gifted woman a singularly unaffected and modest personality. At her studio in the Carnegie building or at her summer home at Scituate, Mass., she is equally devoted to her art. She has painted many prominent people and received many honors in the way of medals and honorable mention at exhibitions both here and abroad. She is a member of the American Society of Miniature Painters, the Society of American Artists and the National Academy of Design.

A woman of wide culture, her interest is by no means restricted to the profession in which she excels. Her first art training was received at the Art Students' league, where she is now an instructor in miniature painting. She has studied abroad under various masters and at the celebrated Academie Julien of Paris. Unlike most miniature artists Miss Beckington works without the aid of a glass, her eyes being very quick and keen.

The other artists who are included in the group honored by the museum are Mrs. Lucia Fairchilds Fuller, Miss Helen M. Turner, Miss Margaret Foote Hawley and Miss Laura Hills of Boston, all of them excelling in various ways in the exquisite miniature art which, after almost a century of neglect, is again enjoying a deserved revival of popularity.

An Egg Shampoo.

A good egg shampoo may be made as follows: To half a cake of pure white castile soap add a pint of hot rainwater. Set on the stove and beat until the soap is perfectly dissolved. To this add an egg which has been thoroughly whipped with an egg beater, stirring it into the mixture with the beater to prevent curdling. Add one-third of a teaspoonful of borax and a teaspoonful of alcohol to preserve the shampoo. When ready to shampoo the hair rub well into the scalp and rinse in several clear waters, using a bath spray if you have one.

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

WILLING.

As for the troubles of the rich,
  I wish it would occur
To them to let me help them
  At so much per.
I'd sit up with their worries
  Until the hour was late
And gladly bear their burdens
  If they would pay the freight.

Why should a man of money
  Let little ills annoy
And drive him to distraction
  When he could hire a boy
For very modest wages
  To sit and stew and fret
And all the nerve diseases
  That go the rounds to get?

All round it would be better
  To have it done for pay.
It then could all be crowded
  Into an eight hour day.
The owner of the troubles
  In seas of peace could swim,
Well knowing that an expert
  Was worrying for him.

But here's a scheme that's better—
  I know it couldn't fail—
To found an institution
  For worrying by mail,
And then the man of money
  Could thereby be a fox
And dump his load of trouble
  All in the letter box.

Unjust.

"Good morning, Mr. Brown. I have a little bill against you."

"Have you?"

"Yes."

"Well, don't blame me for it."

"W-what?"

"I say I am not to blame, so don't hold it against me."

"Don't hold it against you?"

"Certainly not. I had to have the goods, and I have no money to settle the claim. Awful sorry, but you lose because of unfortunate circumstances. I can't pay, so it is unjust to hold it against me."

Clear Headed.

"The young lady was very flattering to you. What was she talking about?"

"She is selling tickets."

"What for?"

"A concert she is giving for a benefit to herself."

"Did you buy some?"

"No."

"Why?"

"I abstained as a benefit to myself."

Likes Soft Colors.

"I just love the country in the autumn."

"Do you?"

"Yes, indeed!"

"If you can love autumn why can't you love me?"

"You?"

"Even me."

"But your verdure is so brilliant and striking."

Some Exceptions.

He was mean; he was cranky;
  He dressed like a tramp.
Financially he
  Was afflicted with cramp.
He growled at the children;
  He made for his wife,
Who had to endure him,
  A burden of life;
Neglected his toilet
  And looked like a fright.
Aside from this really
  The man was all right.

Worth Experimenting.

"John."

"Yes, darling."

"Here are a beautiful lot of crab apple trees in the catalogue."

"Well, what of it?"

"Couldn't we buy a few and raise our own crabs?"

"What was it?"

SUFFERED EVERYTHING

For Years, Restored To Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Canadian women are continually writing us such letters as the two following, which are heartfelt expressions of gratitude for restored health:

Glanford Station, Ont.—"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and never found any medicine to compare with it. I had ulcers and falling of womb and doctors did me no good. I suffered dreadfully for years until I began taking your medicine. I also recommend it for nervousness and indigestion." — Mrs. HENRY CLARK, Glanford Station, Ont.

Chesterville, Ont. — "I heard your medicines highly praised, and a year ago I began taking them for falling of womb and ovarian trouble.

"My left side pained me all the time and just before my periods which were irregular and painful it would be worse. To sit down caused me pain and suffering and I would be so nervous sometimes that I could not bear to see any one or hear any one speak. Little specks would float before my eyes and I was always constipated.

"I cannot say too much for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills, for there are no medicines like them. I have taken them and I recommend them to all women. You may publish this testimonial." — Mrs. STEPHEN J. MARTIN, Chesterville, Ontario, Canada.

THE OVERLORD

The office boy he has a way
That does not make a hit
With visitors who come and go
And through the office flit.
He meets a man of dignity
And with a fishy eye
Abruptly says, "Pass in your card
And I may let you by."

Although he does not own the works,
This self important kid,
Or pay the men who make it go,
He acts as though he did.
He shows it in his style of talk,
His manners and his face
Should the occasion but arise
That he could run the place.

No one from presidents on down
To millionaires can balk
The steadfast purpose of this lad,
No odds how loud they talk.
No one, though he may own a bank
And in an auto ride,
Is half as big as is the one
Who holds the desk inside.

It useless is to threaten, bribe
Or try to call him down.
No compliment will make him wilt,
No more than will a frown.
He knows he's there to stem the tide
And shoo the bores away,
And no one can get past the rail
Without his big O. K.

The Event Was Past.

Deputy Sheriff Jarvis of York County, who, despite the weight of his 84 years, daily takes his place just to the right of the Judge when the Assizes are in session in Toronto, tells an amusing story at his own expense.

"One night," said he, "about two years ago, I was sitting all alone in my house, poring over that morning's issue of The Globe. I noticed to my surprise and pleasure that Christy's Minstrels were advertised to appear that night in St. Lawrence Hall. I had often seen them years before, and was delighted to think that the old name had been kept up. Having nothing else to do that evening, I put on my hat and coat, got on a street car, and went downtown. Reaching my destination on King street, I noticed that everything about the hall was in darkness—not the least sign of a performance. I asked a man standing nearby when the exhibition was due to begin. Well, he just looked at me as though I were a Rip Van Winkle, and laughed in my face. 'Why, my dear man,' said he, 'St. Lawrence Hall has been built over this many a long year. You will never see any more shows here.'

"I went home feeling quite angry with The Globe for putting such a mean hoax in the paper, and I made up my mind just to ring up the office when I got back and tell them what I thought of such jokes," remarked the Sheriff. "However, just to be sure, I picked up the newspaper when I reached home and took another look at it. Yes, there it was sure enough. The announcement read plainly: 'Christy's Minstrels at St. Lawrence Hall to-night'—but just above it my eye caught something it had missed before. That was the heading: 'Fifty Years Ago To-day'."

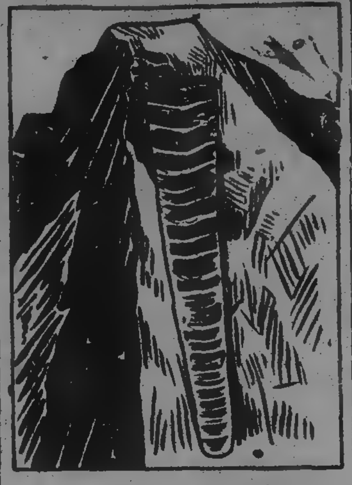
OLD SEA ANIMAL THIS

FOSSIL FOUND AT TORONTO B' 40,000,000 YEARS OLD.

Relic of the Dim Far-Off Ages of the Making of the World Dug Up Near the Grange and Geologists Say Its Like Were Once Very Common In Ontario—Embedded In Rocks.

It may be an item of news to many persons to know that there are graveyards in Canada that are over forty million years old. A little excavation in the rear of the Grange, in Toronto, the home of the Toronto Art Museum, brought to light the fossil remains of a small sea animal, from which the cuttlefish of to-day may claim descent. A slight investigation shows that the same type of rock, upon which the animal died, extends entirely under the city and for a considerable distance east, west and north. The Humber, Don and Credit Rivers have worn away the overlying earth and large sections of the rock have come to view, but it must not be supposed that these streams once contained the live creature that now mark the rocks, for the university officials claim that they were fossils over forty million years before the formation of these streams was commenced.

The shores of the Humber River, just south of Lambton, is probably the best place to examine the stones.



OLD SEA ANIMAL.

Here great slabs of the stone may be removed and the under surfaces carefully looked over. Here, also, the variety appears to be the greatest and some of the stones are almost covered with little white rings that are the remains of the sea lily, an animal that was of such a low order that it almost appears to bridge the gap between the animal and the vegetable world. Here, too, may be found some splendid remains of shells that are so well preserved that every mark and crease may be clearly seen in the stone.

How did these remains come here? Dr. Parks, the director of the Royal Ontario Museum, states that ages ago, the sea covered all this part of the country, and, that during some upheaval of nature, the sea was withdrawn or drained away and the animals that once lived in it were left to perish upon the soft muddy bottom. Ages of sunshine and other powers slowly changed the mud to rock and the remains of the various bones that had impressed themselves upon the mud were fixed in place.

Dr. Parks claims that these animals that are found are not the earliest forms of life, but a very early form, and that they belong to the Lorraine period of the Ordovician system and that as near as science has calculated this period is a little over forty millions of years ago or probably a great deal more.

A Loyal Class.

An English professor, who had been a fellow student and friend of Edward VII. when he was the Prince of Wales, was appointed honorary physician to His Majesty shortly after he became King.

The professor was very proud of this, and wished his students to know of the honor conferred upon him. So he wrote upon the blackboard in his classroom: "Prof. Baker is pleased to inform his students that he has been appointed honorary physician to his Majesty, King Edward."

The professor shortly left the room and when he returned to meet another class he could not understand why they should be so much amused at what he had written. Later, however, he discovered that someone had carefully added to his announcement the following:

"God save the King."

Favorite of Pressmen.

So that Scottish literary genius, Mr. S. R. Crockett, has joined the great majority. His death is greatly mourned in Fleet street, for we doubt if there was any writer more popular with the men of newspaperland than the author of "The Stickit Minister." He was always so kind and considerate to Pressmen, even in the height of his fame. But, as he once confessed, he always remembered the day when he free-lanced in Fleet street, and was paid off from one paper because he failed to secure a certain interview. "I was young and inexperienced then," he said, "but even now I am lost in admiration of the enterprise and energy of the average journalist" — a tribute which Pressmen never forgot.

"Thatch the Sky."

"I had a few saucepans of porter in," said a man, amid loud laughter, when summoned for drunkenness at Thurles Sessions, Ireland; "but I could walk through any place in Ireland where there is a police barrack, and I wouldn't be minded only in Littleton, where they are summoning me every minute. I could thatch the sky with summonses."

Old flames are hard to extinguish.

ANNUAL SPASM.

THE New Year's resolution
Will shortly be on deck,
When man will sign a paper
To save him from the wreck,
When he will gayly promise
His habits to amend
And all his small shortcomings
To Halifax to send.

Then by his stubby whiskers
Most loudly he will swear
That he will quit his meanness
And soon a halo wear,
That he will cut out capers
That lead but to disgrace
And be from that time forward
A credit to the place.

With patent resolutions
He'll put away the past
And in the fiery furnace
His awful habits cast,
To all things low and naughty
Securely tie a can,
Give doubtful chums the go-by
And henceforth be a man.

Yes, these are his intentions,
And let us hope he may
Be able to fulfill them
And mend his crooked way.
We know that all the chances
For winning out are shy,
But that's no blooming reason
Why he should cease to try.

Mean Thing.

"If the men would only listen to their wives"—

"They would do a great deal better, wouldn't they?"

"Well, that isn't exactly what I was going to say."

"Wasn't it?"

"No."

"What were you about to say?"

"I was about to say that if the men would only listen to their wives they would be compelled to apply for a pension for the support of their families as their time would be fully occupied with holding their job of listening."

No Chance For Gossip.

"I saw Brown kiss a married woman last night."

"You did!"

"Fact."

"Wonder what her husband will do to him?"

"Treat him well, no doubt."

"What!"

"Yes. You see, Brown is her husband."

Made It Expensive.

"This house was to cost but $1,000."

"Yes," said the contractor blandly.

"But the bills are for $2,000."

"Well, your wife was on the job all of the time and made us live up to specifications."

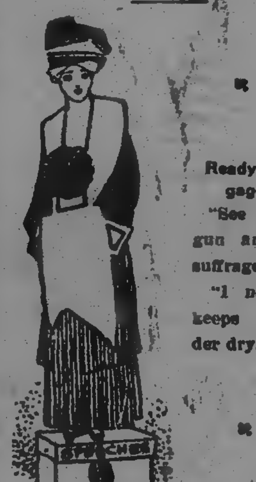
Naturally.

"The best is none too good for me."

"Is that so?"

"You bet!"

"Then I suppose you git a-plenty while you are gittin'?"



Ready For Engagement.

"She is a big gun among the suffragettes."

"I notice she keeps her powder dry."

Protection.

"Can't you write plainer than that?"

"Sure."

"Why don't you, then?"

"My correspondents might get on to my spelling."

An Expert.

"Pa, what is a broker?"

"Ask your Uncle George."

"Does he know?"

"He ought to. He went broke on them."

Points for Mothers

Ruling Through Fear.

Never allow a child to be frightened. This is one of the cruelest ways of making him behave. We do not realize the horrors to a small child of a dark room that has been peopled with mysterious things waiting to clutch and gobble him. Many a little tot lies awake shivering and shaking with an unknown fear until sleep comes through sheer exhaustion. He awakens unrefreshed, with heavy eyes, irritable, with a distaste for his food and ready to cry if looked at. This is, nine times out of ten, put down to naughtiness, when it is really the result of a nervous strain.

A little girl of three was put to bed one night by a servant, who told her, "Now, you go to sleep or the black man under the bed will eat you." And she turned out the light and left her. The child's mother was dressing to go to the opera. She was neither a thoughtless nor a careless mother. But she thought for one night it would do no harm to have the servant put the child to bed. When she was dressed fully an hour after the child had been put to bed she tiptoed into her room to see if she was all right before she left the house.

Carefully she bent over the crib, only to bump into a rigid little figure sitting stiffly up in the middle of the bed, her night clothes so wet with perspiration that they stuck to her little body, while her head was burning hot. As she heard her mother's exclamation of surprise she gave a heartrending shriek and fell into her mother's arms unconscious.

For one hour that baby had been sitting in that dark room in an agony of dread, not daring to call out for fear of that awful thing under the bed. For days she raved in delirium, and it took years for her to overcome her fear of the dark.

The Baby's Teeth.

At one year a child should have six teeth. At one and a half years a child should have twelve teeth. At two years a child should have sixteen teeth. At two and a half years a child should have twenty teeth.

In at least 50 per cent of normal children the appearance of the teeth takes place without any constitutional disturbance. Many symptoms in an infant are ascribed to "teething," but it is rare indeed that any serious constitutional disturbance is due to the teeth alone.

A doctor should always be called in if there are any signs other than a slight fretfulness. More serious signs than this usually mean that there is some underlying cause, and that not the eruption of the teeth alone is responsible for the mischief.

Drugs should seldom be resorted to except on the advice of a doctor. If the gum above the erupting tooth is very tense and red it is better to gently rub the part with cotton wool soaked in glycerin and borax than to use a lance.

Children's Tan Shoes.

When children's tan shoes look discolored or shabby they may be renovated as follows: Mix a little liquid ammonia with a gill of milk, put into a bottle. Shake the bottle well and apply a little of the liquid with a sponge to the discolored tan shoes. Leave it to dry, and the result will be a pretty tan shade. If the bottle is kept tightly corked the mixture will last for months.

When after many cleanings children's white shoes look gray and shabby they can be made a pretty brown by applying saffron. Mix ten drops of saffron with three teaspoonfuls of olive oil. Clean shoes well before applying the mixture, as all dark spots will show. Apply with a piece of clean flannel, and after two coats they will look like new.

Sucking the Thumb.

Large lips and prominent teeth are frequently the result of allowing a child to suck the thumb. This habit is hard to overcome if allowed to continue any length of time, and it may be stopped by putting aloes on the unruly member. Aloes is a powdered herb, bitter but perfectly harmless. One taste of this herb will usually cure the child of its habit. If this does not suffice put mittens of cotton on the child's hands. In a few days he will forget all about his thumb.

Massage For Children.

Children can scarcely be too young for massage if it is administered gently and carefully. It develops their muscles in a marvelous manner. In massaging the baby the mother should put a little oil on her hand, which she should warm first. After the bath is the best time to massage. Twice a day is not too often if she has the time. Massage will strengthen baby's legs and help to correct any inclination to bandiness. Keep the little one off his feet as much as possible.

Studded and buttoned upholstery is to be avoided for the same reason.

Have You Caught On?

That cake soap means less soap for more money. N.P. BAR SOAP means more soap and better soap for less money. One bar of N.P. SOAP at 15 cents weighs more than four 5 cakes of ordinary soap, and more than five cakes of some kinds and you will find it better soap.

This Woman 115 Years Old.

The distinction of being the oldest woman in Canada probably goes to Mrs. Chapman, wife of Thomas Chapman, living in Bastard township. She has just celebrated her 115 birthday, and is hale and hearty, with good eyesight and good hearing. She was born in Ireland in 1799 and came out to Canada in 1844, taking up residence at her present homestead and remaining there ever since. When she married Thomas Chapman she was 66 years of age. Her husband is about 70. The couple have no children.

Mrs. Chapman boasts of the fact that when 100 years old she could climb a ladder into hay loft and do many odd chores around her farm.

By-law is Passed and the Power Chairman Makes Statement to Aldermen

At a special meeting of the City Council last evening it was decided, in accordance with the recommendation of the Power Committee, to rescind the by-law for the expropriating of the Peterboro Light and Power Co. and appointing an arbitrator which was passed on November 3rd, 1913. They also passed by-law No. 1841 drawn up recently by City Solicitor Gordon. The reason for the repealing of this by-law and the passing of a similar one was to enable the city to put to use the terms of the Peterboro Private Bill passed this year. The one last year left the Peterboro Light and Power Co. an opportunity to make the city purchase their generating plant as well as their distributing plant but the Act passed this year does not make this compulsory.

On motion of Ald. Johnston, seconded by Ald. Langford, the City Solicitor was authorised to make application before His Honor Judge Huycke for an order to enter upon, take possession of, and use the property expropriated, of the Peterboro Light and Power Co. by by-law No. 1841 of the City of Peterboro and pay $100,000, the amount fixed by the Hydro Electric Commission of Ontario as the price of the property and that the City Solicitor be authorized to take the necessary steps to obtain such an order. This motion carried.

Before the matter was brought to a close Ald. Johnston enlightened the members of the Council with the fact that the city will control the power by September the first and any information desired by present users of the Peterboro Light and Power Co. can be secured by applying to Manager Howse at the office of the Public Utilities Commission.

STANDARD SAYS O. A. LANGLEY GETS THE APPOINTMENT

The Standard is informed upon good authority that Mr. O. A. Langley, barrister, of Lakefield, has been appointed County Police Magistrate in succession to Mr. George Edmison, K.C., of Peterboro, who has resigned.

Mr. Langley's friends in Havelock, congratulate him upon the appointment and hope that his term of office will be marked by justice and impartiality in all his decisions.—Havelock Standard.

Get Legislation to Facilitate Work on Boundaries

The Board of Works last evening brought up a list of sewers to be constructed this year, one of which was on Lansdowne Street, the southern boundary. No arrangements have ever been made for erecting sewers on boundaries, thus what division of the cost the residents of the city should pay is not known. The matter was left over till the next meeting when some definite plan may be offered.

In connection with the above, Mayor Buller brought out a suggestion which he has introduced before in the city council. His idea is to have the City Solicitor speak to members of the Legislative Assembly, and urge them to so legislate that the cities and towns could annex the property to a depth of 120 feet on the opposite side of the boundaries. Being a part of the city, residents of the annexed property could make use of civic accommodations and then the boundary roads would be kept in good condition, a feature by which they are not marked at the present time.

It would not be improbable to see the city take some action along the lines of His Worship's idea.

Alderman Green pointed out that under existing conditions it would be possible to construct sewers and have the city pay the share of the residents on the side opposite the city and then when that section was annexed, to the city, a clause could be inserted whereby the section would pay the city back the money spent on the sewer.

KOMAGATA STEAMS AWAY

Was Convoyed From Harbor by Cruiser Rainbow

NO DEMONSTRATION

Canadian Press Despatch.

Vancouver, B.C., July 23.—The Japanese steamer Komagata Maru, which arrived in Vancouver harbor exactly two months ago, steamed out again shortly after five this morning, being convoyed by the steamer Rainbow to a point off Vancouver Island. The Hindus aboard made no demonstration.

VANCOUVER, B.C., July 23.—The Komagata Maru, the tramp steamer, now famous as the storm centre of situations which almost ended in a miniature naval battle is expected to leave Canada's shores today. With the cruiser Rainbow lying in the stream not two hundred yards away and with scores of militiamen mustered on the Canadian Pacific Railway wharves close at hand, ready for any emergency, no one expects further difficulty, although there is still an air of uncertainty in the city, and Vancouver will breathe a sigh of relief when the steamer pokes her nose out through the narrows and heads across the Gulf of Georgia towards the orient.

Off Vancouver Island two Japanese cruisers are said to be waiting to convoy the Maru to oriental waters. Yesterday was spent transferring food supplies to the steamer.

DEATH OF JOHN M. DINWOODIE

Operated Sawmill at Lakefield for Many Years

John M. Dinwoodie, who resided at Lakefield until several years ago, passed away at Thorold last Sunday. The funeral was held at Campbellford on Tuesday.

The late Mr. Dinwoodie was well known in this city, which he visited many times.

He was a native of Wellington County, having been born in the township of Nichol in the year 1837, and was one of a family of seven sons of the late James and Mrs. Dinwoodie. With his parents and other members of the family, he went to Campbellford in 1849. He was a millwright by trade, at which he worked in various places in Ontario and the United States. About forty years ago Mr. Dinwoodie removed from Campbellford to Lakefield and purchased a saw-milling business, which he conducted for many years. He also held a Government position for some years. He was married to Miss Curling, of Seymour, about 1867, and to them were born one son and one daughter. The daughter died at an early age, and Mrs. Dinwoodie passed away at Lakefield in 1905. About two years after the death of his wife, Mr. Dinwoodie sold out his business, and has since resided at Thorold. About eighteen months ago he suffered a stroke of paralysis and has been an invalid ever since that time. Mr. Dinwoodie had been for years a member of the Anglican Church. He is survived by one son, Mr. John Dinwoodie of Thorold, and one brother, Mr. Fred Dinwoodie of Campbellford.

PERCY HILL DROWNED IN THE OTONABEE RIVER AT CRAWFORD'S GROVE

Unknown to Frank Goslin His Companion, Who Was Washing His Canoe, Hill Went to His Death

Last evening the city was shadowed by the sad news that Percy Hill, an eighteen year old youth had lost his life while bathing at Crawford's Grove. The unfortunate young man and a pal, Frank Goslin, who resides at 513 Romaine Street, went to the river about six o'clock with the intention of having a swim. Hill was by no means an expert swimmer and the two sought a place where the water was not too deep.

Goslin was about to wash out his canoe and Hill assisted him in taking out the carpets and cushions and he also washed one side. He then started wading in the water to have as he said a "duck." Goslin continued washing the boat and informed Hill that he would need him in a few minutes to help him turn it over. Hill splashed about where the water was some two feet deep, and picked up a dead fish and called on his pal to look at it. Goslin turned around and that was the last time he saw his companion. When he turned again to summon him to assist in turning the boat he was nowhere to be seen and thinking he had gone around behind some bushes, Goslin called again but still received no answer.

Becoming alarmed Goslin called for help and two young men named Hatcher, came around the curve in a canoe. He yelled to them, asking if they had seen Hill and one in reply answered that he had noticed Hill standing on the shore a few minutes previous, but did not see him go down. Goslin then suspecting the worse commenced diving but was unable to locate the body.

It was but a matter of a few minutes till a large number of campers and residents of the vicinity were on the spot. Messrs. Armstrong, Hatcher, Mills and Grant dived repeatedly, but all to no avail. Fire Chief Howard arrived with the pulmotor, but left a few minutes before eight, as the body had been in the water then for nearly an hour. Mr. W. Haslam and Mr. H. Perkins secured grappling irons from the Wide-Awake Camp, but owing to the many weeds it was difficult work. At last, after an hour and a half's work, Vic. Grady and Percy Young claimed that they had felt the body with a pike pole, and when the grappling irons were pulled over the spot, one hook caught around the victim's ankle and he was raised to the surface.

Owing to the absence of Coroner Greer and County Constable A. Moore, Detectives Newhall and Meagher took charge and gave permission to take the body away. This was done immediately. On inquiry to-day, it was learned that no inquest will be held.

Mother in England.

Percy Hill was the second son of Henry Hill, who resides at 50 Jackson Avenue. His parents, one brother, Harry, and two sisters, Mrs. England, and Miss Ethel, survive. A sad circumstance is that Mrs. Hill and daughter Ethel are at present in the Old Country on a visit, and were not expected to return till September. Word will be sent to them at once.

The family have been residents of this city for about nine years. The young victim was employed in the Drafting Room of the Canadian General Electric Co.

The funeral will take place on Saturday afternoon at 2.30 to the Little Lake Cemetery. Service at the house at two o'clock.

A Tribute Paid.

The untimely end of Percy Hill by drowning last night in the Otonabee removes from life's stage a young life which showed great promise. In business or at play he was very earnest, and will be missed in many circles. He was a member of the Park Street Baptist Choir for some time and was a student of the Peterborough Choral Society in both the "Messiah" and Judas Maccabaeus productions. The sympathies of all are with the family in their loss, which is the more sad as Mrs. Hill and Miss Ethel Hill are visiting friends in England.

BANK CLERK LOSES LIFE

Drowns While Swimming at Niagara Falls

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., July 23.—A sad drowning accident occurred at half-past seven yesterday morning in the swimming lagoon near Dufferin Islands, in Victoria Park, when Courtney M. Wilkinson, 23, son of Lady Wilkinson, Newmarket, Kent, Eng., lost his life while in bathing in 12 feet of water half way between the electric railway bridge and the swimming pond. He and Gordon Fraser, aged 14, son of Police Magistrate Fraser, went to the swimming pond early yesterday morning. Shortly after getting into the water Fraser and his companion sank. Fraser secured the services of Park Policeman Greenwood, who dived several times, but could not locate Wilkinson.

Young Wilkinson was ledgerkeeper in the Imperial Bank.

BULGARIAN AUTHORITIES INVESTIGATING MURDER

Ask for Copy of Evidence of Inquest at Havelock Following Recovery of Duloff's Body—Suspected Man May Be Sent Here for Trial

The investigation into the Havelock Bulgarian murder mystery has been re-opened this time at the instigation of the Bulgarian Government. About six months ago early in the winter a Bulgarian laborer working on the C.P.R. construction work named N. Duloff mysteriously disappeared leaving no trace of his whereabouts. Shortly after his cap covered with blood was found on the railroad tracks near the mill pond. Investigation by the Havelock officials and the Provincial detectives combined with the efforts of Acting Crown Attorney Wearing of this city, gave the impression that Duloff had evidently met with foul play the motive being set down as robbery. A pal named Valisoff it seems had left the camp shortly after Duloff was last seen alive. No trace of his whereabouts could be found. Latterly it was discovered that he had left Havelock and was heard of in Montreal. Before leaving he obtained a check of Duloff's amounting to some $400 which he secured by some means from the pay clerk of the construction gang, at Havelock. Clothes belonging to Duloff were also alleged to have been stolen by the missing man. Later when the ice broke up the remains of Duloff were found in the mill pond as was expected by the detectives and officials. The verdict at the inquest was that the deceased Duloff had met his death due to being struck with a blunt instrument with strong suspicions pointing to Valisoff.

At the inquest letters from Valisoff to his friends, which were found by the Provincial detectives asked them not to tell of his whereabouts and stated that he was leaving for Bulgaria. On his arrival in Bulgaria the father of the murdered man had Valisoff arrested and since then he has been in custody in Bulgaria. But it was impossible to bring the man back for trial. Last week Mr. Wearing received a lengthy communication from the Attorney of Bulgaria asking for a complete copy of the evidence taken and he intimated that there was a possibility of the Bulgarian authorities sending the prisoner to Canada for his trial. Mr. Wearing did as requested and sent a detailed statement of the affair, along with a copy of the evidence and letters obtained during the investigation.

NEW EARLY RECORD.

Souris, Man., July 23.—A. J. McCulloagh started cutting a seventy-acre field of barley to the southwest of the town yesterday morning. The crop is a good one, and establishes a new early record for this district, if not for the Province.

OTONABEE FARMERS FIGHT DESTRUCTIVE ARMY WORM

Crop of Corn Almost a Total Loss, Due To Presence of Army of Worms---Agriculture Department at Norwood in the Fight

The army worm has commenced its crop destroying march in Otonabee Township, and the farmers of the district have organized and are struggling like trojans to check the pest in its combined attack on the crops. The worm made its appearance in miniature armies a few days ago, but not until yesterday did it show signs of gaining control of the situation. On the farm of Joshua Smithson, although the farmers worked hard, the worm has destroyed ten acres of corn and serious damage is reported on other farms of the vicinity. The pest, which is not more than one and one-quarter inches in length when fully developed, is striped similar to a caterpillar, marked with black, yellow and green. The origin of the worm is not known, but government men claim that they breed in the long grass, which many farmers permit to grow on their farms.

So serious is the situation in Otonabee that yesterday afternoon the Government agricultural representative for the district was called from Norwood to advise the farmers how to combat the worm. Gangs were organized and trenches constructed. Into those trenches the army of worms swarmed on their onward march to eat up and destroy all the crops. As soon as they reached the trench and tired to make their way over it, they found themselves crawling into smaller holes at the bottom of the trenches. Once in there they were either burned or killed by the use of coal oil. In that manner the advance of the crop killer has been checked to a certain extent, but the farmers are not taking any chances and trench digging gangs are hard at work this morning in an effort to eliminate the worm entirely.

Barley Crop Damaged.

On a farm owned by Mr. Doran the leaves were eaten off a 14 acre barley crop, while the heads were also damaged. As soon as the worm was noticed there, trenches were dug and hundreds of the little swarmers were killed.

Along the railway line, the worms hastened as fast as they could crawl. It has been known for an army of the pests to so cluster about the rails that trains have been held up through slippery tracks. Yesterday when the worm was noticed heading along the railway line towards the crops, gallons of coal oil were brought into commission and thousands of the worms killed.

This morning W. A. Anderson, when speaking of the situation stated that it was serious and much damage had been done, but the farmers were working heroically to save their crops.

The worm has also been noticed in Harvey Township and is very prominent in Victoria County, adjoining Peterboro County.

MEXICAN SITUATION IS BECOMING COMPLICATED

Internal and International Difficulties Have Arisen Which is Requiring Every Effort on the Part of the U.S. to Secure Harmony.

WASHINGTON, July 23. — Peace in Mexico is far from assured and complications both internal and international are rapidly entangling the situation, according to the well informed opinion of the administration officials, diplomats and Mexicans of both factions here who are in touch with all phrases of the problem.

The United States Government is exerting every diplomatic influence toward harmonizing discordant elements, but certain aspects are admittedly grave. Official reports reveal that the most threatening feature is the aloofness from the authority of Gen. Carranza. Another vexing point is that Gen. Carranza, according to his agents here, is disinclined to grant an amnesty to political offenders and will insist on an unconditional surrender by the Carbajal Government. Unless Carranza is willing to give assurances that there will be no wholesale arrests, executions and confiscation of property, when the Constitutionalists enter Mexico City, Provisional President Carbajal will rally all the military elements at his disposal to resist to the end the Constitutionalist advance.

Foreign complications are looming up as between Mexico and England, France and Spain, and European creditors generally who had financial relations with the Huetra Government. England is preparing to ask for satisfaction for the killing of Wm. S. Benton, France is making vigorous protest over the killing of two Frenchmen at Zacatecas. The Spanish Government has numerous grievances. The grievances of these countries are lodged against Gen. Villa particularly, and Gen. Carranza's estrangement with Villa has made it difficult for the first chief to attempt to settle them satisfactorily.

The Washington Government has made an earnest appeal to both Gen. Carranza and Gen. Villa to forget their personal differences and work in harmony for the restoration of peace. No indication of Villa's attitude since receiving the appeal has come, but reliable advices to the Washington Government are to the effect that Villa has been concentrating his troops preparing to make vigorous demands on Carranza.

INDUCTION AT NORWOOD

Norwood, July 23.—The ordination and induction of the Rev. E. J. Wolland, B.D., into the pastorate of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church here took place yesterday afternoon. Rev. Hugh Brown, of Warsaw, moderator of the Peterboro Presbytery, was in charge. Rev. G. I. Craw, of Springville, preached the ordination sermon. Rev. R. Pogue, Peterboro, addressed the minister, and Rev. H. J. Keith, of the same city, the people. Rev. Mr. Welland recently graduated from Montreal Presbyterian College, and is the winner of several scholarships as well as being a gold medalist in theology. His call here was unanimous.

Shot Girl Whose Hand Was Refused

Williamsport, Pa., July 23.—Arthur Simons, aged twenty-seven years, of Alexandria, N.Y., shot and fatally wounded Miss Iva Christian, fifteen years old, and shot Hiram L. Hachet, a neighbor, who interfered, at the home of the Christians, in Westfield township, Tioga county. Simons wanted to marry the girl, but was refused on account of her age. He drew a revolver and insisted on the marriage.

The girl left the room on a pretext and shot her through the back. He then shot at her father, and shot Hatchet, when he appeared, twice, one ball lodging in the abdomen. Miss Christian was taken to the Blossburg hospital and Simons was lodged in the Wellsboro jail. The girl was shot through the lung and cannot live.

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, July 23.—Because it was not immediately announced as on the preceding days of the conference at Buckingham Palace, that the negotiators would meet again to-morrow, it was surmised that a definite breakup had occurred. Much misgiving and extreme pessimism prevailed. Later in the day, however, official announcement was made that the discussions would be resumed tomorrow.

Slick Youth Picks Up $500 With Gum on End of His Cane

New York, July 23.—A handsome youth attired in brown, even to silk gloves and hat band, lounged against a column in the Waldorf lobby lazily twirling a slender cane, also brown, shortly before noon yesterday. Just beside him was the cashier's cage and behind the bulwark of brass Cashier Isadore W. Muller was counting money. In a basket two feet from the lounger, but inside the cage, were four packages, each containing $500 in $20 bills. Cashier Muller took up three of the packages and placed them in a drawer. Five seconds later he turned to get the remaining $500. The basket was empty.

Disappearing between the brass bars was the package, securely stuck to the end of the cane, on which was a wad of chewing gum. The young man smiled at the cashier, snatched the package from the end of the stock and fled around the corner through the main exit into Thirty-fourth street. Dozens of hotel guests curiously watched his flight. Muller, who had been dumb with amazement, suddenly regained his voice.

"Catch him! He stole $2,000!" he shouted, forgetting he had removed $1,500 from the basket.

House Detective M. A. Lawter and Head Footman Patrick Brady leaped through the doors and started in pursuit towards Fifth Avenue, the thief 50 yards in front and gaining every minute. He turned up Fifth Avenue with the two employes heading several hundred men and boys and tried to dart across the Avenue at Thirty-fifth Street. Traffic Policeman Fitzpatrick of Squad C saw the crowd and heard the cries, and as the symphony in brown dashed from the curb he was met by the policeman, who tackled him in football style.

The fugitive surrendered without a struggle, and was taken back to the Waldorf. There he was identified by Muller. The $500 was found in his pocket.

PETERBOROUGH, THURSDAY, JULY 23, 1914

MEN SHOULD HAVE A HOBBY.

WHETHER IT BE lawn bowling, baseball, tennis, motoring, yachting, or some other amusement, men should have something of this nature to take their minds away from work and the general routine of daily life. In the first place, it is a matter of health. Relaxation from the customary duties of life makes people feel better, and gives them more energy to perform their work. It makes them more efficient, and for that reason is a profitable thing on which to spend a little money. More satisfaction is obtained than by taking a doctor's medicine or a box of dope pills for a headache that comes from too close application.

The play instinct is as natural to all ages of man's life as food and, if it is not expressed, they get into a rut and really do not get the enjoyment out of life to which they are entitled. True it is that this play instinct is not the same at all periods. What interests a boy is not what attracts a young man, and an old man has also tastes indicative of his age. But these should be gratified, and they can be gratified, if the matter is viewed in a common sense light. It is of the nature of an investment that yields splendid returns in sound health, capacity to work, pleasure in living, and a blessing to society.

We remember reading, a few years ago, of an English gentleman, seventy-one years of age, who took a row of three, four or six miles on the Thames every day or so. He had seldom, if ever, been seriously sick, and looked twenty years younger than his actual age. It is recorded that the great Roman general Marius joined with the young men in the sports held on the Field of Mars when he was over seventy years of age. There are other cases like these which simply emphasize the fact that living wisely is to conserve one's vitality, and that means to get some relaxation from work, by whatever means individual tastes dictate.

LAURENCE IRVING'S ESTATE.

WORD HAS BEEN received that the estate of the late Laurence Irving, the well-known actor, who perished on the Empress of Ireland, amounted to less than $5000. In view of the fact that some stage celebrities are worth over a half million, the value of Irving's estate occasions some surprise. He had spent many years in his profession, but was just rising into prominence when death, coming out of the night and the fog, cut off his career. Doubtless he made money in his calling, but which he spent in various ways to achieve a reputation. That reputation having been made, he would have been on the high road to financial success had not his life been so suddenly brought to a close. Laurence Irving's estate shows that financial success is a follower, not a running mate, of professional success.

"TO CELEBRATE THE CANAL."

A FEW DAYS ago we commented on Mr. Burnham's suggestion that the completion of the Trent Valley Canal be celebrated in a manner worthy of this achievement, which was talked about before Peter Robinson, after whom this city is named, brought the first families to this locality. We have stated that immediate steps should be taken to perform this object worthily, and trust that the Council will consider the matter as its importance deserves. We are pleased to note that the Toronto Globe refers editorially to the proposed celebration thus:

> "Peterborough is discussing a fitting celebration for the opening of the Trent Valley Canal. This work has lingered long. Away back in the eighteen-thirties the canal was projected as a military highway, and a lock was built on the lower Trent River. But the difficulties of the rapids above and below, the 'upper nine miles' and the 'lower nine miles,' discouraged further efforts, and the gates succumbed to the slow process of decay. They were restored by Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, who was evidently enamored of the idea of an inaccessible lock restored and in good repair. The locks at Bobcaygeon, made famous by Smiff of the Independent, were among the earlier constructions. They control Sturgeon Lake and up to Fenelon Falls, and connect them with Pigeon and Chemong Lakes and Bridgenorth. The locks at Burleigh and Lovesick came later, and they brought the Kawartha Lakes into a continuous navigable stretch to Young's Point, where an old lock made the water navigable to Lakefield. The Peterborough lift lock, a new record in height, cut out the rapids from Lakefield, connecting with Little Lake and the Otonabee down through Rice Lake and the Hastings lock on the Trent River to Healey's Falls. The canal works on the lower Trent and the cut from Balsam Lake to Lake Simcoe unite the northern and southern slopes, and the locks and cuttings at Ragged Rapids and other points of the Severn will render all navigable.
>
> While the capacity essential for an important grain route may never be possible, the canal will be a valuable link in local transportation. For many important lines of manufacture the alternative of water transportation will be decidedly advantageous, even if never used. As a holiday route for canoeists it is unsurpassed, and the improved means of access to its miles of inviting shores and many islands will open new opportunities for summer residents. Those who have fought it out in the silence with the 'lunge in the lower Trent, the pike in the upper Kawartha Lakes, or the bass in the Severn may lament the invasion of the noisy steamer and gasoline launch, but the Trent Valley waters cannot escape either the improvements or the defacements of progress."

NEW ART SCHOLARSHIP.

THE FACT that a valuable scholarship in art has lately been established should be given as much publicity as possible in order that its purpose as an incentive to study may be realized. This travelling scholarship is granted by the trustees of the National Gallery of Canada, and is of the value of $1000, to be awarded annually at the exhibition of the Royal Canadian Academy of Arts. The scholarship will be open to painters or sculptors of either sex who are British subjects.

The winner of the scholarship will be required to leave Canada for Europe within three months of the award, and to reside in Europe for a year.

The history of Canadian Art, if it can be given that term, since it extends back scarcely more than sixty years, shows the need of assistance, and it is hoped this scholarship is but the beginning of other aids, which will eventually bring about the establishment of a style of art distinctive of Canadian life.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THAT NEW DOOR FRAME of the Dominion Bank, weighing forty tons, and which sank the rear wheels of the truck conveying it three feet through the pavement, will furnish, perhaps, a subject for wonder to the antiquarian studying the ancient people of Canada of 1914. As we wondered how the Egyptians placed their big blocks of stone in temple and pyramid, so a future age may not be able to account for our method of moving a forty-ton casting.

WE OBSERVE that the Dundas correspondent of the Hamilton Spectator is one of the very few persons in Canada who use the word vicinity correctly. He says, "in the vicinity of the town," not "Dundas and vicinity."

THE GLOBE is trying to raise an awful wind over some letters that it attributes to R. R. Gamey, M.L.A. Why has the Globe been so ill-advised as to try this in hot weather?

WE NEVER SAW a man who resembles Wm. Lyon Mackenzie more than Phillip Snowden, the British Labour M. P. now making a trip through Canada.

THE STEEL VESTIBULE of the vault of the new Dominion Bank building in Toronto weighs forty tons. That's strong enough to hold our wages, or perhaps, we should say salary.

THOSE ROBBERS who ran off with the C. P. R.'s safe at Lindsay were no doubt looking for tickets-of-leave.

THE WINDOW of the editorial sanctum has just been cleaned. We can now see through our panes.

Summer Sunday Madness.

New York Sun.

The pitiful tale of drownings and motor killings again darkens the record of the summer Sunday. One would suppose there were some contagion of madness in the Sunday air. Not one of the tragedies of the day is due to unavoidable mischance. Each brief, sad story shows up some man or woman who has abandoned all the ordinary restraints of common sense. Speeding without regard to possibilities of disaster, swimming or boating as if water were safe and stable as the land, utter disregard of accumulated warnings—these are the causes of the Sunday fatality, and not any inherent danger in reasonable sport sanely pursued.

The West and Canadian Politics.

Westminster Gazette.

In many ways the west is hopeful and novel. It is disturbing the ancient flow of Canadian politics. In the future it will disturb them even more. Up to now there has been no perceptible difference between the two political parties on any important question. The west will change that. Either the Liberal party will be altered from within, and become at least partly radical, or there will arise a Radical-Labor party whose nucleus is the trade union and the co-operative movement among the western farmers. The westerner is strongly inclined to free trade, suspicious of plutocracy, and indifferent to the naval question except in so far as he considers the whole navy a foolish fraud and desires to contribute to it neither in money nor in ships. He is ignorant of the world outside of North America, scornful of England and unconscious of Canada. Between Winnipeg and the Rockies is, for the time his universe. He would like to see that famously filled with people and large buildings and to make money for himself. A simple faith, held in the past with an almost disastrous optimism. Perhaps the truth is that, while the east has been built up on the meaner cautious individualism of the Scotch, underneath the west there lies the more generous, most unstable individualism of America. That theory certainly explains the difference in atmosphere. Time will show.

THIS GOOD WORLD

By Walt Mason

This good old world is wonderful, it gives us every chance; and if our lives are blunderful, and if we don't advance, the fault is ours, that's evident; we do not play the game; we ought to make a heavy dent in History or Fame. The world is kind and generous to every useful man; 'twill help (I'll bet a tenner!) us, in every worthy plan. If we are prompt and dutiful, and labor day by day, the world will act just beautiful, and help us on our way. It makes me feel jim-jamerous, from scalplock down to shoes, when kickers, loud and clamorous, this good old world abuse. If it's so beastly burdensome, with grief and woe so rife, their staying here's absurd an' some of them should quit this life. But when they get to Paradise they'll still stand round and kick, and want to shake the narrow dice to see who throws a brick. All worlds are stern and rigorous to that besotted mind which only can be vigorous when it has fault to find. This fine old world we're broiling in, where sunshine's always free, this world we're blithely toiling in, is good enough for me!

BOTTLED SMOKE.

Fortunes Will Be Extracted From Strange Commodity.

Bottled smoke is no longer expressive of a whimsical impossibility. The absurdity of yesterday is to-day an English commercial commodity worth thousands of pounds per annum.

Belching smoke and nauseous fumes which formerly obscured the sky and poisoned the air are now being collected and shipped to Germany, France, and even far-away Japan. Many an almond-eyed enthusiast runs his motor on "smoke" from a Durham coal-pit; German engineers cannot get enough of it, while the French motor firms could very well do with twice the present available supply.

Durham is doing its best to oblige. The mines, formerly mere "holes" for the extraction of coal, are being rapidly transformed into combined collieries and chemical works. Plant valued at over $5,000,000 has been laid down, and every day in the week thousands of gallons of "smoke" are being turned out for the market.

Commercially, the "smoke" is known as benzol. Chemically, it is an acid, produced from coal in the process of conversion into coke, the finished article closely resembling ordinary petrol. Costing about one-third less than petrol, benzol is claimed to answer all the purposes for which the older spirit is used.

It did not, however, always do so. At first the product was crude, and unsatisfactory in its combustive qualities. Improved methods of manufacture have now altered this, and it is confidently expected that benzol will soon largely replace petrol for motors and similar uses.

This is certainly the view taken by the Durham coal-owners. Big firms like Messrs. Pease & Partners, Bolckow and Vaughan, and Straker and Love are converting all their old coke-ovens into by-product ovens and replacing smoking chimneys with wonderful retorts and chemical vats. At one colliery alone, the Dean and Chapter, at Ferryhill, 8,000 gallons of benzol are treated every day. And less than a decade ago the active element in this valuable adjunct was passing up the chimneys as a nuisance!

Weird Beliefs In Nigeria.

Weird customs that exist in Southern Nigeria among a tribe known as the Ibibios were described by Mr. P. Amaury Talbot in a lecture before the Royal Geographical Society, says The London Standard. These people believe that if, when fishing in their canoes at night, a stranger suddenly appears out of the darkness and is found sitting amongst them, they catch more fish than during any other night in the year.

The country round Stubbs Creek is very sacred and often in the night time, the tribesmen say, they can hear the cries of sacrificial cows, goats and sheep, as they pass by on their way to the spirit world. The worship of natural forces plays a prominent part in the religion of these people, and the spirits of vegetation are held in special reverence.

On the wave-borne beach of that portion of the country taken over by Germany the people believe that after sunset of the day on which a great chief dies at Calabar, a canoe may be seen slipping through the shadows towards the town. Its coming is heralded by the sound of tom-toms played by mysterious hands, and it passes to a "a ghost town" thought to exist near the source of the river.

The man who manages to keep out of debt, out of jail and out of politics is a little above the average.

Tale of a Tower

Clever Evasion of the Law

The late Senator Allison, whose home was at Dubuque, Ia., thoroughly enjoyed humor and a good story. One day when in a reminiscent mood Mr. Allison narrated the following story, based upon facts, which is worth a place among tales extraordinary:

"Along about 1860, when the west was yet quite new, a number of business men in Dubuque conceived the idea of establishing a plant for the manufacture of shot and bullets. At the time there was no factory of that sort nearer than St. Louis, and, with a lively demand for ammunition, it was figured that a shot tower would pay like a California gold mine. The tower was built, the necessary machinery was put in at large expense and production began.

"For a time business was quite satisfactory; then demand slackened, and it soon became apparent that the enterprise would never develop any Standard Oil dividends. After a time some of the stockholders became disgusted with the whole business and practically offered to give away their holdings.

"Among them was John K. Graves, who afterward became a power in eastern Iowa politics. Graves quietly bought up the stock as it was offered, getting practically all of it eventually on the basis of 5 or 10 cents on the dollar. Just what Graves wanted this stock for his associates in the venture could not figure out, but they did not lose any sleep over that. They were tickled to death to get anything out of the dead enterprise. It had been losing money for some time.

"Soon after this the war broke out. Graves instantly saw his opportunity. War makes great quantities of bullets necessary, and he made preparations to supply them. He indulged in certain statements concerning his plans and purposes in the presence of persons he knew would flash the information to a St. Louis concern, and his scheme worked admirably. Inside of two weeks a man whom Graves knew to be a representative of the St. Louis shot tower company called upon him and in the course of the conversation brought up the subject of stock in the Dubuque company. After several days of dickering and bantering Graves unloaded his entire holdings of stock at over fifty cents on the dollar, realizing a small fortune.

"By the terms of the agreement, however, Graves legally bound himself not to erect a shot tower within a hundred miles of Dubuque within ten years. The representative of the St. Louis concern had scarcely got beyond sight of Dubuque, down the river, until Graves sent in an order for a complete equipment of machinery for a new shot making plant. While awaiting its arrival he indulged in a little surveying.

"Dubuque is situated partly upon a lofty hill or series of hills, and the inland country is extremely rough. When wandering among the bluffs Graves came upon the excavation of a deep well. Shortly afterward there was considerable activity in that vicinity. A force of men was employed to remove the debris, and the hole was enlarged and bricked up. A lateral incision was made into the side of the bluff, striking the main vertical shaft a hundred feet from the surface opening. Here a room was dug out and bricked up and prepared for the reception of machinery. By the time this work had been completed the outfit arrived and was quickly installed. Within two or three months of the time of disposing of the stock of the Dubuque concern Graves had the new suburban underground establishment in full blast, producing bullets and shot.

"Of course news of the new factory speedily reached the St. Louis concern, and they sent an attorney to Dubuque loaded with contracts and receipts and paraphernalia for making trouble. The lawyer called on Graves and plainly told him that if he did not shut up shop he would get the law on him quick. Graves replied that he did not understand he had violated any law or any pledge and that he would go right along making bullets, suggesting to the attorney that he start proceedings. The attorney invited Graves' attention to the bond given by the latter that he would not engage in the manufacture of shot or bullets within 100 miles of Dubuque for ten years. Graves contended that he had entered into no such covenant; he had pledged himself not to 'erect a shot tower,' and asked the attorney if he had erected a shot tower. The attorney said that was boy's talk; that such byplay would not go in a court of justice.

"The case was tried, and notwithstanding that every inch of ground was contested by the St. Louis concern, which had able counsel, Graves won. The St. Louis lawyers could not make the jury believe that Graves had 'erected' a shot tower. And so he went right on pouring melted lead into the hole in the top of the hill and gathering up shot and bullets in his brick room 100 feet below and became a wealthy man."—Frank L. Stillman in St. Louis Republic.

SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson IV.—Third Quarter, For July 26, 1914.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Luke xix, 11-27. Memory Verses 16, 17—Golden Text, Matt. xxv, 21—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

The introduction to this parable of the pounds (verses 11, 12) seems to me most unmistakably clear concerning the postponement of the kingdom. They thought that it would immediately appear, and they had reason to think so, for John the Baptist and the Lord Jesus and the twelve and the seventy had all proclaimed it as at hand (Matt. iii, 2; iv, 17; x, 7; Luke x, 9).

The mighty works wrought by the Lord and the twelve and the seventy indicated the coming of the kingdom. But when the rulers rejected the Messiah, the King, and determined to kill Him, that led to the unfolding of the present age of a rejected Christ, a scattered Israel and a postponed kingdom until the king shall return. He has gone to the far country to receive the kingdom and to return and has intrusted His servants with pounds and talents to use in His absence and give an account of at His return, and their position in His kingdom will depend upon their faithfulness in His absence.

That the kingdom will come at His return is also plainly stated in Acts iii, 21, where we read that the heavens have received Him until the times of the restoration of all things of which the prophets have spoken.

In the story of the talents in Matt. xxv, which should be studied with this lesson, there is also an account of the far country, the goods intrusted to the servants and the reckoning at the Master's return. While in each record we read of pounds and talents given to His servants to use, we read that some were wicked and slothful and finally found their place among the lost, so we must conclude that He gives opportunity to all who profess to be His servants to prove whether they really are so or not. No real servant of His can ever be lost, though some may be saved as by fire and have no reward (John x, 28; I Cor. iii, 11-15).

In the lesson on the pounds He gave the same to each, but in that on the talents He gave according to their ability, unto one five, to another two, to another one. The pound given to each may represent the Spirit given to every one to profit withal (I Cor. xii, 7). The Spirit spoke wondrously through Balaam, and we have no reason to doubt that Judas Iscariot did not do wonders like the others, yet neither were true servants. The talents may refer to the special gifts of the Spirit, given variously and in different measure, as He may see fit (I Cor. xii, 8-11).

The first step is to receive the Lord Jesus as Zaccheus did and thus obtain salvation as the free gift of God (Luke xix, 1-10; Rom. vi, 23; John i, 12; iii, 16; Rev. xxii, 17), then, having become a child of God, live to serve the living and true God while we wait for His Son from heaven (I Thess. i, 9, 10; Tit. ii, 11-13; Rom. v, 1, 2).

I am continually glad that He has appointed all our service, prepared all our good works beforehand, and that He only expects us to minister as of the ability which He giveth, holding ourselves ready for any manner of service and wholly at His commandment (Eph. ii, 10; I Pet. iv, 11; I Chron. xxviii, 21).

I am also glad that it is God who worketh in us both to will and to do of His good pleasure, working all things after the counsel of His own will (Phil. ii, 13; Eph. i, 11). Notice in the story of the talents the servants say "I have gained five talents more" or "I have gained two other talents," while in the story of the pounds they say "Lord, thy pound hath gained ten pounds," or "Lord, thy pound hath gained five pounds," recognizing that while we work it is really God who works, and yet He gives us the credit. It must be the vine bearing the fruit, else it counts for nothing (John xv, 5). Whether the gain be five talents or two talents, ten pounds or five pounds, the words of approval are "Thou good servant" or "Thou good and faithful servant." Then notice in the recompense, authority over ten cities or five cities, ruler over many things, or, as we said at the beginning of the lesson, position in the kingdom according to faithfulness, reward according to work (Luke xiv, 14; Rev. xxii, 12; II John 8.

In reference to taking from the unfaithful servant "that he hath," it is explained in Luke viii, 18, by the words, "that which he seemeth to have," or as in the margin, "thinketh that he hath." He only seemed to be a servant, thought that he was one, but was not really one.

Oh, how necessary it is to be sure that we are indeed in Christ, not thinking that it is all right because we are a bit religious or enjoy the service or like to do good or are church members, but certain that we can under the scrutiny of those eyes like a flame of fire, say from the heart, "O Lord, Thou knowest that all my trust as a sinner is in Thy precious blood which was shed for me when Thou didst bear my sins on Calvary (I Pet. ii, 24; Isa. liii, 6; i, 18; xliii, 25). The order in Matt. xxv is ready to enter in, then faithfully serving, then with Christ judging the nations. The order in Luke xix is saved, as was Zaccheus, then faithfully occupying till He come or till the triumphal entry shall be fully realized.

Their action was mild and the result all that could be expected.

My Kidneys resumed their normal action after I had taken upwards of a dozen boxes, and I regained my old-time vitality. Today, I am enjoying the best health I have ever had".

Her Library.

It is clear that the young women who figure in this little conversation from the New York Telegraph were no blue stockings:

Amy—I don't know what to give Gladys for a birthday. She has a gold mesh bag, she has a wrist watch, she has a silver toilet set—oh, she has everything!

Pearl—Well, give her a book.

Amy—No; she has a book too.

Her Father's Car.

"Where were you last night?" asked one girl of another.

"I was out riding with father in his car."

"But I did not know your father has an automobile."

"He hasn't; he is a motorman."—Indianapolis News.

An Experiment In Reproduction.

The well-known painter, Mr. A. Dickson Patterson, R.C.A., of Montreal, whose portraits of Canadian public men are famous throughout this country, has recently developed a new field of endeavor in the reproduction of the works of the celebrated masters of the past. As everyone is aware there has been a very strong movement in all quarters for reproductions of a high artistic quality which bring the great painters of all epochs into closer relation with the art lover of to-day. Mr. Patterson's experiments in this direction have been most successful. He executes crayon drawings of works by Velasquez, Rembrandt, Heppner, Greuze, and others, the originals of which are to be found in the great private collections of Montreal and the Metropolitan Museum of Art New York; but he does not aim at mechanical replicas of the pictures as they stand. He reproduces with exactitude the drawing and expression of the originals with a faint key suggestion of their coloring. As he is one of the finest draughtsmen of the day he is able to do this and preserve the dignity of the originals; without forcing his own vehicle beyond its limitations. His work so far is in the highest degree artistic and suggestive, and has commanded much admiration in art circles abroad.

WEALTH OF "THE PRIORY."

Home of Late William Armstrong In Toronto a Treasure House.

One of the most remarkable collections of art objects and curios ever made in Canada was that of the late William Armstrong, bridge builder and artist, who died the other day in Toronto.

Of particular interest amongst the nautical treasures of the Priory is the telescope used by Lord Nelson at Trafalgar. It belonged to Mr. Spencer, a lieutenant on the Victory, and was handed on to William Armstrong, with the authentic account of its use by the famous admiral, by the family of Lieut. Spencer himself. The relic is associated with the late Mr. Armtrong's work as chief engineer of Birkenhead's dockyard and harbor works.

Merely to mention a few of the treasures collected by the late engineer would fill columns. He travelled widely in the west, and also in India and Japan. On the walls of the smoking room in the Priory Cree moccasins touch the leather folds of Custer's coat bordered with "Old Glory" in beadwork, the coat Custer was wearing when he was shot. Bullet holes and buckshot marks perforate it.

North American arrows and stone weapons hang beside khybee knives, and between them in their niches rest carven pipes—"of peace," perhaps. A "Lord Kirkcudbright" teapot with metal spout is in the drawing-room, and here, too, is a priceless piece of china, one of the only two similar plates in the world. The other is in the Vatican.

The pictures, too, are almost priceless. Twenty unfinished Turner sketches are scattered here and there on the walls. In the studio are a Van der Velde seascape of 1610, and a J. Ruysdael of the same century.

The late Mr. Armstrong's own work was mostly in watercolor, and dealt mostly with marine and Indian or Canadian subjects.

Many of Mr. Armstrong's pictures deal with the Wolseley Red River expedition and early days in Toronto.

Distinguished as an engineer and as an artist—William Armstrong was a Royal Academician and his water colors were recognised and eagerly sought by British Royalty—the late William Armstrong was an outstanding personality in rising Toronto.

Still unfinished is the lovely water-color picture he was painting an hour or so before the call came for him. He laid down his brush a little wearied, carefully covered his palettes and paper in his historic studio overlooking busy Queen street, and then lay down to rest. He slept, and sleeping placidly, died.

Beer and Cigarettes.

Canadians consumed more beer, but drank less spirits and smoked less tobacco, excepting cigarettes, last year than in the year previous, according to the Department of Inland Revenue.

The consumption of spirits, per head of population, was 1.061 gallons as against 1.112 gallons in 1913; beer, 7.200 gallons as compared with 7.005 gallons; of wine, .124 gallons as against .131 gallons, and of tobacco 3.711 pounds compared with 3.818. Duty paid on spirits equalled $2.249 per capita.

Despite the campaign instituted against cigarettes, the consumption last year passed the billion mark. The total was 1,166,023,170, an increased of 188,277,869 cigarettes as compared with the previous year.

Old Time Punishments.

Among the weird and horrible punishments inflicted in Quebec under both the French and British regimes were the burning of women at the stake for petty treason, burning of the hand, branding on the forehead, and breaking on the wheel.

GREAT MIDWAY

Con. T. Kennedy Promises Wonders for Canadian National Exhibition

The Midway at the Canadian National Exhibition this year promises to be something to write home about. When Con. T. Kennedy, the King of the Carnival Showmen, came to the Exhibition last year he had little exception of the size of the Canadian National Exhibition. He learned a lot during the two weeks.

No sooner was the Exhibition over that he started raking the amusement world for material to give us a Midway worthy of the Fair. He writes that he has got the goods to do it. That means that we are to have the greatest Midway ever put on anywhere. It will be clean, wholesome fun, but in large quantities, so if you yearn for the sweet song of the speller, the smell of the sawdust and the red lemonade you know where to find it.

CUT HIS THROAT TO END HIS LIFE

Well-to-do Farmer Takes Deliberate Action

Port Dover, July 23.—John McArthur, aged sixty-three years, a well-to-do farmer living about three miles from Port Dover, committed suicide in a most determined manner yesterday. The unfortunate man almost severed his head from his body with a razor.

The deceased retired to a ford adjoining the house shortly after 7 o'clock yesterday morning, and was not thereafter seen alive. When found he had a razor clenched tightly in his hand, and his neck was literally cut from ear to ear, severing all the arteries and the windpipe, and almost reaching the vertebrae. Death, of course, must have been instantaneous.

Coroner Dr. Cook of Port Dover, who was immediately summoned, said he never before saw or heard of such a self-inflicted cut. After investigating all the circumstances he regarded an inquest as unnecessary.

The deceased man had been ailing for several months, and at times suffered from severe dementia. He had been in a nervous condition for the past few weeks, so much so that he had to be almost constantly watched, and seemed to worry greatly over trifles.

He leaves a wife and five daughters, four of whom are married, and two grandchildren.

CANADIAN ALFALFA WILL BE SHOWN AT PANAMA EXPOSITION

The University or Saskatchewan four years ago instituted a competition to stimulate interest in the production of alfalfa in the province. Six thousand dollars was set aside for the best fields of alfalfa of two years' standing. The fields were to be judged in 1914, and for purpose of judging, the province was divided into four districts.

It is now announced that in one of the sections of the Province, District "D," the first prize of $500 has been awarded to Dr. S. E. Shaw, of Biggar, whose ten acres of alfalfa is entirely within town limits and within three-quarters of a mile from the Biggar post office and near the Grand Trunk Pacific right-of-way. Dr. Shaw is the district medical officer for the Grand Trunk Pacific and his work as an agriculturist has shown that the light sandy soil prevailing around Biggar, pronounced of little value by the first settlers is really of wonderful fertility and productiveness. Dr. Shaw has received a request from the Department of Agriculture for samples of the alfalfa grown on his land and these will be exhibited at the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco next year.

HE PAID UP.

Harry Harrison who was arrested here, for the Toronto Police, was given his freedom after paying a $60 account with his boarding mistress.

MISSIONARIES

Many Workers for Foreign Fields to Leave

Toronto, July 23.—Toronto's larger contributions to ocean steamship travel include the groups of missionaries' sent from the mission headquarters of the various Canadian denominations. The latter summer of each year regularly sees a large number of men sent to the foreign mission field. It was at first expected that some religious bodies would this year refuse to expand their missionary endeavors, but a later financial improvement has enabled a host of sailings to be arranged. The Methodist program is confined to Sze Chwan Province, China; the Presbyterians are working in India, Honan, China, and Korea; the Baptists are sending their men to India.

On Saturday next Rev. H. S. Forbes and Rev. Fred Smith leave Montreal on the Saturnia. Arriving on the Continent, they will board the trans-Siberian express for Korea. The rail journey alone occupies the best of three weeks, and crosses two continents. On this voyage of the Saturnia there will also be Rev. and Mrs. D. F. Smith, who will tranship at Glasgow for India. Dr. Murdoch McKenzie, former moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly, is companying them.

The Empress of Japan, leaving Vancouver on September 17, has booked a large party to China. They are: Rev. and Mrs. A. W. Longhead, Miss A. E. Ross, Miss S. Lethbridge, and the Rev. J. G. G. Bonpas for Honan; Miss H. Connell returning to Formosa, and Rev. Duncan McRae to South China.

Missionaries going to India sail from Montreal by the Saturnia, leaving on September 19. They are: Rev. B. S. Smillie, Miss Smillie, Mr. A. R. Graham, Miss L. I. F. Moodie, Miss Dorothy Kilpatrick, daughter of Prof. Kilpatrick of Knox College, Miss Gwendolin Gardner, and Miss Flora Hughes.

The Methodist contingent for China is as follows: Rev. G. E. Hartwell, one of the first missionaries to go to China, and who is returning; Rev. and Mrs. W. B. Albertson, returning from furlough; Rev. K. J. and Mrs. Beeton, Rev. M. P. Brandon, recently graduate nurses. toria; Miss Geraldine Hartwell of Nanaimo, and L. M. Haddocks of Brandon, recently graduates nurses. The dates of sailing have not yet been fixed.

EDMONTON POLICE ARE CONDEMNED

Edmonton, Alta., July 23.—The report of Mr. Justice Scott, as the result of the police investigation, submitted to the City Council, is a strong arraignment of the police administration, and describes general conditions revealed by the investigation as "of the most serious possible character."

Mr. Justice Scott made a scathing indictment of the administration of the police force since the first of February this year, which was the date when Chief Lancely assumed office. His Lordship states that evidence is conflicting as to what was the policy of the administration regarding prostitution, but, conflicting or not, there does not seem to be much doubt in his mind as to where the policy emanated from, and who was responsible for its being put into operation.

QUEBEC IS INVADED.

Army Worm Makes Its Appearance Near Ottawa.

OTTAWA, July 23.—The dreaded army worm has appeared and begun its ravages at Shawville and four other sections of Pontiac County, Que., It is attacking the wheat, barley and oats, and the farmers are very anxious and are using every means to fight the plague. Trenches are being made, and spraying is kept up day and night.

Elgin County Suffers.

AYLMER, Ont., July 23. — The army worm has reached Elgin County, making its first appearance yesterday on the farm of J. E. Laidlaw, southeast of here. Mr. Laidlaw has plowed a furrow along the edge of the field affected, boring holes in the furrow at short intervals. The worms have been falling into the holes on reaching the furrow and here they are being destroyed.

CAILLAUX TRIUMPHS

Forces Contession That Important Papers are Non-Existent

PARIS, July 23.—The ex-Premier, Joseph Caillaux, was again the central figure yesterday in the proceedings in the Court of Assise, where his wife, Mme. Henriette Caillaux, is on trial for the killing of Gaston Calmette, editor of The Figaro. The court room was crowded in the expectations of sensational revelations arising from M. Labori's closing ultimatum of Tuesday night, when he declared he would refuse to plead unless a full statement was made by the Government regarding documents which, it was alleged, were important enough to crush Caillaux.

On the opening of court yesterday morning, the Procurator-General said that he was authorized by the Government to declare that the documents referred to in Tuesday's testimony did not exist. Instead, therefore, of utterly discrediting the ex-Premier, the incident ended in his triumph, as his brilliant antagonist, Mr. Chenu, counsel for the Calmette family, was obliged to acknowledge.

When the Procurator-General resumed his seat, M. Labori, counsel for Mme. Caillaux, said: "We consider the incident closed."

Twice during the session yesterday there were exciting scenes. On the first occasion, Mr. Chenu, having declared that it did not become M. Caillaux to come there and endeavor to soil the grave which his wife had made, the ex-Premier sprang forward and exclaimed: "Since I must take notice of what this lawyer has said, I will ask him if he will take personal responsibility for his words?"

When the uproar which this utterance occasioned had subsided, M. Chenu replied: "I take the entire responsibility. You cannot menace me here."

As M. Caillaux left the court at the close of the hearing, many hands were outstretched to him, some those of acquaintances, others of total strangers. He seemed to be deeply touched by these manifestations of sympathy and exclaimed in a voice shaken with real emotion: "I see I still have some friends left."

WHERE THE HEATHER BLOOMS IN CANADA

The visit of Sir Conan Doyle to Jasper Park has served to draw the attention of the travelling public of Great Britain to the magnificent asset Canada possesses in her great national reserves. Mr. J. B. Harkin, Commissioner of Dominion Parks, is also carrying on a campaign to make these immense playgrounds better known and has just issued from the Department of the Interior a most attractive souvenir of the mountain peaks. This is a booklet entitled "Just a Sprig of Mountain Heather." Attached to its cover is a piece of real purple heather taken from the Alpine meadows of the Canadian Rockies.

It is a novel and very effective way to capture the tourists' interest in Canada's National Parks. Mr. Harkin treats in the booklet of the significance of these reserves and of the Dominion's natural heritage of beauty in the form of majestic mountain, peaceful valley and emerald lake. Jasper is the latest of the Dominion Parks to be established. It comprises an area of a thousand square miles in the wonderful district recently opened up by the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific through the Yellowstone Pass.

FIREBUG SENTENCED

LONDON, Ont., July 23. — Fred Matthews, an English youth, was given three months in the Central Prison yesterday for setting fire to a number of buildings on the premises of the Church of England Orphanabe east of the city, and will be deported upon the expiration of his term.

Woman Goes To Prison.

MONTREAL, July 23.—Alice Cantin, alias Thibeault, who was found guilty of passing a forged check for $590, was sentenced by Judge Choquet yesterday to St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary for three years. The woman refused to give the name of her accomplices.

CONFERENCE ON HOME RULE BILL WILL PROBABLY COME TO AN END TO-DAY

There Seems Little or no Prospect of an Agreement Being Reached Between Opposing Leaders—Asquith's Assumption of Responsibility For King's Speech Allays Liberal Storm.

LONDON, July 23. — At the close of a Cabinet Council late yesterday it became known that there is only the smallest prospect of the Home Rule conference arriving at an agreement, and that its termination when it reassembles to-day is regarded as certain.

Sir Edward Carson, it is understood, stands for the complete exclusion of six counties in Ulster from the operation of the Home Rule bill, including Fermanagh and Tyrone, while John Redmond declines as firmly to go beyond the concessions Premier Asquith already has made in permitting county referendums, and unless some way out of the difficulty is discovered at the eleventh hour it is believed that Premier Asquith today will be obliged to announce the failure of the conference.

Premier Asquith's assurances to Parliament yesterday, assuming full responsibility for the King's speech, and declaring that no constitutional precedent has been contravened, allayed much of the angry feeling among the Liberals, or at least transferred it from the King to the Premier himself.

Active negotiations are proceeding outside of Buckingham Palace, between the party leaders. Premier Asquith had an interview last night with Lord Lansdowne and Andrew Bonar Law, the Opposition leaders, between two separate sittings of the Cabinet.

All kinds of rumors are current, one that Winston Spencer Churchill, First Lord of the Admiralty, representing the minority in the Cabinet favoring the clean-cut exclusion of Ulster, had threatened to resign; another that the King will make another dramatic move at the conference, and that a speedy general election has become inevitable.

John Redmond, the Nationalist leader, received last night resolutions adopted at a conference at Omagh of Nationalist delegates from the counties of Derry, Tyrone and Fermanagh, affirming unabated confidence in the Irish leader, and declaring that at the risk of their lives Ulster Nationalists would never consent to be separated from the Irish nation.

The Daily News comes out this morning with the announcement that to-day conference at Buckingham Palace promises to be the last and that it will conclude without any approach to a settlement. The Unionist leaders, it says, refuse to make any concessions that can possibly lead to a settlement. The question of areas in the Province of Ulster was discussed in yesterday's conference and ended in a complete deadlock.

The Radical and Labor Press, which have consistently treated the manoeuvring in Ireland as so much bluff, express astonishment at the King's observation that the cry of civil war is on the lips of the most responsible and sober-minded of my people."

The Chronicle, describing such a statement as "amazing," says:

"The cry of civil war is nothing more than the Unionist party's present cry, but upon Liberal readers the speech can only leave one impression. It is that the King has spoken of the Unionist party as 'we' and of the Liberal party as 'they.'

The Daily News says: "We don't know who these most responsible, sober-minded people are, but what we do know is that the cry has been raised in the Tory press for two years past with a view of overawing Parliament. It has been raised in such a way as to make it clear to Orangemen that if only they would drill and arm they would be able to overthrow the British Parliament and defeat its legislation."

FIGHTING IN THE STREETS

Situation in St. Petersburg Strike Getting Serious

ST. PETERSBURG, July 23.—The strike situation in Russia took on a very serious aspect yesterday when armed conflicts occurred in the streets and resulted in the wounding of many police, Cossacks and strikers.

Just outside the capital a passenger train on the coast line to Finland was held up by strikers. The engineer was forced to quit the locomotive under threat of being shot and the passengers all driven out of the cars. The strikers engaged in this outrage numbered 300, and they then proceeded to cut down the telegraph poles and raise obstructions on the tracks.

A detachment of Cossacks and gendarmes arrived quickly on the scene and drove off the strikers. Traffic was then resumed, but every train was convoyed by a locomotive with an armed escort.

Fifty Haitiens Executed.

WASHINGTON, July 23. — About fifty Haitien rebels were summarily executed at Cape Haitien yesterday after the Government forces had won a fierce two-hour battle in the streets with 500 revolutionists, who had gained entrance into the town early in the morning before the garrison was awake.

Manslaughter Charge Fails.

NORTH BAY, Ont., July 23.—David Morland, real estate dealer, of North Bay, was arraigned before Magistrate Weegar on a charge of manslaughter, the case arising out of the death of Miss Morisette, of Mattawa, from injuries received in an automobile accident. Other inmates of the car, who were injured, testified that the car had not been speeding, and that there was no reckless driving, and the case was dismissed.

SUFFRAGETTES CREATE RIOT

BELFAST, July 23.—A crowd of militant suffragettes created a wild tumult in the assize court and its vicinity when Miss Dorothy Evans, an official of the Belfast branch of the Women's Social and Political Union, was brought up for trial on the charge of having in her possession explosives for the purpose of committing a felony. Miss Evans had been arrested in the house of the Lord Mayor of Belfast.

The disturbance caused by the suffragettes, who broke windows and savagely assaulted the police, was so great that proceedings had to be suspended for a time.

POLICE COURT

Man Charged With Theft gets Suspended Sentence

Arthur Kennedy, a local man, who was charged with the theft of a brass kettle valued at $25 and articles from George Fitzgerald's, valued at $15, pleaded guilty at this morning's session of Police Court, and elected summary trial. His counsel in addressing the Magistrate, pointed out that Kennedy had wasted his life, due to excessive drinking, and at the time of the theft was not in fit condition to know what he was doing. He had been before the court frequently for drinking, but never on a theft charge. He had a wife and two children. The drink had resulted in him going down hill, until he had stooped to theft. It was the only chance to redeem him by letting him out on suspended sentence and report to the Chief every week. Acting Crown Attorney Wearing also remarked that suspended sentence would serve Kennedy to some extent and they could sentence him whenever he failed to make good. Kennedy was allowed to depart.

Not Popular.

"Evidently one of the new cops doesn't like me," remarked Alex. Ross this morning, who attended Police Court on the charge of being drunk. Alex. further remarked that every time he got a' jag on, this cop would pinch him.

"Well, we certainly can't afford to nurse drunks around here," smiled the Magistrate, as he imposed a $2 fine. Alex was without the fine, but a friend in court produced the necessary, and he left the room.

'He's getting thirsty," remarked the Chief.

LOCAL BLACKLISTERS PLEASE TAKE NOTICE

Fellow Member of Temperance Band Has a New One

License Inspector Thornbury had two police court cases slated for trial this morning, but owing to one offender failing to put in an appearance, only one was heard by His Worship, P. M. Jackson.

In this case the offender, a local man, was accused of having been intoxicated while on the prohibited list. He pleaded guilty, putting up the plea that the "redeye" was in his trunk previous to the time he was placed on the list, and he simply partook of the balance of the refreshing liquids, rather than waste the stuff entirely.

To Magistrate Jackson's enquiry he further stated that the last of the bottle had been finished, and he would get drunk no more.

His Worship levied the usual amount of $10 and costs, $12 in all.

CANAL CELEBRATION

Matter is Left With Special Committee

Ald. Johnston, chairman of the committee to meet Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., in regard to the opening of the Trent Canal celebration, reported to the Council last evening. He and the other members of the committee met Mr. Burnham and from all appearance the work will be completed some time in August, and as it means a big thing for Peterboro, Mr. Burnham hoped to see the city prepare a fitting celebration.

The matter was left in the hands of the committee with power to act. At present their plans are very indefinite, but it may be possible that one portion of the celebration would be the visit to the city of one of the large lake vessels.

CHANCE TO INSPECT CREOSOTE PAVEMENT

Evidently none of the City Patres are very fond of touring. Last night a letter was read from the Canada Creosote Co. asking that three or four of the aldermen meet a representative of their firm in Toronto today and accompany him to Detroit to see some of their pavement. On suggestion of the Mayor, the invitation was laid over for the time being. Ald. Stratton thought that it would be too much for the whole Council to go but would like to see eight or ten members make the trip at a later date.

BOARD OF WORKS HEAR OBJECTION

Sidewalk Will not be Constructed at Request of Resident

A deputation of south end residents, namely John O'Brien, Robert Nichols and Arthur Lazure, waited on the Board of Works last evening and requested that the sidewalk recently advertised for the north side of Romaine Street from Park St. west to Lazure's property be not built as the property which it would front, is vacant. It was decided to allow the construction to lay over for a year.

A letter from City Engineer Parsons voiced an idea of Superintendent Howse of the P.R.T. to purchase a machine for making blue prints. All the civic departments could use it. When the price of $235 was mentioned one of the members hurriedly moved that the letter be received.

A letter from the Machine Telephone Co. was read asking permission to extend some of their conduits in order to be ready for the paving of the streets. On the recommendation of the City Engineer it was granted.

The Bell Telephone applied for the right to erect a pole on Cumberland Street which will give telephone connection to V. Richardson. It was also granted.

S. C. Warne asked that the city erect an approach to his garage on Gilmour Street. The approach will be constructed and as before the bill sent to the applicant.

Ald. Saunders wanted to know why Wescott Street wasn't watered although it appeared on the route of the southern wagon. The exact reason for the street being left out could not be ascertained but the watering man in that section is doing all he can possibly cover at the present time, it was said.

WINNIPEG Y.M.C.A. OFFICIAL HERE

H. R. Hadock is Also in Charge of Public Playgrounds

Among the guests in the city today is the Director of Physical Education in Winnipeg, H. R. Hadcock, who is visiting his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Hadcock, Water Street, for a few days before leaving for Lake Couchiching, where he will assume charge of the summer school held there annually by the Y.M.C.A. Mr. Hadcock is head supervisor of the Winnipeg Public Playground system, and has become one of the prime factors in the outdoor life of Winnipeg. Mr. Hadcock although only a young man, has charge of the various physical educational classes of Winnipeg, and is an athlete of repute. While here he is also a guest of Physical Director Carson of the Y.M.C.A. When in Winnipeg, Mr. Carson was connected with the same staff, and acted for Mr. Hadcock as supervisor in various capacities.

No Truth in Rumor

The rumor around the city that a skeleton had been unearthed in the vicinity of the Vermont Marble Works in East City is unfounded. Some time ago laborers while digging came across several skulls buried about two feet below the surface of the ground.

RAIN WELCOMED BY FARMERS

One Farm Spring Goes Dry for First Time in Many Years

The rain of this morning was welcomed by the farmers, who expect it to help them in their fight against the army worm, which has not been known to do damage in wet seasons. The rain will no doubt have some good effect, but one well known farmer stated that it would not benefit the oats or hay to any extent, and those crops, owing to lack of rain, are very bad in this district.

An evidence of the dry season the farmer has had to encounter is in the fact that a spring on County Treasurer Elliott's farm is dry for the first time in the memory of the earliest settler in Smith Township. Mr. Elliott stated that the oldest inhabitant could not remember ever seeing the spring go dry before.

WHEN WAGES ARE OVERDUE

How a Canadian May Coerce a Slow-Paying Employer

A body of workingmen who had worked faithfully on the erection of several duplex houses in Toronto were faced on a recent Saturday night by the builder's plea of "no funds," says The Toronto Star Weekly. Some weeks went by, during which the builder doled out occasional five-dollar bills here and there, the workingmen's accounts meanwhile falling farther behind. Work was so scarce that few could afford to rebel openly. In any event a vigorous complaint would only mean the lost of back pay. Finally, the builder invited his employes to consult his lawyer in a downtown office building—which cost them hours of their time. The lawyer boldly offered to settle their accounts with the builder—less ten per cent. for his personal fee. The cash was piled on the desk temptingly, and as each defrauded worker stepped forward he signed a release for the debt in full. A few rebelled at such a plain violation of a workingman's agreement, but the debt had run too long, the weather was cold, and the money looked good. The trap worked to perfection, and lawyer and builder no doubt enjoyed a hearty chuckle at their cleverness.

Not alone in Toronto, but everywhere in Canada, workingmen hesitate to carry an account for wages into a public court, and on that well-known timidity the dishonest builder trades to his heart's content. The workingman actually has small reason to stay away from the courts when he has a just claim and good evidence. Nor need he fear lawyer's fees and other bogies, for unless he expressly engages a lawyer he will receive no bill from anybody, and may obtain the whole amount of his claim without deductions of any sort.

The correct process of any workingman regarding himself as wronged by the employer in the matter of wages is to visit the clerk of a Division Court, who will serve a summons on the employer, and if the latter fails to appear at the next sitting his admission of the claim is taken for granted. Usually he will dispute it, however, and it will be necessary for the workingman to be on hand and give his evidence. If the judge renders him a favorable verdict, the court clerk is obliged to collect the debt and turn the money over to the plaintiff without any further trouble or worry on the latter's part. He merely awaits for two weeks or so the processes of a court's machinery. If necessary a bailiff is placed in the employer's house, should he refuse or refrain from paying, and enough furniture or other property can be auctioned off to meet the amount awarded by the court.

There are some curious clauses in the Canadian law referring to the collection of accounts of this kind. A married man is allowed two hundred dollars' worth of goods as an exemption from seizure. One cannot take his cook stove in summer or his heating apparatus in winter, or his bedclothes or his overcoat. If he is a drayman or a farmer, his means of livelihood, such as horses, wagons, etc., are outside the bailiff's clutches. However, the average employer is not limited to one stove, or one set of bedclothes. He may own real estate, which with most recalcitrant paymasters would be heavily mortgaged. So that the unpaid worker has only the option of waiting indefinitely for his money to come in dribs and drabs, or of issuing a summons in the Division Court, which may take a month to get returns, or he may place a lien on the property to which he has given his services.

The Carcajou.

The carcajou or wolverine is the "bete noir" of both the white and Indian hunter in Eastern Canada's hinterland. It is the personification of the devil among the Indians, owing to its destructive habits. Every Indian has wonderful stories to relate about both the ferocity and the intelligence of the wolverine. Scarcely any store of provisions or outfit can be made secure against its intrusion and theft. When once it breaks in, it not only eats all it can, but very carefully goes to work to soil and destroy.

On the Northwest river a few years ago, a wolverine carried away a trap in which it had been caught, and a few days later was taken in another trap on the Hamilton river, some thirty miles away from the place where it had picked up the first trap. It would not likely have been captured at all were it not that weight of the first trap and chain attached to it, it was unable to hunt for food, and being reduced to starvation and hampered by the trap attached to its front leg, it was impossible for it to spring the other one without being caught.

THE MARKETS

Latest Quotations in Grain, Dairy Products, Live Stock, etc.

CHICAGO, July 22.—Black rust and heat spoiling the outlook for even an average yield in the spring crop belt made the wheat market tend to soar. The close was firm, 7-8c to 1c and 1¼c above last night. Corn showed a net advance of 1¼c to 1 5-8c. Oats were ⅛c off to 1-8c up. In provisions the outcome ranged from 22½c decline to a gain of 2½c to 5c. It was generally admitted for the first time that all prospect of a big crop of wheat this year in the northwest was gone.

Tampering By Strikers?

ST. CATHARINES, July 23.—Repeated interference with the Hydro-Electric system in this city has led to a suspicion that tampering has been done by Hamilton strikers or their friends. WATCH THE COLT'S FOOT

Left to itself, the foot of the colt does not always grow according to the most approved fashion. There is need for the careful horseman to keep close watch on the colt's hoofs. In stony or gravelly soil the horn usually wears off at the rate sufficient to maintain the proper proportions; but in black loamy soils the hoofs are little worn and growing fast they may become unshapely. This may even result in malformation in extreme cases.

The usual remedy in case of such unshapely hoofs on the youngsters is to shorten the toes with a rasp. The walls of the foot may also be rounded a bit. A rasp and a knife in the hands of an enthusiastic novice, however, are likely to be wielded so as to do more harm than good. The good horseman is always a careful horseman. A toe too long is likely to make a pastern too steep. When the colt's feet need attention, it should be given, else the eventual sale price is liable to be cut down considerably. One should also remember that hoof horns, like all other parts of the colt's anatomy, must be made out of the feed which goes in at the youngster's mouth.

To keep lemons, put them in a stone jar of clean dry sand, so that they do not touch.

A Masterpiece.

What is declared to be the most exquisite mixing of metaphors by an English public man since John Burns inveighed against the London County Council for "taking a white elephant under its wing" is the effort of James Ramsay Macdonald, M.P., who in reference to the Syndicalists, said in a speech in London the other day:

"No sooner do they get themselves into a hole than they put down a string so that we may pull them out of it. The Delilah of Syndicalism has endeavored to cut the locks of trades unionism, so that it becomes a mere piece of putty in the hands of the political authorities."

An excellent way to prepare a new iron kettle for use is to fill with cold water and one cupful of rye meal. Keep at boiling point several hours.

Answer Form 1. Review's Summer Pastime

The Name Represented By the Picture Is

Aids to Winning

Study the picture carefully and consider how you may apply it to a person's name. The bust on the pedestal is that of a famous musical composer and the two musicians are his admirers. The conversation may give a clue to part of the name and the bust (or statue) may give the clue to another part of the name, although the last or surname will suffice.

The name of the player represented in the picture above is one of the following: Purtell, Pick, Oldham, Madden, Howley, Smith, Cunningham, Keller, Doolin, Couchman, Killifer, Shafer, Merkle, Wiltse, Otto Knabe, Tom Seaton, Archer, Hans Wagner, Whaling, Devlin, Dickson, Hyland, Rube Marquard, Bender, Groom, Rondeau, Doyle, Snodgrass, or Stock. WHICH? Study it out! Later on, we shall give no such clues, but we wish now to show you the way to proceed.

Keep your Answer Form in a safe place and await the picture in Tuesday's issue, which we intimate in advance will be that of a well-known Montreal player.

No knowledge of baseball, lacrosse, hockey or football is necessary. There is only one fully and logically correct answer to a picture. The Rules in adjoining columns state the simple conditions of the pleasurable Summer Pastime. Make a good start; and "keep at it."

RULES OF THE REVIEW'S SUMMER PASTIME

Read These and Keep Them Handy for References

A PLEASING GAME. The competition known as The Review Summer Pastime will be held through the columns of this newspaper beginning Monday, June 15th, and continuing for 75 days. In each issue of The Review there will be printed a rebus picture cut of which the name of a baseball, hockey or football player can be made. The names are generally known throughout Canada, being published in newspapers frequently. A part of the names are Canadian and a part are from the important leagues of the United States.

HOW TO STUDY. See how a rebus picture will apply to any name you know. For example: MASON might be represented by a mason at work and WAGNER by a picture or statute of the famous musician. Only one name will logically fit any rebus picture when carefully analyzed. Although initials, first names or nicknames may be worked into rebus pictures as a guide to correct solving, it will suffice if surnames are written in Answer Form.

USE THE ANSWER FORM. Under each picture will be printed a numbered Summer Pastime Answer Form. On this the name of the player is to be written and when the series of Answer Form Coupons is completed, there will be 75 names. Only one name may be written on one Form. The contestant is to keep his or her Forms until the end of the series then send to this office, the series of 75 with a separate list of the names written additionally on a form that will be printed in The Review after the last picture has appeared.

WINNERS. The person who sends in the set of 75 Answer Forms with largest number of correct names will be entitled to the first prize. If there should be a tie, then the prize will be evenly divided, unless there should be more than three participants tied for a prize, in which case those who have sent in sets of equal merit will be given a further opportunity to determine which shall win by solving a supplementary competition test. This rule will also apply to the lesser prizes. There will be no lottery or chance selection; all winners will be rewarded according to merit.

COMMITTEE. A Summer Pastime Committee of fair-minded persons of high standing, who have no personal interest in this establishment or in the Pastime, will be selected to ascertain the winners. The decision of the Committee shall be final and all who enter do so distinctly upon this understanding.

OPEN TO ALL. The Review's Summer Pastime is open to everybody—excepting employes of this newspaper establishment and their families—regardless of sex or age; and it makes no difference where a competitor lives, provided the package of Answer Forms is returned within the time allowed. There can be no favoritism of any kind.

HELP TO CONTESTANTS. As an aid to competitors who may not be familiar with the names of those who are associated with the games of baseball, lacrosse, hockey and football this year, a book has been published entitled "Summer Pastime Handbook" containing a selected list of about 2,500 players and including every one of the 75 names used in our Pastime. The book is so arranged as to present the easiest possible method of finding the desired names. The price of the handbook is 25 cents and is obtainable at the office of The Daily Review, 166-168 Hunter St., Peterborough, between 8 and 6 daily, or will be mailed on receipt of 26 cents in postage stamps. Additional to the information given in this book the purchaser will receive free an extra supply of 75 Answer Forms which will have the same standing as those published in he Review. Any competitor who obtains this book is guaranteed that all the names illustrated by the rebus pictures can be found therein. Therefore it is possible to a mathematical certainty for a competitor to compile a correct list by due study.

COMBINATION. The Review's Summer Pastime, with its $150.00 in cash rewards, is being operated by The Peterborough Daily Review and in The Peterborough Weekly Review. Readers of The Daily Review who may wish to give distant friends the pleasure of participating in the Summer Pastime, as well as enjoying a wholesome weekly periodical of unusual interest, should call their attention to this opportunity, or better still, subscribe to the Weekly Review for a friend at $1.00 for a full year or 50 cents for six months.

GENERAL RULES. Answer Forms may be filled in with pencil, ink, or typewriter. Poor handwriting or trifling errors will not count against a participant. No sets of Answer Forms are to be sent in until called for in The Daily Review after the last rebus picture has appeared. The management reserves the right to make any modification in the rules that may be found necessary during the progress of the Summer Pastime, or until the Committee takes charge. One participant may send in as many separate sets of Answer Forms as desired but he or she will be allowed to win not over four prizes. All persons are treated as independent individuals; therefore two or more members of a family or household have the same rights as if they were strangers to each other.

L. SCHETTLER WAS IN FORM

Consequently the Senators Were Helpless and Did Not Get a Hit After the Second --- Both Teams Played Snappy Game in Final of Series

Louie Schettler showed his wares in the final of the series with Ottawa, and the Petes registered a victory by 4 to 1. It was a tidy game of ball and the local moundman should have been credited with a shutout, which is some feat when the enemy proves to be the gang from Parliament Hill. True, Mr. Dolan pitched the eighth innings and Mr. Rogers played the first bag in the same frame and this undoubtedly added strength??? to the invaders, but yet in the face of it, the Petes plugged along and won the game It is remarkable, but nevertheless a fact.

Schettler had eight strike outs, he contributed two hits, one of which scored a run and he allowed but three hits, all of which came in the first and second stanzas. Once the veteran warmed up, it was all up with the visitors. The single tally came in the first on hits by Smykal and Stewart and an excusable slip by Blount, the ball taking a bound that fooled the midget leader.

The locals tallied in the initial round, which Blount started with a triple. Welsh walked, but Mitchell was waiting with the ball when he attempted to steal.

On Dolan's hit to Smykal, Blount beat it for home and when it appeared the throw had him beaten, Lage dropped the bal'.

Another one came in the second. Byrne doubled, King fanned and Fox grounded out. [illegible] fanned and Schettler shot the ball through second, scoring Byrne.

Again in the sixth the Petes tallied on two hits and some lively work, Dolan scoring when the Ottawa first sacker fell over himself in fielding the ball.

The fourth came in the eighth, which found Casey Dolan on the heaving pile, Rogers at first base and Shocker in left field. Dolan passed our own Dolan and Rooney, and in the succeeding manoeuvres in which Rogers contributed two errors, much to the delight of the grandstands, the home gang boosted their total to four.

Schettler delivered the goods in the eighth, when Shocker batted for Peterson. The Ottawa hurler was served with three wide ones and looked good for a free ticket. But he walked not to the base, but rather whiffed.

The score:

Peterboro.

LOUIE SCHETTLER

He allowed the Senators but three hits and should have registered a shut out. He fanned eight and had two hits, one of which scored a runner.

NOTHING DEFINITE IN LINE OF DEAL

Negotiations which Manager Shaughnessy and Manager Blount carried on last night with a view to selling or trading one of the local pitchers to the Senators failed to produce results. President Denham, Manager Blount, "Shag" and President Fitzgerald held a long confab but the local president stated this morning that nothing definite was arrived at.

The locals open a three-game series in Hamilton today and should fatten their win column considerable as the Athletics are not going very good while the Petes have been meeting with good success.

J. PLUV. FAVORS THE BALL CLUB

But Gets Busy When Lacrosse Players Perform

Rain plays favorites the same as some race track followers do. Five league lacrosse games will have been played in this city this season when the Peterboro-Campbellford game is completed this afternoon. Four of the games have been interfered with by rain and one was played on a cloudy, threatening day. On the other hand not one baseball game on the home lot has been called off on account of rain. On the morning of May 25 it rained but not sufficiently to call the game off or prevent more than 1000 fans from attending. The weather conditions have put an awful crimp in the bank accounts of the fellows behind the lacrosse team but those who have spent their hard earned cash in trying to put the game on a good footing are game enough to try again next year. Some effort should be made to arrange the Peterboro home games on Thursday and Saturday when the Canadian League team is away. That is providing Peterboro is on the league map next season. Otherwise, it will be clear sailing for the lacrosse boosters.

Y.M.C.A. WAR CANOE CREW AFTER SCALPS OF ST. PAULS' CREW

Showing better form and more style the Y.M.C.A. war canoe crew are working hard and getting into shape for the big regatta meets which will commence this month. One of the features of this season's aquatic work will be a City Regatta which is under way and which promises to be one of the best ever held in this city. It will be along different lines than it has been conducted during the past few years. In connection with the crew of the Y.M.C.A. new members are working hard for a place and this is also the case with St. Paul's fast crew, who have won two successive victories over the Association crew in hard fought races. Speaking to the Review this morning Physical Director Carson of the Y. remarked that this year they were confident of defeating the church crew.

Twirlers Won Game

A very exciting game was played on Wednesday evening between the Roger St. Ramblers and the East City Twirlers. The score resulted in 12-7 in favor of the Twirlers.

Batteries : Ramblers, Whitehouse, Lipsett and Theobald. Twirlers, McLean and Williams.

Umpires : McMahon and Hamilton.

GAME POSTPONED.

The lacrosse match between Campbellford and Peterboro scheduled for this afternoon was postponed until a later date. The Campbellford management phoned early this afternoon and the local management instructed them not to come, owing to the weather conditions.

STORY CORROBORATED.

John S. Scott's Partner Says Hon. W. F. McLeod Got Money.

ST. JOHN, N.B., July 23.—Ernest L. Kelly, partner of John S. Scott in a sub-contract on the Valley Railway, yesterday corroborated his partner's evidence of Tuesday relative to relations with Hon. W. F. McLeod, M.P., then a member of the Flemming Government, who is alleged to have received $1,500 from the firm.

Kelly added that when he and Scott reported to McLeod that Hibbard had given them the contract, Scott asked if there was any way "the engineers could get back at us," and McLeod replied: "I'm Provincial Secretary, and I'll see that they use you right, and I'll sign no bonds for them until they do."

Accountant Hoben, of the Quebec & St. John Railway Construction Co., gave evidence of payments to Mr. McLeod for legal services.

J. B. M. Baxter, M.P.P., he said, received $321 for legal services, and later a retainer for $500, but returned the latter, and the original voucher was sent back to him at his request.

"BLACK HANDER" JAILED.

North Bay Italian Had Been Threatening Compatriots.

NORTH BAY, July 23. — A well-planned Black Hand enteprrise has been nipped in the bud by the vigilance of the provincial police, and the chief conspirator is now safely locked up in Sudbury Jail, awaiting trial, having been committed by Magistrate Brodie. For the past few months well-to-do Italian citizens in the district of Nipissing have been receiving letters couched in approved Black Hand language, demanding money and threatening violent death if the requests were not satisfied. An Italian merchant in Sudbury was one of the victims picked upon and he received an ultimatum that unless he came to North Bay and deposited $500 under a rock in the vicinity of Trout Lake he would meet a sudden and horrible death. A trap was laid at North Bay postoffice and Constable Lefebvre captured a man named Michael Angelo Silvestro.

ANOTHER WAR OF SERVICE?

U. S. May Interfere in Hayti and Santo Domingo.

WASHINGTON, July 23. — Plans for mobilizing at least one thousand U. S. Marines within striking distance of Hayti and the Dominican Republic moved forward another step to-day with the arrival of the naval transport Prairie at Guantanamo, Cuba, from Vera Cruz.

War and navy officials, confident that peace can be restored on the island only by the active intervention of the United States are perfecting their plans.

People Are Starving.

SAN JUAN, Porto Rico, July 23. —The U. S. revenue cutter Algonquin arrived here Tuesday night from Puerto Plata, Dominican Republic, with 166 refugees, mostly Porto Ricans on board. One woman died during the voyage from the effects of starvation.

[illegible] Sentenced.

BROCKVILLE, July 23. — W. R. Miller was [illegible] trial yesterday before Judge Macdonald on two charges of having obtained money on false pretences by checks upon a bank in which there were no funds to meet them. The crown made out a strong case, and the accused on being found guilty was sentenced to one year on each charge in the Central Prison, the terms to run concurrently.

He Knew.

"If I were you," his wife said, "I'd go to that man and tell him exactly what I thought of him. He lied to you, and you ought to tell him that you know it. If I were you I'd let him know just how I despised him. I'd have the satisfaction of making him feel ashamed of himself."

"No, my dear," he replied, "you wouldn't do anything of the kind. If you were me you'd do just as I'm doing. This fellow weighs fifty pounds more than I do, and they tell me he's one of the best boxers in this town."—Chicago Record-Herald.

REPORT FROM RAILWAY BOARD

In Regard to Duckets at Railway Crossings

The report of the Ontario Railway Board's Inspector on the changes to be made on the Grand Trunk Railway System in this city were read last night at the Board of Works meeting. The Inspector signified his approval of the placing of the duckets, at the corner of King & Bethune and Sherbrooke and King, on the thirteen foot posts as agreed upon some time ago. Inspector Harris also came out very plainly in regards to the engine house and stated that it was a wreck and should be moved outside the city limits.

The City Clerk will write the Railway Board and inform them that the city is endeavoring to bring about these proposed changes.

The Board also received a communication from Superintendent Uren of the C.P.R., an answer to City Engineer Parson's letter in which the C.P.R. were requested to move back the south fence at the Romaine St. crossing to make room for the sidewalk and also to plank the north west end of the crossing a little more. According to Mr. Uren's letter this work will be done at once.

THINK MISS YORKE HAS CROSSED LINE

Inspector is Investigating the Latest Story

Kingston, July 23.—As time goes on people who have been searching for Miss Blanche Yorke, of Tamworth, who disappeared on the night of July 8, are more convinced than ever that the missing young lady made her way to Kingston and crossed on the steamer America on Thursday afternoon last and is in one of the United States cities. The story to the effect that Miss Yorke crossed on the steamer America on Thursday last was corroborated by a passenger who returned on the steamer America. The woman in question told the United States immigration officer that she was certain Miss Yorke was a passenger on the America when she went over to Cape Vincent last week. From the description given by the lady the officer was convinced that it was the missing Tamworth woman. She was unaccompanied, and when she left the steamer at Cape Vincent that was the last seen of her. A prominent citizen states that he saw Miss Yorke in Kingston last week. She was carrying a small valise and a parcel, which she left in a local hotel while she went over to a Princess Street store. She called back for her belongings afterwards. Inspector Nutter came in on the morning C.P.R. train with the intention of investigating the Cape Vincent story, and also with a view of getting in touch if possible with Dr. C. K. Robinson, who left Tamworth some days ago.

Mrs. Jones, 357 Earl Street, sister of Dr. Robinson, refused to say when she had received the last communication from her brother, but gave the impression that it was not long since. She said that her brother traveled around quite a lot. She would not say when he was last in the city, but said she did not know where he was at the present time.

TORONTO, July 23. — Prof. John Galbraith, civil engineer, and since 1899 principal of the School of Applied Science at the University of Toronto, died yesterday morning at his summer home on Go-Home Bay, in the Georgian Bay district. Although not in the best of health for some time, his condition was by no means one to cause apprehension, and his sudden death came as a shock to his family and friends.

John Galbraith was born in Montreal on the 5th of September, 1846, the son of the late Thomas and Jane (Anderson) Galbraith. His education was begun at the Port Hope Grammar school, and following his course there he came to the University of Toronto. He took his B. A. with a double scholarship in mathematics and general proficiency, and was a Prince's prize man and took a gold medal in mathematics in 1868. Then in 1875 he took his M. A. degree and received the degree of honorary LL.D. in 1902. The following year he received the same degree from Queen's University.

JOHN GALBRAITH.

In 1886 he married Emily, who was the youngest daughter of the late Capt. R. D. Stupart, R.N. He studied engineering under George A. Stewart, then chief engineer of the Midland Railway, and was later connected with the construction of the Intercolonial Railway, the Midland Railway and the C. P. R. When the School of Practical Science was formed in 1878 he took the chair of engineering. In 1899 he was made principal of the school, and for some years past has been dean of the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering at Toronto University.

MUSTN'T KISS THE BRIDE IN CHURCH

Old Shoes and Rice Are Also Tabooed.

Chicago, July 24. — These are the rules that hereafter will govern wedding ceremonies in Our Lady of Lourdes Church:

1. Don't kiss the bride in church, at the train, or anywhere in public.
2. Don't throw rice at the bride or bridesmaids anywhere.
3. Don't throw flowers like pagans.
4. Don't throw old shoes or placard cabs.

The rules were promulgated by Father James M. Scanlan, who three months ago took charge of the parish. He came from St. John's church in the third ward, where for fourteen years he was pastor.

Our Lady of Lourdes Church is located in a neighborhood where there are many young people, and where social gayeties throng the calendar. Hence, the announcement of Father Scanlan created more interest than anything that has occurred in the parish for months.

"We must maintain the solemnity of the marriage ceremony," says Father Scanlan. "Bridal parties forget that it is a sacrament when performed in the church, but the customs that have grown up, silly and meaningless except for some superstition, are survivals of barbarism. It is brutal to kiss the bride en masse, to mob her in public, and to pelt her with rice and shoes. Such customs foster brutality and superstition. I don't object to some fun at home. It may be all right to kiss the bride there, but rice-throwing should be barred everywhere."

To get any sort of thickening smooth stir it with an egg-beater or perforated cake spoon.

Every kitchen should have among its supplies a saw for trimming meat and some larding needles.

Gideons' Convention.

Boston, July 24.—Registration and social events made up today's program at the 15th annual convention of the Gideons, the organization of commercial travellers, which has for one of its principal objects the placing of a Bible in every hotel room in the United States and Canada.

It was announced that 273,000 Bibles had been distributed by the association.

Bees Help Orchards.

Many remarkable facts have been noticed by fruit inspectors, while on their regular tours of inspection, regarding the importance of bees in orchards in spring during the apple-blossoming period. In the County of Middlesex there were comparatively few apples one season. Practically the only exception was an orchard of 12 or 14 acres, the proprietor of which was also an extensive bee-keeper. The explanation given was that, as the bees were kept in the orchard, they were able during even the short periods of sunshine, to fertilise the blossoms fairly well.

Bee-keeping is a paying and profitable occupation; one that should receive much more attention than is given to this very important industry. Fruit blossoms of nearly all kinds depend almost exclusively upon insects for their pollenization. The wild bees include about 50 per cent. of the insects useful to the fruit grower for this purpose, but in large plantations, such as orchards, plantations of strawberries or bush fruits, etc., the large number of blossoms coming in at the same time overtax the usual number of wild bees in the neighborhood so that it is advisable to have a special stock of honey bees to supplement them. More than this, tame bees being kept in the immediate neighborhood, or directly in the fruit plantations, are more useful than the wild bees which may in many cases have to fly long distances, and cannot reach the orchards during the mild spells between showers.—J.F., in "Conservation."

Locomotive Fired by Mechanical Stoker

The engineers and naval architects are doing some big things in the way of construction just now, as the recent arrival of the Vaterland and the Aquitania at New York has shown; but the building or the great Erie freight locomotive gives evidence that in that other great field of transportation, the railway, the engineer is also building in ever-increasing sizes and weights. This most interesting locomotive has recently been completed for the Erie railroad from designs by G. R. Henderson, consulting engineer of the Baldwin Locomotive Works. It is the heaviest and most powerful locomotive ever constructed, its total weight being 853,050 pounds. It is 105 feet long.

Hitherto the most powerful freight locomotive was what is known as the Virginian Mallet, which, when working compound, has a tractive effort of 115,000 pounds. The tractive effort of the new Erie locomotive is 160,000 pounds, or a direct pull on the drawbar of 80 American tons. The locomotive has been built for the pusher service on an eight-mile stretch of grade east of Susquehanna, Penn., which has an average rise of 56 feet to the mile. The new locomotive, which is known as the Triplex Compound, will take the place on full tonnage trains of three separaate pushers, as now used.

The novelty in this locomotive consists in the fact that in addition to the two separate engines placed under the locomotive proper, which are the characteristic features of the Mallet type, a third engine has been placed under the tender, whose weight is thus brought into service for tractive effort. The boiler is of enormous proportions. At the front end it is 94 inches in diameter and at the dome ring 108¼ inches in diameter. The fire-box, of the radial-stay type, is 162 inches long and 108 inches wide at the mud ring. The locomotive is fired by a mechanical stoker. Superheated steam is used, of course.—Scientific American.

PRAYER BOOK CHANGES

Many New Invocations For Special Occasions Have Been Added.

The second statement of the Bishop Suffragan of Kingston on the proposals for the revision and enrichment of the Book of Common Prayer, which the revision committee requested him to prepare, shows that many new prayers have been added. These include prayers at the New Year, for missionaries, for those about to be confirmed, for Parliamentary elections, for fair weather, for blessing on fisheries, for fruitful seasons, for hospitals, for those who travel, or the sick, for synods and for vacant pastorates and sees. Many of these prayers are taken from the Scottish Prayer Book, some from the Irish Prayer Book, others from the American Prayer Book, and various sources.

The prayer for Parliament has been adopted to include the Dominion Parliament and Provincial Legislatures.

The prayers in the time of dearth and famine and in the time of any common plague or sickness appear in the adapted forms.

Dates of all the festivals which fall on fixed days are placed at the foot of the page.

The third collect for Good Friday is thus amended: The words after "Have mercy upon . . . hereticks" are removed and it now reads: "Have mercy upon the Jews, Thine ancient people, and upon all who reject and deny Thy Son."

The title of the twenty-fifth Sunday after Trinity is changed to the Sunday next before Advent.

Proper anthems are proposed for the greater festivals in place of the venite as an Easter Day. The Transfiguration becomes an appointed feast.

Numerous minor changes are made in the Communion service, the Baptismal service, and the administration of the rite of confirmation.

The old tables showing how to find the time of Easter and other movable feasts have been withdrawn and instead the tables showing the dates of these principal movable feasts for one hundred years ahead have been inserted.

There have been some changes in connection with the Calendar of Saints tending to bring the national Saints into greater prominence. The special Saints' Day services for New Testament saints have not been altered; but in the list of saints the names of St. George, St. Andrew, St. Patrick, and St David now appear, as representing England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales respectively.

In the Creed no alteration has been made, but a footnote has been added. Much objection was taken to the phrase, "He descended into Hell," as it is so often misunderstood and thought to mean that He descended into the abode of the lost to suffer there the full penalty of human sin. The revisers have left the creed unaltered, but append a foot note "'Note that the words 'He descended into Hell,' are to be regarded as meaning he went into the abode of the departed spirits."

A slight change has also been made in the marriage sevice. The sentence expressing in the frank language of the fifteenth century the main objects of wedlock has been phrased more delicately and one or two other minor alterations on the same principle follow. Thus the words "with my body I Thee worship" have been changed to read "with my body I Thee honor."

A number of other minor changes were also mentioned, but the old Prayer Book is on the whole little changed, and the changes made are in the nature of improvements. The suggested new volume will not appear unfamiliar to those accustomed to the present edition.

Just Missed Celebrity.

Telegraph Creek got its name in a very curious manner. Some forty-seven years ago the Western Union Telegraph Co. ran a line of wires via the "Ashcroft Trail," which starts in at the town of that name, located on the C.P.R. system about 240 miles from Vancouver. The Western Union's purpose was to carry this line up to Behring Strait and lay a cable under that body of water—which is but a few miles across — and then build a line to St. Petersburg, to Paris, and other European capitals, and finally to London.

When the line reached this creek, a message came that the Atlantic cable, just laid, was a complete and successful line, and was then in operation. The engineer corps in charge of the work of stringing this overhead line was ordered back to New York. Thus the creek became known as Telegraph Creek.

Yukon Territory just missed being on an important route between East and West, by a scientific achievement, which it was said at the time had barely "a gambler's chance," of becoming a reality, though the cable has become a very prosaic fact now.

Offers Champlain Relic.

Dr. Finley, president of the University of New York, has sent a telegram to Mr. W. D. Lighthall, K.C., as president of the Antiquarian Society, offering the City of Montreal, through that society, the arch and side stones of the principal gateway at Brouage, in Brittany, France, in which Samuel de Champlain, the famous governor of the first French settlers in Lower Canada, was born in 1567.

CRIPPEN'S CURSE

Murderer's Remark to Kendall Recalled by Disaster.

Has the curse of Dr. Crippen, the London wife murderer, at last worked its evil end upon Captain Kendall?

That is the question many people who were intimately connected with the Crippen case of four years ago will ask themselves.

It was in these very waters, off that forbidding headland in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, where the Empress of Ireland went down, that Kendall handed the wretched doctor, till then unaware that his disguise had been penetrated, over to the tender mercies of the Scotland Yard Inspector Dew and the officers of the police force of the Province of Quebec.

"You will suffer for this treachery," the enraged Crippen, fixing his bulging, evil eyes upon the trim young captain, is reported to have threatened when he was searched, but at the time no one paid any special attention to the words.

It was in those waters four years ago, where Captain Kendall came to fame, and laid the foundation for future advancement, and it was within only a few miles from the spot where Crippen was captured that the captain met with the greatest disaster that can well befall the master of a ship.

And this was Kendall's first voyage as captain of the Empress.

On the night previous to Crippen's capture, while the army of reporters and artists from all over the world, were anxiously awaiting the S. S. Montrose's arrival, and the whole world but Crippen, himself, knew that his identity had been discovered, the ghostly piercing wail of the gigantic foghorn at Father Point, which is expelled with sufficient force to blow away a grown up man, or two of them, should they rashly venture close in front of it, and makes sufficient noise as it leaves the mouthpiece to break their ear-drums, kept sending out its warning at minutes' intervals.

The office where the news is sent from occupies the lower portion of the old light-tower, which also contains the living rooms of the signal officer, a post held for dozens of years by Mr. McWilliams, senior, who had two capable assistants in his son and a cousin; but the place where the first news arrived, the wireless station, is about a mile inland from the telegraph office.

The telegraph office is one of a small group of buildings, including the new lighthouse and the steam fog-signal that occupy the actual Point. A little to the left of that juts out the long pier where the pilot steamer Eureka, much employed in the Crippen case, is always moored ready for action. Half a mile or so further inland is the Pilot's Hotel.

ADVENTURERS OFF FOR BAFFIN'S BAY

Hardy Britons Will Seek Gold In Far Northern Canada

Lust for adventure and iten to gain die hard in the breasts of Britishers. Some time soon there sails from an English port one more gallant ship's company of adventurers—their objective the precious yellow nuggets, concerning which the rumor of centuries throws its romantic, alluring glamor over the scarcely known, frozen fastnesses of Baffin Land, Northeastern Canada. The gold-seekers whom Capt. Munn will lead away from England's shore, whilst not disdaining to traffic with the Esquimaux for their peltry, only look upon that aspect of their deliberate plunge into the sub-arctics as a means of defraying part of the expedition's cost, placed at over one hundred thousand dollars. It is gold that furnishes the real lure. To confirm reports of valuable specimens of the glistening metal that at various times have come into the hands of early navigators there are several modern instances where the natives have given information of vast deposits wherein gold is found. Capt. Munn has noted these, and by mapping all available information to date decided this year that he had a sufficiently clear idea of where to look to begin his long-contemplated quest forthwith. Of enthusiastic, hardy applicants for a place in his ship he has had enough to man a respectable navy, and has picked the cream of the lot. So far as known there will not be a single Canadian aboard.

Baffin Land—Baffin Bay—look in your geography—then you will remember how the former is a nine-hundred-mile-long island stretching from Hudson Strait (its northern shore) and northeasterly up along the far side of Hudson Bay. Baffin Bay is to the north of Baffin Land again, and again northeasterly from Baffin Bay lies Greenland. Different parts of Baffin Land bear separate names for convenience—Fox Land, Cockburn Land, Cumberland Peninsula, etc., appearing on the newer maps.

Davis gave his name to Davis Straits in 1585; Hudson to the famed Bay and Straits in 1610; Button, an English navigator, visited Hudson Bay in 1612; Bylot and Baffin, in 1615; and James and Fox, in 1631—these two identified with James Bay and Fox Land respectively. How much does the ordinary Canadian remember concerning any — Hudson excepted perhaps—of these fearless seadogs who crossed the unknown waters, braving untold perils for the honor and renown of their motherland, many of them paving the channels they charted with their brave bones at last? Captain Wiliam Baffin is a sadly neglected hero, like the rest—a forgotten worthy. Some of his personal records of the voyages to Northern Canada are preserved in the British Museum, our maps bear his name; that has seemed to suffice.

The earliest mention of Baffin is as being appointed pilot of the ship Patience for a voyage to Greenland in 1612. He received scant recognition for his arduous and perilous labors among the ice-floes, but was praised and suitably rewarded for surveying and mapping the Red Sea and the Persian Gulf in 1618 and 1619. He finished his brief, hazardous, and most honorable career Jan. 1622, at an attack by ships of the East India Company against the Portuguese at Ormus. He died in harness, for he had been ordered ashore from his vessel to take some angles preliminary to the storming of Ormus Castle, when he was shot. William Baffin was one of the very first who endeavored to determine latitude at sea by astronomical observations.

Dogs From Canada.

The dogs which Sir Ernest Shackleton will take with him on his Antarctic expedition are a cross between a wolf and a Scotch stag hound, and have been bred in Northern Canada. The lightest of them will turn the scales at 80 pounds, whereas the heaviest dog with the last Shackleton expedition weighed 45 pounds. They have been selected by the experts of the Hudson Bay Company, and will be under the charge of one of the most experienced drivers from Canada, who was chosen by the commissioners of the Northwest Mounted Police.

The latest appointments to the expeditionary staff are Sir Philip Lee Brocklehurst, who was with Shackleton in 1907 and 1909 and who made the first ascent of Mount Erebus, and his brother, Lieutenant Courtney Brocklehurst, of the 11th Hussars. Hundreds of applications for positions with the expedition have been received.

First Explorer of Yukon.

Mr. Thomas Martindale in his recent book, "Hunting in the Upper Yukon," just published, remarks:

"It will surprise most people to know that the first prospector to cross from the coast to the headwaters of the Yukon river was one George Holt—according to the report of George M. Dawson, C.M.G., LL.D., F.R.S.—by all odds the most famous surveyor, geologist, and naturalist among Canadian scientists.

"Holt's journey was made in 1878, so that at the present time the short space of thirty-five years only divide this now well known territory from the oblivion in which it was involved prior to that year.

"The intrepid George Holt was afterwards murdered by Indians at Cook's Inlet, Alaska, in 1885, seven years after his successful journey from ocean to river."

HOW JIM GRIGSBY WAS INFLUENCED TO WIN GAME

By DONALD CHAMBERLIN

It was toward the end of August, and our team of the Boynton Athletic club had done splendid work at winning baseball games, placing us in an excellent position to be one of the teams to play for the championship at the end of the season, but the Harkerville club had just as good a record, and we must beat it or be thrown out of the line of competition.

We knew what everybody knew—that under ordinary circumstances we could win from the Harkerville club. But our twirler, Jim Grigsby, though the best in our part of the country, was unreliable. There were times when he would make tosses which only a marvelous batsman could hit, while at other times his pitching was decidedly poor.

Bob Twining, our captain, made a study of Grigsby to find out why he could not twirl as well at one time as another and discovered that he needed a stimulus. He also discovered that the excitement of the game could not be relied upon to make Grigsby do first class work. This puzzled the captain.

Twining must hit on some expedient at once. His sister, Jaqueline, was one of those girls who seem to be able to draw men as a magnet will draw metal, and Twining told her that he wished her to concentrate her flirting for the couple of weeks that remained before the deciding game on Grigsby.

Jack—as she was commonly called—was at the time receiving the attentions of one George Eliot, whom Twining seriously objected to. Jack worshiped her brother and wouldn't marry without his approval. She proposed to do what she could to influence Grigsby to win the coming game, provided Twining would concur in her choice and back her up with their parents, who were of the same opinion as the brother. Twining finally reluctantly agreed to her proposition, provided the game was won, and she took Grigsby in training.

"Jack," said Twining a week after this agreement, "let up on Grigsby. You are absorbing so much of his time that I can't get him out for practice."

"I thought you relied on me to make him win."

"So I do."

"Very well. Never mind his losing practice. He's had practice enough. He needs a motive. If the team needs a pitcher for practice get some one in his place. Let Mr. Grigsby alone till the game comes off."

Twining grumbled, but thought it best not to interfere with his sister's plans. He did not and could not know what means she was taking to make Grigsby win the game. He only knew that she would if she could and did no more scolding when the twirler cut practice to go galavanting with Jack.

Of course Bob and his sister were the only two in the secret, which was of too delicate a nature to be spread broadcast, and the captain was at his wits' end to keep his team up to its work without its pitcher, especially since his absence from practice was a discouraging feature. By the time the game came off Twining was tired out with the situation, having forced his team to keep in condition despite its discouragement.

Jack would give her brother no information as to what was passing between her and Grigsby. Twining asked her if she wished a seat on the stand where the pitcher could see her plainly, and she said she wished for two seats, not conspicuous. He didn't understand this, but gave her a place a few rows back from the front.

The weather was favorable, and, since there was a good deal of interest in the game, a large audience was in attendance. No one except those mentioned knew anything about the bargain that had been made. Twining had supposed that Jack wished the extra seat for a girl friend, and when he saw Eliot sitting beside her he wondered. But Jack knew the game she was playing and her brother did not.

There was the usual cheering when the teams went on to the field, and the rooting for each team was well and incessantly kept up by the leaders. Grigsby looked about for Jack, and when he saw her sitting by Eliot he knit his brows. What was going on in his mind was unknown to any one but himself—and possibly Jack. Twining was watching him and believed that whatever it was it would be a big hit or a big miss.

It turned out to be a big hit. Grigsby covered himself with glory. His curves were marvelous. From the start our fellows led, and at the end of the game, when we had beaten our opponents badly, we carried Grigsby off the field on our shoulders. Then the field that had been so lively was deserted.

When Bob Twining and his sister were alone at home he took her in his arms, kissed her and told her that she might marry Eliot with his full consent and that he would throw all his influence with the old folks for the same cause.

"But how did you manage it with Grigsby?" he asked.

"I promised to marry him if he won the game."

Jack kept her promise, threw Eliot over and astonished the world.

"You can never tell," her brother remarked, "where a girl is going to land 'til she has landed."

DAMAGED PICTURES.

Greatest Care Is Used In Repairing Injured Paintings.

Although Mr. Sargent's portrait of Mr. Henry James, the novelist, was badly hacked by a cleaver wielded by a suffragette at the opening of the Royal Academy, it will not be an over-difficult task to repair it. The work of restoration has been entrusted to Major George C. Roller.

In restoring the portrait, the canvas, after the painted surface has been protected with tissue-paper, will be placed on a slate table. The back will then be covered with a sticky fluid, which will be pressed through to the surface of the picture with a heated iron. In this way the canvas will contract, and the cuts in it will close up. The canvas will finally be relined, and any spots where paint may be missing will be filled in by the restorer with a special preparation.

There are men in London who follow the profession of picture restoring who are able to restore old paintings of value which have large holes in them, or the material on which they are executed hanging in threads. Moreover, they can, when necessary, transfer a painting to a new canvas.

If a picture of which the canvas is cracked, torn, or rotted with age is handed to a clever restorer, the first thing he does is to purchase a new canvas the same size as the old one. Having obtained this, he glues a sheet of stout Manila paper to the picture. He then carefully scrapes away the old canvas. This is a job that might occupy him for several days, or weeks if the canvas is a large one. Having removed every bit of canvas, the grounds upon which the paint lies are taken away by solvents or gentle scraping, until nothing remains but the fragile shell of pigment adhering to the paper.

The new canvas is then covered with the strongest fish-glue obtainable, and pressed firmly down upon the paper bearing the picture. As soon as the painting is firmly attached to its new foundation, nothing remains but to take off the Manila paper. This can be done with hot water, and the surface of the painting has only to be cleaned to look as bright and clear as it was when the artist painted it.

In days gone by many masters of the brush painted their works on wood or panel. Several such works brought to light during recent years have been found with their timber badly decayed, and in order to preserve them it has been necessary to transfer them to canvas.

We believe it was M. Haquin, a French artist of note, who first successfully transferred a panel-painting to canvas. He glued a sheet of paper over the surface of the painting, and afterwards upon this a fine layer of muslin. When the glue was quite dry he planed down the panel until it was of the thinness of matchwood, when he scraped off the remainder with a long, flexible knife. This done, the mere skin of color held together by the paper and muslin was left, and it was a comparatively easy task to glue this to a canvas and remove the paper and muslin.

If an old picture has a portion of its pigment missing this may be replaced by an artist with colors from a brush, but sometimes old but worthless paintings are used for the purpose.

Losses on British Strikes.

A profit and loss account of the strikes of the last ten years, prepared from Government returns, supplemented by details furnished by trade union leaders in the principal industries, show that the loss to organized workers alone from stoppages of work due to disputes of all kinds in the United Kingdom has been equal to $84,741,000 in wages, not to speak of a vast sum spent in strike pay. Against this, the net gain in wages resulting from disputes is returned at $13,209,000, leaving a net loss of $71,531,000.

In the same period the working-classes as a whole have secured advances in wages estimated at more than $73,947,000, but the greater proportion of these advances have been obtained through conciliation, machinery and working agreements. Of every 100 strikes or other disputes recorded in the years under review, 50 per cent. have been won by the employers, 25 per cent. by the workers, and the remaining 25 per cent. have been compromises.

Girls Sold by Auction.

The quaint custom of selling village girls as dancing partners to the highest bidders has been revived in a number of Rhenish villages in connection with Whitsuntide church dedications. The auctions take place in the public square, and the village swains engage in a lively competition for the honor of securing the prettiest girls as partners for the Whitsuntide festival.

The older girls are "knocked down" at a price as low as 2 1-2d., while village beauties of a tenderer age go for from 4s. to 6s. The highest prices are commanded by girls

Minor Strains.

If I could just attune my harp
To sing the people's songs,
To voice their sorrows and their joys,
Their troubles and their wrongs,
I wouldn't care who cut 'er loose
With songs sublime and grand,
But so refined that no one could
Their meaning understand.

If I could be the ragtime muse,
Throw grammar to the breeze
And let the meter run itself
However it might please,
Just so it touched the common man
And reached the people's heart,
I wouldn't care for polish or
The finer points of art.

If every urchin on the street
Would juggle with my tunes,
If kitchen girls would croon them o'er
Mid kettles, pots and spoons;
If pretty creatures who stenog
Would hum them o'er the keys,
I wouldn't care what critics said
Or whom I might displease.

Yes, let me sing the people's songs
In halting lines and crude,
Not flying high above their head,
But for their every mood,
The simple songs of home and love,
The lowly, humble strain
That sort of hits them where they live
And dances through the brain.

ABSENT-MINDED.

Gilbert K. Chesterton Is Notorious For His Day Dreaming.

Like many other men famous for their literary genius, Mr. G. K. Chesterton suffers at times from absent-mindedness. Indeed, he confessed to the writer at a dinner not long ago that his state of mind at times is "the despair of his life."

As a matter of fact, it is said that Mrs. Chesterton accompanies her husband on almost every journey, performing such small but necessary duties as the getting of tickets and the consulting of "Bradshaw."

It is humorously recorded, however, that on one occasion visitors arrived, and Mrs. Chesterton, being called upon to play the part of hostess, was unable to accompany her husband. With the words, "Now, Gilbert, you know where you are to lecture, and what your subject is?" Chesterton went to the railway station. Arriving there, he banged down a sovereign at the booking-office and said, "A ticket."

"Where for?" asked the astonished clerk.

"Free Trade Hall," replied Chesterton.

"Oh, Glasgow, then?" said the clerk, and Gilbert, assenting, received a ticket for that station.

Stepping into the street at Glasgow, he was hailed by a friend. "Halloa, Chesterton, what are you doing here?"

"Oh, I'm lecturing at the Free Trade Hall."

"Oh, no, you're not," said the friend.

"Oh, yes; I am," protested Chesterton. "I booked the engagement some months ago."

"But you cannot be," maintained the friend, "for the place is being renovated and the painters are in."

It slowly dawned upon Chesterton that he was at the wrong place, and he, further to justify his claim to greatness, sent a telegram to his wife, "Am here. Where ought I to be?"

The London "Bobby."

When it is considered that there is no section of the globe so thickly populated as the streets of London, it is remarkable that only 300 persons are killed in accidents on the streets.

"I stood in Picadilly Circus a few weeks ago," says a recent writer, "and in 40 minutes counted 3,100 vehicles pass. There were as many as 50 motor vehicles in an unbroken line. But there was no congestion, no disorder, and the street policeman at all times had the situation in complete control.

"The driver of a vehicle would not think of trying to violate the traffic laws, because if he did, he would know that he would never drive again. The London street 'bobby' raises his hand when he wants to signal a driver, and the driver knows that the law of England is behind that hand. You may know that the London police—there are 30,000 of them—do not carry either pistol or club. But their power is absolute. It is somewhat remarkable that in such conditions the police do not overstep their authority or become officious.

"The London policemen dare not even push a pedestrian, but he nevertheless compels order. The only weapon he carried—if it can be called a weapon—is a strong leather thong, which he uses on occasions to quiet a prisoner."

Elephant-Rhino Conference.

An "elephant and rhinoceros congress," in which delegates representing all of the great powers directly interested in Africa have participated, has finished a week's sitting at the British Foreign Office in London, and as a result it is probable that effective action will be taken to preserve these animals from extinction in Africa.

The conference met at the suggestion of W. Woosnam, game warden of British East Africa, who pointed out that the elephant and the rhinoceros were in greater danger of extermination than any other species of big game in Africa. Delegates came from Germany, Belgium, Spain, Italy, France, and Portugal, all of which countries have colonies in the African continent.

Boating on the Zambesi.

In no part of the Empire is sport in all its forms more cultivated and encouraged than in Rhodesia. An effort is now being made by the residents of Livingstone, the town near Victoria Falls, to develop the facilities for pleasure boating in the Zambesi. At a special general meeting of the Zambesi Boat Club recently the committee were authorized to make an expenditure of $500 on the purchase of steel pleasure boats, this type of craft having been found to be the most useful and serviceable for boating on the Zambesi. It is hoped that it will be possible during the year to purchase a number of racing craft in addition.

Escaped From Court.

A remarkable scene was witnessed at Reading (Eng.) police court recently after a youth named Griffin had been committed for trial charged with the theft of a bicycle. The witnesses were just signing their depositions, when Griffin leaped to the top of the dock rails and jumped into the well of the court, 12 feet below. He then rushed through the court to the main entrance, and, knocking down a policeman on duty there, made good his escape.

Many Peerages Have Short Life.

Peerages have little of the permanence of pyramids. Forty years ago a careful calculation was made which showed that of 217 peerages created during the preceding forty-five years only 132 remained upon the rolls. Of the Plantagenet peerages only fourteen survived, of the Tudor 11, of the Stuart 46. During the reign of George III. more than four hundred peers were created, of which in 1875, 270 had disappeared.

Participating versus Non-Participating Life Policies Again

FIFTEEN YEARS AGO a Publisher of this City at age 43 took out a Ten Pay 15 year Endowment Policy of $2,000, No. 81226 in The Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada paying therefore an annual premium of $187.20.

The Non-Participating Premium would have been $170.40.

The extra paid for profits per year (for 10 years only) was $16.80.

Had this man taken a Non-Participating Policy he would have saved $168.00 extra in premiums paid for profits during the ten years, but he would have lost $620.25 at maturity of Policy as he would have received only $2,000.00 instead of $2,620.25, as he did.

Where is there a man that would not like to invest money at such a rate and that too in the Largest and Strongest Life Insurance Company in the British Empire?

You are invited to call and investigate.

Lightning Drew Picture.

The ability of lightning to draw pictures was demonstrated recently at the home of Mr. J. J. Armstrong, of Toronto.

The housemaid was busy cleaning the exterior of the front lower window when a storm commenced to gather and hurried with her work to complete it before seeking shelter indoors. Presently she came into Mrs. Armstrong and stated that there was a mark of her hand on the window and that she could not clean it off. An examination showed that the entire hand from the finger prints to the wrist had been impressed on the glass, and heavy rubbing, both from inside and outside failed to remove it. Seen in a dim light the picture is very plain, but loses some of its brilliancy in strong sunlight.

Bob Twining, our captain, made a study of Grigsby to find out why he could not twirl as well at one time as another and discovered that he needed a stimulus. He also discovered that the excitement of the game could not be relied upon to make Grigsby do first class work. This puzzled the captain.

Twining must hit on some expedient at once. His sister, Jaqueline, was one of those girls who seem to be able to draw men as a magnet will draw metal, and Twining told her that he wished her to concentrate her flirting for the couple of weeks that remained before the deciding game on Grigsby.

Jack—as she was commonly called—was at the time receiving the attentions of one George Eliot, whom Twining seriously objected to. Jack worshiped her brother and wouldn't marry without his approval. She proposed to do what she could to influence Grigsby to win the coming game, provided Twining would concur in her choice and back her up with their parents, who were of the same opinion as the brother. Twining finally reluctantly agreed to her proposition, provided the game was won, and she took Grigsby in training.

"Jack," said Twining a week after this agreement, "let up on Grigsby. You are absorbing so much of his time that I can't get him out for practice."

"I thought you relied on me to make him win."

"So I do."

"Very well. Never mind his losing practice. He's had practice enough. He needs a motive. If the team needs a pitcher for practice get some one in his place. Let Mr. Grigsby alone till the game comes off."

Twining grumbled, but thought it best not to interfere with his sister's plans. He did not and could not know what means she was taking to make Grigsby win the game. He only knew that she would if she could and did no more scolding when the twirler cut practice to go galavanting with Jack.

Of course Bob and his sister were the only two in the secret, which was of too delicate a nature to be spread broadcast, and the captain was at his wits' end to keep his team up to its work without its pitcher, especially since his absence from practice was a discouraging feature. By the time the game came off Twining was tired out with the situation, having forced his team to keep in condition despite its discouragement.

Jack would give her brother no information as to what was passing between her and Grigsby. Twining asked her if she wished a seat on the stand where the pitcher could see her plainly, and she said she wished for two seats, not conspicuous. He didn't understand this, but gave her a place a few rows back from the front.

The weather was favorable, and, since there was a good deal of interest in the game, a large audience was in attendance. No one except those mentioned knew anything about the bargain that had been made. Twining had supposed that Jack wished the extra seat for a girl friend, and when he saw Eliot sitting beside her he wondered. But Jack knew the game she was playing and her brother did not.

There was the usual cheering when the teams went on to the field, and the rooting for each team was well and incessantly kept up by the leaders. Grigsby looked about for Jack, and when he saw her sitting by Eliot he knit his brows. What was going on in his mind was unknown to any one but himself—and possibly Jack. Twining was watching him and believed that whatever it was it would be a big hit or a big miss.

It turned out to be a big hit. Grigsby covered himself with glory. His curves were marvelous. From the start our fellows led, and at the end of the game, when we had beaten our opponents badly, we carried Grigsby off the field on our shoulders. Then the field that had been so lively was deserted.

When Bob Twining and his sister were alone at home he took her in his arms, kissed her and told her that she might marry Eliot with his full consent and that he would throw all his influence with the old folks for the same cause.

"But how did you manage it with Grigsby?" he asked.

"I promised to marry him if he won the game."

Jack kept her promise, threw Eliot over and astonished the world.

"You can never tell," her brother remarked, "where a girl is going to land 'till she has landed."

Satisfies the Exacting Musician.

Because it is manufactured in accordance with the science of acoustics, from the finest of materials throughout, and is renowned for durability.

The difference in cost between a low-priced piano and an artistic instrument secures, on the one hand, a piano that will give the greatest pleasure and service musically for years to come, as compared with one that becomes almost worthless in a short time, to say nothing of its inferiority in tone. A Nordheimer Piano will cost you a little more, but its superiority in tone quality and durability makes it the most economical instrument to buy.

DAMAGED PICTURES.

Greatest Care Is Used In Repairing Injured Paintings.

Although Mr. Sargent's portrait of Mr. Henry James, the novelist, was badly hacked by a cleaver wielded by a suffragette at the opening of the Royal Academy, it will not be an over-difficult task to repair it. The work of restoration has been entrusted to Major George C. Roller.

In restoring the portrait, the canvas, after the painted surface has been protected with tissue-paper, will be placed on a slate table. The back will then be covered with a sticky fluid, which will be pressed through to the surface of the picture with a heated iron. In this way the canvas will contract, and the cuts in it will close up. The canvas will finally be relined, and any spots where paint may be missing will be filled in by the restorer with a special preparation.

There are men in London who follow the profession of picture restoring who are able to restore old paintings of value which have large holes in them, or the material on which they are executed banging in threads. Moreover, they can, when necessary, transfer a painting to a new canvas.

If a picture of which the canvas is cracked, torn, or rotted with age is handed to a clever restorer, the first thing he does is to purchase a new canvas the same size as the old one. Having obtained this, he glues a sheet of stout Manila paper to the picture. He then carefully scrapes away the old canvas. This is a job that might occupy him for several days, or weeks if the canvas is a large one. Having removed every bit of canvas, the grounds upon which the paint lies are taken away by solvents or gentle scraping, until nothing remains but the fragile shell of pigment adhering to the paper.

The new canvas is then covered with the strongest fish-glue obtainable, and pressed firmly down upon the paper bearing the picture. As soon as the painting is firmly attached to its new foundation, nothing remains but to take off the Manila paper. This can be done with hot water, and the surface of the painting has only to be cleaned to look as bright and clear as it was when the artist painted it.

In days gone by many masters of the brush painted their works on wood or panel. Several such works brought to light during recent years have been found with their timber badly decayed, and in order to preserve them it has been necessary to transfer them to canvas.

We believe it was M. Haquin, a French artist of note, who first successfully transferred a panel-painting to canvas. He glued a sheet of paper over the surface of the painting, and afterwards upon this a fine layer of muslin. When the glue was quite dry he planed down the panel until it was of the thinness of matchwood, when he scraped off the remainder with a long, flexible knife. This done, the mere skin of color held together by the paper and muslin was left, and it was a comparatively easy task to glue this to a canvas and remove the paper and muslin.

If an old picture has a portion of its pigment missing this may be replaced by an artist with colors from a brush, but sometimes old but worthless paintings are used for the purpose.

Losses on British Strikes.

A profit and loss account of the strikes of the last ten years, prepared from Government returns, supplemented by details furnished by trade union leaders in the principal industries, show that the loss to organized workers alone from stoppages of work due to disputes of all kinds in the United Kingdom has been equal to $84,741,000 in wages, not to speak of a vast sum spent in strike pay. Against this, the net gain in wages resulting from disputes is returned at $13,209,000, leaving a net loss of $71,531,000.

In the same period the working-classes as a whole have secured advances in wages estimated at more than $72,947,000, but the greater proportion of these advances have been obtained through conciliation, machinery and working agreements. Of every 100 strikes or other disputes recorded in the years under review, 50 per cent. have been won by the employers, 25 per cent. by the workers, and the remaining 25 per cent. have been compromises.

Girls Sold by Auction.

The quaint custom of selling village girls as dancing partners to the highest bidders has been revived in a number of Rhenish villages in connection with Whitsuntide church dedications. The auctions take place in the public square, and the village swains engage in a lively competition for the honor of securing the prettiest girls as partners for the Whitsuntide festival.

The older girls are "knocked down" at a price as low as 2 1-2d., while village beauties of a tenderer age go for from 4s. to 6s. The highest prices are commanded by girls who are both pretty and rich, as the Whitsuntide dances traditionally lead to engagements and marriages. The proceeds of the auction are devoted to communal purposes.

Afraid of Brigands.

Afghan traders who come down in the cold weather to trade in India are this year settling for the hot weather in Derajat and Peshawar. They say that they would rather have the stern rule of Abdur Rahman than the wild rule of his successor, for brigandage is now rife, and there is also prospect of another revolt in Khost and Kandahar. All that the Amir has to depend upon is the loyalty of the Durani Clan, and some of the chief nobles are dissatisfied because in response to popular clamor important official posts are given to people of good family. Some of the traders say that the road between Jellalabad and Kabul is held by Shinwari hobbers, who levy a blackmail even upon officials.

Knowing how to beat a masterly retreat is the ground plan of bravery and the very foundation of courage.

Prosperity may be a new and strange thing, but it is really remarkable how quickly an individual can get so used to it that he feels that he can't do without it.

Minor Strains.

If I could just attune my harp
To sing the people's songs,
To voice their sorrows and their joys,
Their troubles and their wrongs,
I wouldn't care who cut 'er loose
With songs sublime and grand,
But so refined that no one could
Their meaning understand.

If I could be the ragtime muse,
Throw grammar to the breeze
And let the meter run itself
However it might please,
Just so it touched the common man
And reached the people's heart,
I wouldn't care for polish or
The finer points of art.

If every urchin on the street
Would juggle with my tunes,
If kitchen girls would croon them o'er
Mid kettles, pots and spoons;
If pretty creatures who stenog
Would hum them o'er the keys,
I wouldn't care what critics said
Or whom I might displease.

Yes, let me sing the people's songs
In halting lines and crude,
Not flying high above their head,
But for their every mood,
The simple songs of home and love,
The lowly, humble strain
That sort of hits them where they live
And dances through the brain.

ABSENT-MINDED.

Gilbert K. Chesterton Is Notorious For His Day Dreaming.

Like many other men famous for their literary genius, Mr. G. K. Chesterton suffers at times from absent-mindedness. Indeed, he confessed to the writer at a dinner not long ago that his state of mind at times is "the despair of his life."

As a matter of fact, it is said that Mrs. Chesterton accompanies her husband on almost every journey, performing such small but necessary duties as the getting of tickets and the consulting of "Bradshaw."

It is humorously recorded, however, that on one occasion visitors arrived, and Mrs. Chesterton, being called upon to play the part of hostess, was unable to accompany her husband. With the words, "Now, Gilbert, you know where you are to lecture, and what your subject is?" Chesterton went to the railway station. Arriving there, he banged down a sovereign at the booking-office and said, "A ticket."

"Where for?" asked the astonished clerk.

"Free Trade Hall," replied Chesterton.

"Oh, Glasgow, then?" said the clerk, and Gilbert, assenting, received a ticket for that station.

Stepping into the street at Glasgow, he was hailed by a friend. "Halloa, Chesterton, what are you doing here?"

"Oh, I'm lecturing at the Free Trade Hall."

"Oh, no, you're not," said the friend.

"Oh, yes; I am," protested Chesterton. "I booked the engagement some months ago."

"But you cannot be," maintained the friend, "for the place is being renovated and the painters are in."

It slowly dawned upon Chesterton that he was at the wrong place, and he, further to justify his claim to greatness, sent a telegram to his wife, "Am here. Where ought I to be?"

The London "Bobby."

When it is considered that there is no section of the globe so thickly populated as the streets of London, it is remarkable that only 300 persons are killed in accidents on the streets.

"I stood in Picadilly Circus a few weeks ago," says a recent writer, "and in 40 minutes counted 3,100 vehicles pass. There were as many as 50 motor vehicles in an unbroken line. But there was no congestion, no disorder, and the street policeman at all times had the situation in complete control.

"The driver of a vehicle would not think of trying to violate the traffic laws, because if he did, he would know that he would never drive again. The London street 'bobby' raises his hand when he wants to signal a driver, and the driver knows that the law of England is behind that hand. You may know that the London police—there are 30,000 of them—do not carry either pistol or club. But their power is absolute. It is somewhat remarkable that in such conditions the police do not overstep their authority or become officious.

"The London policemen dare not even push a pedestrian, but he nevertheless compels order. The only weapon he carried—if it can be called a weapon—is a strong leather thong, which he uses on occasions to quiet a prisoner."

Elephant-Rhino Conference.

An "elephant and rhinoceros congress," in which delegates representing all of the great powers directly interested in Africa have participated, has finished a week's sitting at the British Foreign Office in London, and as a result it is probable that effective action will be taken to preserve these animals from extinction in Africa.

The conference met at the suggestion of W. Woosnam, game warden of British East Africa, who pointed out that the elephant and the rhinoceros were in greater danger of extermination than any other species of big game in Africa. Delegates came from Germany, Belgium, Spain, Italy, France, and Portugal, all of which countries have colonies in the African continent.

Boating on the Zambesi.

In no part of the Empire is sport in all its forms more cultivated and encouraged than in Rhodesia. An effort is now being made by the residents of Livingstone, the town near Victoria Falls, to develop the facilities for pleasure boating in the Zambesi. At a special general meeting of the Zambesi Boat Club recently the committee were authorized to make an expenditure of $500 on the purchase of steel pleasure boats, this type of craft having been found to be the most useful and serviceable for boating on the Zambesi. It is hoped that it will be possible during the year to purchase a number of racing craft in addition.

Escaped From Court.

A remarkable scene was witnessed at Reading (Eng.) police court recently after a youth named Griffin had been committed for trial charged with the theft of a bicycle. The witnesses were just signing their depositions, when Griffin leaped to the top of the dock rails and jumped into the well of the court, 12 feet below. He then rushed through the court to the main entrance, and, knocking down a policeman on duty there, made good his escape.

Many Peerages Have Short Life.

Peerages have little of the permanence of pyramids. Forty years ago a careful calculation was made which showed that of 217 peerages created during the preceding forty-five years only 132 remained upon the rolls. Of the Plantagenet peerages only fourteen survived, of the Tudor 11, of the Stuart 46. During the reign of George III. more than four hundred peers were created, of which in 1875, 270 had disappeared.

Participating versus Non-Participating Life Policies Again

FIFTEEN YEARS AGO a Publisher of this City at age 43 took out a Ten Pay 15 year Endowment Policy of $2,000, No. 81226 in The Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada paying therefore an annual premium of $187.20.

The Non-Participating Premium would have been $170.40.

The extra paid for profits per year (for 10 years only) was $16.80.

Had this man taken a Non-Participating Policy he would have saved $168.00 extra in premiums paid for profits during the ten years, but he would have lost $620.25 at maturity of Policy as he would have received only $2,000.00 instead of $2,620.25, as he did.

Where is there a man that would not like to invest money at such a rate and that too in the Largest and Strongest Life Insurance Company in the British Empire?

Lightning Drew Picture.

The ability of lightning to draw pictures was demonstrated recently at the home of Mr. J. J. Armstrong, of Toronto.

The housemaid was busy cleaning the exterior of the front lower window when a storm commenced to gather and hurried with her work to complete it before seeking shelter indoors. Presently she came into Mrs. Armstrong and stated that there was a mark of her hand on the window and that she could not clean it off. An examination showed that the entire hand from the finger prints to the wrist had been impressed on the glass, and heavy rubbing, both from inside and outside failed to remove it. Seen in a dim light the picture is very plain, but loses some of its brilliancy in strong sunlight.

AN ANCIENT CHURCH

Memorials at Barnes Dates Back to the Middle Ages.

How many of the people who see the red brink tower of the parish church at Barnes know that the bricks are Elizabethan and that beneath them is mediaeval stonework? asks London People. An assurance that such is the case was given by Mr. Allen Walker to the members of the Historic London Club when they visited the place recently. The tower dates from 1456, but the original church, now represented by the north aisle, will be 700 years old next year, when the event will be fittingly celebrated. It was a cheap little church in its first form, but it is precious if only because it possesses, in the shape of a small plain modest stained-glass window, an older bit of early English Gothic than anything in Westminster Abbey. A mural tablet to the memory of a rector who died more than 250 years ago is well worth reading. Put up by his wife, it says:

"To the best of husbands, John Squier, the late faithful and (Oh! that for so short a time) painfull rector of this parish, Grace Lynch, who bare unto him one only daughter consecrated this (such as it is) small monument to their mutuall affection. He was invested in this care an 1656, Sept. 2. He was devested of all care an 1662, Jan. 9, aged 42 years."

The word "painfull" in this inscription apparently means painstaking, and the substitution of "care" for "cure" shows knowledge on the part of the sorrowing wife, for the cure of souls means the care of souls.

The church used to contain a still more curious inscription, which, however, has disappeared. It commemorated Anne Baynard, who died in 1697, and who, being only 25 years old at the time must, as the lecturer pointed out, have had an uncommon turn for gloomy philosophy. The inscription ran thus:

Here lies that happy maiden who often said
That no man is happy until he is dead,
That the business of life is but playing the fool,
Which hath no relation to saving the soul,
For all the transactions that is under the sun
Is doing of nothing, and if that be not done,
All wisdom and knowledge doth lie
in this one (the grave).

Between two buttresses outside the building is a small enclosure, guarded by wooden railings, and containing rose trees. It has been kept since 1652 in memory of Edward Rose, who left the income of an acre of land for that purpose.

The manor of Barnes belonged to the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, who let it on lease. Queen Elizabeth obtained it from Sir Henry Wyatt and ceded it to her favorite secretary, Sir Thomas Walsingham. An old house in which Fielding, the novelist, lived stands on the green. Cowley, the poet, resided at Barn Elms, and Jacob Thomson, in the 18th century, dwelt in the house now called Queen Elizabeth's dairy, and there welcomed the Kit Cat Club. But perhaps the most original of all the people whom Barnes claims was Vice-Chancellor Shadwell, who was buried there in 1850. He was so fond of swimming that sometimes lawyers who wanted to make applications to him had to travel from London to Barnes and shout at the learned judge from the river bank or take a boat to get at him as he swam or floated in the stream.

Shaw on "Hunger-Striking."

Here is George Bernard Shaw's contribution to the symposium on the question of letting suffragette hunger-strikers starve to death, which The London Evening Standard is conducting:

"As we have neither conviction enough to dare to starve the militants to death, nor commonsense enough to pledge ourselves to an inevitable reform, there is nothing to be done but wait until the women provoke the mob to lynch them and the Government hangs a satisfactory number of the mob in expiation.

"Then the women will get their votes after last inch of mischief and suffering has been squeezed out of a situation which several civilized and reasonable countries have already disposed of without the slightest trouble.

"That is England all over."

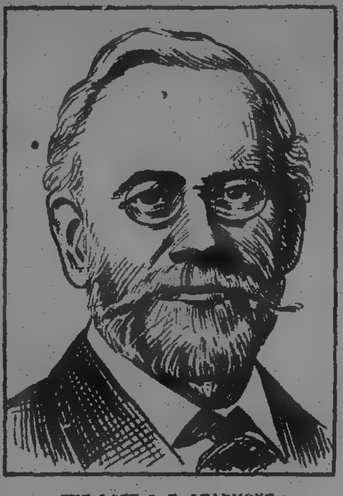
BENEFACTOR IS GONE

LATE J. B. LEARMONT HAD KEEN INTEREST IN THE ARTS.

Montreal Business Man Who Presented General Wolfe's Home at Westerham, England, to the Canadian Nation Was a Lover of Rare Books and Manuscripts—Brother and Sister Collectors.

Mr. J. B. Learmont, one of Montreal's best known and respected citizens, died a few weeks ago, following a severe operation.

Joseph Bowles Learmont was a member of the wholesale hardware firm of Caverhill, Learmont & Co., a house dating back to 1854. He was born in Montreal on May 15, 1839, and apart from his business interets, Mr. Learmont was noted for his literary taste and had frequently lectured on literary and historical subjects. He had served as treasurer of the Montreal Art Association, and took an active part in the work of many charitable institutions in Montreal and elsewhere in the Province of Quebec. The Learmont collection in the galleries of the Montreal Art Association was a bequest from his brother, the late Mr. W. J. Learmont, and his sister Agnes.



THE LATE J. B. LEARMONT.

About a year ago, Mr. Learmont purchased Quebec House, Gen. James Wolfe's early home at Westerham, with a view to converting it into a museum and presenting it to the Canadian nation. He was believed to possess the largest and most valuable collection of "Wolfiana" in existence, and this will be deposited in the museum, together with the famous Warde collection of Wolfe's letters, lent by the Hon. Mrs. Warde, and other historic documents. It was the intention to refurnish the house as it might have been in the year 1735, when Wolfe and his parents first lived there.

Mr. Learmont stipulated that the gift should be for the people of Canada as a whole, irrespective of race or creed. It was further suggested that the property be vested in a Board of Trustees—the Prime Minister of Canada, the High Commissioner, the Minister of Finance, the president of the Westerham Society, and the Dominion Archivist. The gift has not yet been definitely accepted, though it is hoped in time the patriotic idea of the generous donor will be carried out as he wished.

Irrigation in Australia.

The new lands of the Empire and their opportunities are known to few people better than Earl Grey, the ex-governor-general of Canada. Earl Grey has recently been on a visit to Australia, and he has been much impressed by the outlook there for British people who are looking for a pleasant and remunerative life overseas. In particular, he was struck by the irrigation settlements in Victoria. "I regard this work," he said in a statement in Melbourne, "as of the highest value. I understand that your irrigation system makes provision, as far as it has been established, for supplying 400,000 acres with one foot of water. If this is correct you have in this district alone prospective wealth equal to that produced by your best gold mines. I traveled through the Goulburn Valley, saw the Waranga Reservoir, and visited, among other places, Echuca, Rochester, and Bamawm. I saw a number of the settlers and their farms. The evidence of what the water has done in turning dry, arid country into fields of loveliness must strike any observer."

Tablets to Boer Prisoners.

Four memorial tablets to be raised at Diyatalawa in commemoration of the Boer prisoners who died while in the island of Ceylon, were landed in Colombo, a few days ago. Three of them are to be erected at the expense of the Ceylon Government, while the South African Government is bearing the cost of the other. The tablets are 6 inches thick, 6 feet high and 2 feet 6 inches broad. The lettering, which consists of Dutch and English, is of imperishable lead. The names of all the prisoners who died in the island from August, 1900, to December, 1902, are given and occupy the space of three of the tablets. It is interesting to note that the granite used, cretown, is the material used for ancient Scotch tables and is admirably suited to withstand the climate of the island.

Librarian Was Bothered.

The Bodleian Library, now asking for $250,000 has not always been fortunate in its custodians. When George III. presented a copy of the newly-published Voyages of Captain Cook to the library the then librarian —we mercifully omit his name—promptly sent it to a friend with a note asking him to keep it for a twelvemonth or so, as otherwise, if the University men knew the book was available, he would be pestered to death by applications for it.—London Chronicle.

THE SPRING FRESHET.

FRESH?
That's just
No name for it.
When the waters
Throw a fit
And come climbing
On the bank,
And the village
Is a tank,
And do all
Their funny biz—
Fresh?
I rather
Think it is.
When the icy
Fetters break
From the river
And the lake
And the snow
Begins to thaw,
Then, regardless
Of the law,
Comes the river
Rushing down
With a grudge
Against the town
And endeavors
In its wrath
To give every one
A bath.
Then mankind
The sight can see
From the housetop
Or a tree,
Lucky there
If he is dry
While the pigs
Go floating by
And a lumber yard
Or two
Add a feature
To the view.
Oh, it's great
And splendid stuff!
But one soon
May get enough.

Johnnie's Explanation.

"Oh, hello, Johnnie! You seem in an awful hurry."

"Well, I ain't."

"Why are you running so frantically, then?"

"You know me mudder?"

"Yes."

"That's why."

"Don't understand."

"Well, she is in an awful hurry, and she is mad."

Not to Hurt.

While investigations rumble
As the crowds for vengeance roar
Notice how the prices tumble—
Sometimes half a cent or more.

When the fury has been wasted
And the hubbub is no more,
Then the prices will be pasted
Up to where they were before.

You may paste this in the shanty
Where it later can be found
That we'll always have to ante
If we're going to stick around.

Shrewd Girl.

"They say she is very pretty."

"Yes, and she is going to have a rich dad."

"Rich dad? That sounds good. Going to have, did you say?"

"Yes."

"Her old man about to strike oil?"

"No; she is going to marry Johnnie's dad."

Fortunate.

"I proposed to three girls."

"And?"

"They all declined."

"How lucky! Just think, if they had all accepted!"

Willie's Way.

"You mustn't get angry, Willie."

"Not get mad a bit?"

"Not at all, Willie."

"But, ma"—

"What, my son?"

"I can't fight worth a cent till I do get real mad."

Described.

"Do you know Miss De Style?"

"Yes."

"Is she pretty?"

"Well, she is what you might call a near beauty."

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

The man who knows most about his business forgets it when an official investigation is going forward.

There are many people long on expectations who are most certain to be short on essentials.

Too many people who run well do most of their running when they are off the track.

People who are out looking for trouble should first obtain a photograph of it lest they get a sad shock of surprise.

Blessed are those who get little, for they won't have much to worry over.

Helping others is a fine thing, but it has its drawbacks, too, because if addicted to it others get the idea that you never need any yourself or have any desire to do anything save serve others.

If a favor is to be asked of a man with a grouch, get your enemy appointed on the committee to do the asking.

The man who frankly says he made a mistake did not make an irreparable one.

MONTREAL'S MARKETS

Bonsecours Stands on Site of Early Indian Trading Place.

The principal customers at the city of Montreal's earliest market were the Indians, who came to exchange the harvest of the chase for the products of the white man's invention and energy. That was long ago, for Sandham in his "Sketches of Montreal Past and Present," relates that "The first regular fair or market of which we have any account was the annual fair established about 1680, and held in June of each year, when 'the savages that frequent the Great Lakes come down with prodigious quantities of beaver skins, which they give in exchange for arms, kettles, axes, etc., and on which the merchants generally clear two hundred per cent.' The first market place, probably the place on which the principal part of the business during the Indian fair was transacted, was that now occupied by the Custom House and Square."

Shortly after the coming in of the last century the city began to grow at a rate then considered marvellously rapid; and larger and better market accommodations were needed.

In the olden time people purchased their food supplies on the public market, carried them home themselves, and so saved the cost of delivery. The public market was the city people's source of supply, where they met the farmer, the producer, and so eliminated the middle man upon whose shoulders so much is laid to-day. There is still some going to market, but, increase of population considered, nothing in comparison with that of fifty years ago.

And so it came to pass that as the city grew, want of more adequate market accommodation was experience, which, in April, 1807, led to the passing of an Act "for building a new market-house, and for removing part of the stalls on the old market-place." The trustees were authorized to borrow $12,500 in order to carry out the work.

The site chosen for the new market was that formerly occupied by the College founded by Sieur Charron, and now known as Jacques Cartier Square. There seems to have been a "money stringency" at the time, because the trustees were unable to raise the needed money, and so they went to Parliament for authorization to erect temporary stalls on the site of the proposed market, waiting to build until money was "easier."

This plan was carried out, and subsequently a market was erected as at first proposed. This market was enlarged in 1821 by the addition of a wing. The entire market was of wood, but it served its purpose well until the present Bonsecours Market was erected, when the old wooden market was pulled down, and its site converted into a public square.

Bonsecours Market is the successor of those old markets; and in its early days it was considered a triumph of architecture for Sandham, the historian, with evident pride, describes it as "a magnificent pile of cut stone buildings in the Grecian Doric style of architecture, erected at a cost of about $200,000, and equal, if not superior, to any building of the kind in America."

A NORWEGIAN TOWN IN CANADA

Camrose Is a "Little Norway" From Her Names To Her Skis.

Camrose, Alberta, is par excellence the Norwegian metropolis of Canada. Its first name was Bakken, named after a Norwegian who first owned land upon which the town is built. Mr. Bakken came to Canada from the United States to get a farm. He looked around for a long time, because an old fortune-teller had once told him that he would get a quarter-section of land where a river cut off one of the corners, and where he would find plenty of coal and wood, and that on this quarter a town would be located. After having looked around for a long time, Bakken came out from Wetaskiwin and found a quarter which in every respect covered the fortune-teller's description. He settled down here, and, while his friends laughed at him, he stayed by it, as the only settler in that vicinity. When the Canadian Pacific Railway was built the station was located on his land, and when the town was surveyed he became a very rich man. He is now dead.

To-day Camrose is the centre for the three railways, and has managed to retain its Norwegian stamp. Looking over the map of Camrose, one will find that the streets have Norwegian names, such as Christiania avenue, Bjovorsen street, Ibsen street, Bakken street, Paulsen, street, Dahl street, Thomsen street, Christine street, and of subdivisions there are many with Norwegian names, such as Bakken Addition, Dahl Addition, Gula Addition, etc. This is not the only evidence of the Norwegian influence. In looking over the voters' list for last year's election, it is found that of the 378 votes cast in the town of Camrose, 223 were Norwegian, and taking all of the Camrose district, it is found that out of 1,400 voters, 973 are Norwegians. When the United Lutheran Churches determined to build a college for the education of young Norwegian boys and girls, Camrose was selected as the site, and it now has the only Norwegian college in the entire British Empire. Camrose is the centre for the ski-ing devotees in the Canadian west and is also the headquarters for the prairie competitions.

"Home to Norway Association," is working with a view to securing the largest possible number of tourists for the centennial celebration in Norway this year.

Last winter there were 2,400 gathered at the ski sports in Camrose, and about 4,000 in Edmonton, and the interest in the sport is ever increasing. The absence of great hills in our country makes it necessary to build timber scaffolds for ski runners to get a start, but these scaffolds serve the purpose as well as the steep hills in Norway. The demand for skis is so great that it has been necessary to establish a ski factory at Camrose, and we also have a school where Canadians and others are taught the sport.

It is probable that no other town in Canada has so marked a national spirit as has the little town of Camrose.

DANGER POINT PASSED THROUGH PROMPT ACTION

Visit of Army Worm Seems to Have Been Confined to Otonabee

The farmers in Otonabee Township have checked the army worm, according to statements given out this morning. Mr. McRae, the Government agricultural expert of Norwood, thinks the danger point has been passed. The work of the pest in this vicinity seems to have been confined to Otonabee, as inquiries show that it has not presented itself in Smith or Monaghan, but the farmers in those townships are keeping close watch and exercising every precaution to nip any outbreak in the bud.

Joshua Smithson of Otonabee, who was one of the biggest sufferers, speaking to a Review reporter this morning, said the danger point had been passed, but the farmers were still constructing trenches into which they were placing copious quantities of paris green and coal oil. He could not estimate the damage to the crops in his district, but said it would be heavy.

SENT TO MERCER FOR SIX MONTHS

Woman [illegible] From Store Has Previous Conviction

One of the [illegible] and most unusual cases was heard before Magistrate Dumble this morning in camera, when Mary E. Nixon, charged with the theft of a dress valued at $25, from Turnbull's Store, was sentenced to six months in the Mercer. Both G. N. Gordon and others pleaded for leniency but the Magistrate remained obdurate and imposed the above sentence. A previous conviction for shoplifting had been registered against her in Toronto.

In a few remarks Mr. Gordon described how the woman had been an excellent girl in her youth; she had attended a private school and also was a graduate nurse. Several years ago she had been separated from her husband. She became addicted to the use of drugs. Since then her habits might have been irregular due no doubt to the drugs which had gripped her in her devastating power. Her unhappy life resulting from the unhappy marriage was the cause of this. It was during the effects of the drug that she had probably committed the breach of the law which was different from the ordinary case of theft, due to her condition, from the use of the drugs.

"I've been a week in jail, surely that is a sufficient punishment for me," cried the woman who, pale and visibly nervous, was supported by Police Matron Mrs. McElhiney.

Mr. Wearing, Acting Crown Attorney also remarked that her excessive use of dope was probably the cause of her downfall.

Magistrate Dumble however condemned these statements and contended that if they did not want justice administered, why did they bring people before them. It was his duty to protect the interests of the public, therefore he must according to his opinion of the case, impose the above sentence.

Mr. Gordon intimated that he would communicate with the Minister of Justice, asking for parole for the woman, as in her condition, she was unfit to be confined to the Mercer.

"My God," she cried pitifully, and a complete breakdown, followed the Magistrate's disposition of the case. The woman had to be led from the court room, such was her condition.

IMMENSE DEBTS

U. S Railroads Staggering Under Encumberances

NEW YORK, July 24.—The railroads of the United States are in default of interest on securities aggregating $550,000,000 according to a compilation established by authorities. It says that not since the disastrous period between 1893 and 1895, when the Atchison, Reading, Erie, Norfolk and Western, Northern Pacific, Union Pacific and other important systems underwent financial rehabilitation, have so many railroad bonds been in default as at the present time.

St. Louis and San Francisco heads the list. This system defaulted July 1 on $195,045,000, which, if taken with the Chicago and Eastern Illinois default, brings the total up to $120,500,000.

G. A. MORROW NEW PRESIDENT

Of Imperial Life Assurance Company

It is announced at Toronto that Mr. G. A. Morrow, formerly vice-president of the Imperial Life Assurance Co., has been appointed to succeed Mr. H. C. Cox as president.

Born on October. 28th, 1877, at Millbrook, Ont., George Andrew Morrow is the son of J. M. and Mary Morrow, both of whom were natives of Canada. He was educated in the Public schools of his native town and later in Collegiate Institutes at Toronto and Peterboro.

After leaving school he put in three years in the wholesale manufacturing business, and since then has been connected with various enterprises in the financial world in the line of loan and savings companies, bond and securities corporations and similar businesses. One of the most important positions he has held during recent years is that of vice-president of the Dominion Securities Corporation, Limited.

MANY OF THE RESIDENTS REMEMBER DEAN GALBRAITH

Assistant City Engineer T. A. S. Hay is one of the many local citizens who learned with regret that Dean Galbraith, of the Toronto Faculty of Applied Science, had passed away. Mr. Hay worked with John Galbraith for years, both in the vicinity of this city and in Georgian Bay District. He was connected with the G.T.R. while working in this vicinity, but was later affiliated with the C.P.R. In 1866 and 1867, the years he worked on the Midland line, he boarded in this city and made numerous acquaintances.

Mr. Hay, in speaking with a Review reporter this morning, related how in 1866, while working in the Georgian Bay district, the late John Galbraith left their camp to join his regiment, the Queen's Own, of Toronto, with the intention of assisting in suppressing the Fenian Raid. When he reached headquarters the trouble had passed.

HALF HOLIDAY WAS MARRED BY THE RAIN

The half holiday given the clerks in the stores of the city yesterday was marred by what the majority of rural folk termed "a pretty rain." While the clerks and barbers were sitting around and thinking rashly of the weather man, the farmers were wearing a simle a yard wide. The good work accomplished by the showers cannot be estimated. The pastures were practically dead from the long drought, while the roots and potatoes were in a very precarious condition.

REFUSES LENIENCY

Carranza Declares he Cannot Pardon Murderers

VICTORIA, Mex., July 23 (via Laredo, July 24.)—Speaking at a banquet in support of leniency for the Federals, Gen. Carranza said it must never be forgotten that all Mexicans are brothers, but he declared he could not extend the hand of brotherhood to those directly implicated in the deaths of Francisco Madero and Pino Suares. No leniency, he said, could be expected for those who took an active part in overthrowing the Constitutional Government of Mexico and the murder of its President and Vice-President.

The law would be observed strictly, he said, and those charged with participating in the crime would be judged according to the law.

GYPSIES ARRESTED

A band of Cherokee Indian gypsies from the Oklahoma district blew in from Lakefield early this afternoon and a few moments later blew into the arms of the law, as two or three complaints of money disappearing were phoned into headquarters. The band are being held by the police pending an investigation. They were on their way to North Bay, and included in the party were seven children. One of the female members of the tribe, a mother of one child, was very charming, and is the nearest approach to Pocohantus that has blown this way.

It is alleged that the oldest female member of the gypsies was an expert at the game of telling fortunes and the "now you have and then again you have not" game. An employee of the Oriental refreshment parlors told the police that the gypsy approached him and said she would tell him the name of the girl he would marry, and whether he would eventually become a Rockefeller. He placed some silver in his hand and then she asked for paper money. He had a five and two ones on him, and those he placed on his palm. After calling on the gods and mumbling other words the gypsy said she would have to hold the money. This she was permitted to do, and after a few more words of charm, she placed the roll back in his pocket. After she left, the fortune hunter missed a five spot. A similar stunt is alleged to have been pulled on another man, and it is also claimed the visitors attempted to help themselves to some wood.

The band stoutly denied the allegations and the elder woman said, "You can search me and kill me if you find any money on me."

Mrs. McElhiney was called upon to do the search act this afternoon.

Had it not been for the presence of Jas. Gates, an unknown resident of the north end would have been minus his pocket book with all its contents. Mr. Gates was returning from his dinner to his work and noticing the party stopped and watched them. He was very much surprised to see the woman who was identified in the Police Station as the one who is said to have flimflammed the Oriental out of a five spot, grab an aged man who he did not know and lead him across the road. This was just east of the Smith Street bridge. He stood still and heard the woman yell for the woman to let go and rushing across the street he yelled at her to cut out the funny work and was surprised to see her with the roll of money in her hand. The woman was told to move on. After seeing that she joined her party Mr. Gates hastened to the telephone and phoned for the police. In thanking Mr. Gates for the recovery of his money, the man stated that she had relieved him so quickly that he didn't know what she was after until she had his money. In the Police Court the woman denied having anything to do with Gates or taking any money whatever. She also denied being in the Oriental. One of the Oriental barbers also had a "close shave" when she nailed him for his fortune. The usual method adopted was used but the barber after thinking it over refused to bite. Several other Hunter Street men had a narrow escape.

On being questioned by Chief Thompson the woman stated that they were on their way to the west where they intended to homestead. They were poor and had no money. During the entire examination the husband hissed for her to keep quiet.

$5 Bill Found.

On being searched by Mrs. McElhiney the $5 bill alleged to have been stolen from the Oriental refreshmnt parlor clerk, was found on the person of the female gypsy.

Irony of Fate

"What's the matter?" a colleague asked of the advertising manager.

"Matter enough! The fools have placed Madam Soprano's testimonial for a cold cure on the same page with the announcement that she had a sore throat and couldn't sing."

Resignation of Rev. Wm. Johnston of Millbrook

At the recent meeting of the Presbytery of Peterboro which was held in Port Hope, the Rev. Wm. Johnston resigned his Church. He has just completed twenty years of service. It was his first Church, he having come to Millbrook direct from Knox College from which he graduated in the year 1894. Mr. Johnston has been widely known throughout the Presbytery and by many of the people of Peterboro. His removal from Millbrook will be a distinct loss to the community, as well as to the entire Presbytery. The Presbytery appointed a Committee to draw up a suitable resolution in reference to his removal. The resolution reads as follows:—

Seldom in the history of the Presbytery has it been called upon with such deep regret to sever a pastoral tie as it is now called upon to do in the case of Rev. Wm. Johnston of Millbrook and Garden Hill. The term of his pastorate is remarkable in that it has been Mr. Johnston's first charge and has continued for the unusual period of twenty years. In these days of change this is most worthy of note. Through this long term he has ministered to the various needs of the people with the utmost fidelity, sharing with them their sorrows, and through these various circumstances has ever sought to lead them into closer relationship with the Church and with Christ, its Head. As a preacher he has continued to deliver the same, high, evangelistic message with varying means of presentation. He has continued to hold his hearers with ever increasing attention. As a Presbyter he has been exemplary and has born a large share of its numerous duties and responsibilities.

Sharing all of these experiences, and by her counsel and sympathy making him the more effective in these ministeries, Mrs. Johnston has won the love and loyalty of both congregations. Her services to the Church and Presbytery through its numerous organizations is worthy of warm praise. We would record our deep sorrow at their departure. We keenly feel the loss of Mr. Johnston's presence and the influence of his strong, Christian character. We follow them both with our humble and sincere prayers and trust that God's richest gifts will be their portion through time and eternity.

CAVALRYMEN CHARGE MOB IN ST. JOHN STREETS

Capital of New Brunswick is Scene of Serious Disturbance Arising Out of Refusal of Street Railway Company to Reinstate President of Union.

Canadian Press Despatch.

St. John, N.B., July 24.—No street cars are running here today, as the result of last night's riot. The local militia has been mobilized and troops are being held in readiness in half-garrison to proceed here at a moment's notice if required.

ST. JOHN, N.B., July 24.—A serious strike riot occurred last night, lasting from 8 to 11 o'clock. Mayor Frink read the riot act at 8.30 and at 9 several cavalrymen of the R. C. Dragoons, under Lieut. Stettin, charged through a mob of thousands of persons in Market Square, riding down rioters and striking them with the flats of their sabres, while stones and bottles flew.

Lieut. Stettin was cut about the head, and was removed to the hospital, not seriously hurt.

William Bennett, dredge-worker, was shot in the thigh by Detective Lucas, who was defending himself from members of the mob. Lucas was badly cut on the head, and he and Bennett are in the hospital.

Windows of the power house of the street railway were smashed and fixtures broken. The city lights were off at 11.30. The mob stoned the firemen of the powerhouse and drove them from their work.

Two cars were overturned in Market Square by the mob, after two hours of interrupted disorder, and finally set on fire. The fire brigade put out the blaze at midnight. This was the most serious disorder in this city in forty years. The city was quiet at midnight. City troops will be out to-day. The trouble is mostly due to the hoodlums rather than to the strikers, though the introduction of strikebreakers precipitated many conflicts.

The riot was a result of the company refusing to reinstate President Ramsay of the employes' union, as advised by a conciliation board.

PREMIER'S STATEMENT WHEN CONFERENCE ENDS

BOY SHIELDED HIS FATHER

TORONTO, July 24. — To prove that he and not his father was guilty of theft, the 12-year-old son of Sam Gurreri lifted a crate of berries, weighing 48 pounds and placed it on a table almost the height of his own head, with comparative ease, in the police court yesterday. Gurreri was charged with stealing the berries, but it appeared that the youngster had placed the crate in his father's wagon by mistake and without his parent's knowledge. Assistant Crown Attorney Hughes complimented the lad on his strength and he was allowed to go.

TROOPS ATTACKED

All-night Battle in St. Petersburg

ST. PETERSBURG, July 24. — At least five striking workmen were killed and eight seriously wounded during the fighting in the streets of St. Petersburg between the strikers on the one side and the police and Cossacks on the other, which continued throughout the night and ceased only at dawn yesterday morning. Three police officials, also are known to have been severely injured and taken to hospitals.

The figures quoted are official, but it is generally understood, that the casualties among the strikers were much heavier, as it is thought probable they concealed a number of the dead and wounded.

Official returns of the number of men who have quit work give the total of 120,000 in the city itself. These include the street car employes but do not comprise many unskilled laborers in the building and other trades.

FIRST WIFE IS HEARD

Mme Gueydan Faces Caillaux in Court

HER LIFE SECRETS

PARIS, July 24. — Mme. Berthe Gueydan, Joseph Caillaux's first wife, a slender woman with wasted cheeks and black eyes, came into court and faced her former husband, the ex-Premier of France, and, put as though upon a rack, the woman who had won him from her—Mme. Henriette Caillaux, now on trial for the killing of a man.

Mme. Gueydan was to tell her part in the publication in The Figaro of the now celebrated "Thy Joe" letter, but she declared she knew nothing about it, and affirmed that she had told Gaston Calmette nothing.

The emotional summit of the trial was reached when other private letters were handed over by Mme. Gueydan to Maitre Labori, counsel for Mme. Caillaux. It was one of the most dramatic moments in the annals of the French courts. A deep and impressive silence fell upon the court room.

Mme. Gueylan then left the box after having completely dominated by her remarkable personality the whole procedure. For three hours she spoke and her voice gained strength and carried to the remotest corner of the room.

In that time she laid bare many of the secrets of her life with M. Caillaux. She told of his laison and of his throwing himself at her knees and asking her pardon. She testified that he even threatened her life.

Then she left him and hoped that he would follow her, but he did not. and she added, with a flash of her eyes and a tightening of her lips: "You know why."

Leaders Fail to Agree as to Excluded Area—Did Not Give Differences of Opinion

Canadian Press Despatch.

London, July 24.—The conference at Buckingham Palace this morning lasted only forty minutes. No statement was given out but it was expected the Prime Minister will make an announcement in the Commons later in the day.

London (Later): — Asquith announced in the Commons to-day that the Buckingham Palace conference had proved abortive. The Premier said, "the possibilities of finding an area to be excluded from the operation of the Irish Home Rule Bill was considered, but the conference being unable to agree on the principle or in the details of such an area brought its meeting to a close."

He announced the second reading of the bill to amend the Irish Home Rule bill would be taken on the twenty-eighth of July. In reply to a question, the Premier said he could not at present inform the House as to the exact differences of opinion.

LONDON, July 24.—The outstanding fact in the Irish situation to-day is that the Home Rule conference is still in being, the predictions of the whole Liberal and Unionist press of yesterday that the conference was on the eve of collapse, having proved false.

After a protracted meeting yesterday the conference adjourned until to-day. Meetings and discussions of the various party leaders proceeded in the lobbies of Parliament last night with unabated activity, and moderate men, like Lord Courteney, are working indefatigably in the direction of a compromise. Hopes and fears fluctuate from hour to hour.

One favorable sign is found in the fact that further consideration in the House of Commons of the amending bill, which was postponed until Monday on account of the conference, has been still further postponed. This justifies the belief that the conference will extend into next week.

Another hopeful indication was a meeting of the Unionist leaders, which was attended by the Marquis of Lansdowne, the Earl of Selborne, the Marquis of Salisbury, the Earl of Paulsbury, Earl Curzon of Kedleston and the Duke of Devonshire. Such a gathering of Unionist peers would hardly have assembled unless some weighty matter was to be discussed.

The Liberals from Premier Asquith down, are working tooth and nail to find a solution of the Ulster problem which will meet the views of Ulsterites and Nationalists. Should the conference fail, they hope to reach the goal by other means.

Their most persuasive followers have been busy in the lobbies trying to induce the Irish protogonists to reconcile their differences. Baron Courtney, a life-long Home Ruler and an insistent advocate of peace at home and abroad, was busy all afternoon interviewing John Redmond and the other leading members of the Nationalist party in behalf of the Liberals. The Irishmen listened courteously and willingly to the blandishments of the white-haired peer, but, outwardly at least they declined to give way an inch.

The Carsonites apparently are just as adamant. They are standing out for the exclusion of the four protestant counties and Tyrone. The Nationalists are ready to grant them the former, but will not budge with regard to Tyrone.

The English Unionists are interested spectators of the fight. They believe that no matter how it terminates it must benefit them, at least to the extent of hastening a general election. They argue that whichever party in Ireland thinks it has received the worst deal will turn against the Liberals. If it is the Nationalists they will defeat the Government on the floor of the House, if the Carsonites, they will set up a provisional government and threaten civil war, before which, the Unionists believe, Premier Asquith will surrender.

The Liberals say that threats of civil war do not frighten them, and point to the incident of the Irish guards cheering Redmond on Wednesday as evidence that the whole army will not refuse service against the Ulsterites, should they attempt to take over the government of the province.

Lucky Bather Stubs His Toe On a Chest of Real Treasure

Baltimore. Md., July 24.—While bathing in Gwinh's falls recently Frank Martin, aged 62, of Pittsburgh, who is visiting Ignatius McGlannis of this city, suddenly felt his right foot sing into a hole at the bottom of the falls as he was wading across the stream. The occurrence resulted in Martin and McGiannis becoming the owners of nearly $1,000 worth of valuable coins that date back as far as the year 1726.

Martin's foot came in contact with the coins, which were piled up in the bottom of a wooden box, which almost had rotted away.

Martin and McGiannis lifted the box, which measures about 12 by 14 inches, and was bound around the edges with heavy brass bands, and brought it to the shore.

Coins of every description, gold, silver, and copper, were revealed as they broke the lid of the box. Most of the coins were English, but there were a number of French and Spanish coins among the collection, and it is thought that the treasure was buried by an old resident of Maryland during or before the Revolutionary war.

Martin is a collector of coins, and has already a fairly valuable collection at his home on the North Side, Pittsburgh.

PETERBOROUGH, FRIDAY, JULY 24, 1914

THE LATE DEAN JOHN GALBRAITH.

THE DEATH of Professor John Galbraith on Wednesday at his summer home on Go-Home Bay, in the Georgian Bay District, removes a man who has occupied a leading position in Canada's largest university for nearly half a century. Since the year 1899 he has been Dean of the School of Applied Science at the University of Toronto, and the large number of "science men" who have graduated since he assumed the headship of that faculty will regret to hear of the passing of their old master.

He was born in Montreal on the 5th of September, 1846, began his education at the Port Hope Grammar School, and following his course there he came to the University of Toronto in 1863, entering the Arts Faculty. He took his B. A. with a double scholarship in mathematics and general proficiency, and was a Prince's prize man and took a gold medal in mathematics in 1868. Then in 1875 he took his M. A. degree and received the degree of honorary LL.D. in 1902. The following year he received the same degree from Queen's University.

He studied engineering under Geo. A. Stewart, chief engineer of the Midland Railway, and was later connected with the Intercolonial and the C. P. R. When the School of Practical Science was formed in 1878 he took the chair of engineering. In 1899 he was made principal of the school, and for some years past has been Dean of the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering at Toronto University. About four years ago he was presented with his portrait in oils by the students, as a mark of appreciation and worth.

The "Dean," as he was known by all, was one of the founders of the Canadian Society of Civil Engineers, and was elected its president in 1908. He was also an associate of the Institute of Civil Engineers of England, and had held office as the vice-president of the Canadian Institute of Toronto, now the Royal Canadian Institute. Because of his remarkable knowledge, where engineering matters were concerned, he was appointed one of the commission to inquire into the collapse of the Quebec bridge.

"A thoroughly trustworthy man, thorough in training, honesty, and patience," was President Falconer's characterization of him. As an instructor in a leading university, his work was naturally of the kind that is not mentioned prominently in newspapers. But it was of a kind that will live long in the able and patient instruction that hosts of his students are daily applying to important problems in many widely-separated places, and who are solving those problems successfully. After all, it does not matter so much whether one works in the spotlight or in the quiet study, so long as the problems of life are being properly worked out.

He saw the University of Toronto grow to one of large proportions, most important perhaps of which was the Science Department. This Faculty will go on increasing in size and efficiency, and, while its success will be a source of gratification to Canadians, they may not think how large a part of that success was due to the quiet, persistent work of the genial man who presided for so many years over the training of a large number of successful men. The fame of this eminent man lies in what he accomplished while quietly performing his daily work in the best way he could.

THE GROWING OF MELONS.

JOHN ATKINS, of Leamington, Ont., says that melons are a profitable product for farmers to raise. He has grown the variety usually known as musk melons, with marked success. This particular variety, which has become so prized a fruit, was first produced near the town of Cantalupo, in Italy, and from seed imported many years ago a similar plant was grown in several of the United States. The production became centred in several localities, and of late years much has been heard of the "Montreal melons," grown on the Island of Montreal, where the industry has assumed considerable proportions. But there are now on our markets melons from still another district, that around the town of Leamington, and, according to the growers themselves, these surpass the Montreal product.

The melons are started from seed in beds of sand in the greenhouses, about the fifteenth day of April. As soon as growth is secured, the tiny plants are transplanted to "flats," about eighteen to each flat, and from here, a little later, direct to the field. The planters aim to have the melons set in the open about May 20th, holding them back to this date, in order to escape, as much as possible, the cold winds of that period of the year.

Once the plants are in the ground, the prime requisite is cultivation. This is done constantly and thoroughly for about two weeks, and at least two or three times each week. If a shower comes, cultivation must immediately follow in order to conserve the soil moisture.

The melons are in blossom when set in the field, and are trained to run in rows. The melons are ready about the tenth of August. These are the earliest, and picking them continues every day, Sunday included. The melons are ready for picking when they begin to loosen from the vine.

Mr. Atkins says that two years ago he sold two thousand dollars' worth of melons from four acres. This year he expects his ten acres will run between four and five hundred dollars per acre, and he estimates a net profit of two hundred and fifty dollars per acre from year to year, including possible failures.

These facts simply show what scientific farming can do. Scientific is just another word here for common sense. Farmers should not forget that agriculture changes with alterations in the standards or economic demands of the community, and what was once the most profitable product yields place to others. The growth of cities in Ontario is one of the most important factors bringing about changes, to which the progressive farmer will be thoroughly awake.

UNIVERSITY TRAINING FOR BUSINESS.

ONCE IT WAS the fashion for hardheaded, self-made merchants and tradesmen of the older generation to scoff at the college graduate and to disparage his "high-falutin'" ideas, but that sort of talk is seldom heard nowadays. The college degree may not mean that the holder is any better prepared with special knowledge to fit him for a business life, but the four years of mental broadening do figure as an asset in the sum total of his qualifications as a general guarantee of his intelligence and ability to learn, provided the boy has improved his opportunities. He can make his experience valuable or negligible, as he sees fit to apply its lesson; the degree of success must depend on the stuff that is in himself after all.

Added to this is the fact that the tendency in a great many universities has been to raise the standard. This is done by insisting on harder examinations, broadening the curriculum, lengthening the course, and generally requiring a more severe mental and physical training. The wisdom of this procedure has, at times, been questioned, but it has undoubtedly made for greater efficiency in many ways. It has produced a greater weeding-out process, so that those who graduate are usually capable. At any rate, public opinion has changed in its attitude to universities in that it regards its usefulness with more favor, and the university, in turn, has broadened its courses, making them more applicable to the needs of modern life.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

COMMENTING on Canadian prosperity, the Toronto News says, "The steady accumulation of capital will shortly guarantee a supply of money for new enterprises," and goes on to say that "two powerful United States industries have purchased sites in Ontario." This is all very well, but what would be of more interest would be a supply of money for old enterprises that have done much to build up the Province and have had to weather the financial stringency as best they could. New factories are needed, we know, but credit is also wanted for the old ones.

IF WE COULD get as enthusiastic over a political party as a hen does over a new-laid egg, this country would be a seething mass of wild-eyed lunatics.—Toronto News. As an example of powerful description, intemperate language, over-drawn metaphor, breezy and exaggerated English, the above example should be put in pickle for future paragraphers to gaze at.

FATHERS' CLUBS are said to have greatly improved the children in Omaha schools. They ought to if used in connection with mothers' slippers.—Toronto Telegram. Doubtless these are what are known as children's aids.

NOW that our friend J. E. M., known as On the Side, has returned to his desk in the Toronto News, we can resume reading that journal with our usual gusto.

LEST we be misunderstood, we may say that in "gusto" we mean an avidious interest.

"Did you get his number?" murmured the man who had been run over by the auto, to the policeman.

"No."

"Well, what kind of a looking car was it?"

"I don't know, I was trying to get his number."

No Such Name.
Saturday Evening Post.

Paul Armstrong tells of a friend of his, an exceedingly deaf man, who was being introduced to a young woman. The young woman was pretty, but she had a strange name. Her name was Dinglefugle.

"Mr. Smith," said the mutual acquaintance, "this is Miss Dinglefugle."

The deaf man cupped his hand behind his ear.

"Please pardon me," he said, "but I'm hard of hearing. What did you say the name was?"

"Miss Dinglefugle."

"I'm awful sorry," murmured the afflicted one with a strained and puzzled look in his eye; "but I haven't caught it yet."

The other man raised his voice to a shout.

"Miss Dinglefugle," he blared.

Resignedly, hopelessly the deaf man shook his head. "It's no use," he said; "sounds like Dinglefugle to me."

CHRISTY MATHEWSON
By Walt Mason

It's curving and twisty, the pitching of Christy, it bothers the artists who stand at the plate; the idol of fandom ne'er pitches at random, he uses his brains and he keeps them on straight. The outlook is misty for men facing Christy, and teams hunting pennants get goose eggs instead; for Christy, the clinker, is student and thinker; he uses his forepaw, and also his head. The blue ribbon's his'n—you see how he's risen—his fame has extended from Rutland to Rome; he is the Old Master, who dodges disaster, because when he's working he uses his dome. "Phenoms" we've a-plenty; we've eighteen or twenty, each season, dispensing a big line of talk; but Christy, the clever, is with us forever, because he's the pitcher who uses his block. We can't all be pitchers, for some must be ditchers, and others be farmers—whatever our jobs, we're sure to be rising to summits surprising, if always, when working, we're using our knobs.

I Reckon a man kin be mean all his life and never find it out, but that don't help things any if other people air allars findin' it out! Every mother's son of us have more er less mean traits in our natur's. Some fellers let their mean traits spile 'em, others hold 'em under so's they can't do any harm. It takes a mighty strong man to look pleasant when he's feelin' ugly er give ye a glad handclasp of welcome when he wishes you and yer carpet-bag were in Jerico. But jest the same if ye care to look around ye'll find the fellers who get by air them that have mastered the art of holdin' their feelin's under. It pays ter get a grip on oneself and hold to it!

HINDUS HAVE LEFT.

Another Shipload of Sikhs Rumored To Be Off B. C. Coast.

OTTAWA, July 24.—The glad tidings of great joy flashed to Ottawa yesterday morning, of the departure of the Komagata Maru, were followed by another message from the immigration authorities at Vancouver indicating that they are seeing the dusky Hindus at every turn. The latest report is that another shipload of the Sikhs are off Cape Flattery, but the news is not confirmed, and the wireless station is being communicated with in an endeavor to ascertain if it is a real ship or a phantom, due to the highly nervous condition of the coast people.

The Department here is not inclined to place much credence in the report, but if it should turn out to be true, the party on board would be turned back in precisely the same manner as those on the Komagata Maru.

The permanent solution of the Hindu immigration problem will next receive the attention of the Government by communication through British channels. If an arrangement cannot be made with the Indian Government to keep the Sikhs at home, the question will come up at next year's Imperial Conference.

Convicts Had Clothes Hidden.

KINGSTON, July 24.—Two convicts at the penitentiary have had one month's good conduct marks taken from them as a result of the investigation into the finding of a suit of civilian clothes hidden in a coal pile. The guard whose duty it was to see that the clothes were destroyed has been exonerated, and this action has caused much criticism, as just the other day a guard, who was found asleep on duty, was dismissed. It is claimed that the offence of one guard was just as bad as the other, and that favoritism has been shown.

CHILDREN'S FROCKS.

Linens and Crapes Popular Materials For These.

Linens of all kinds are liked for children's wear, and although the fine varieties soil and muss with distressing readiness, the durability and laundering possibilities of good linen offset this disadvantage. The coarser kinds of the material are most serviceable for the play frock, but heavy linen, fine and smooth of surface, is used for many of the smartest little frocks of the simplest tailored kind.

STRIPED CRAPE DRESS.

Flowered crapes are utilized for the frocks of the small girl as well as for the older sister, though for children's frocks those crapes having the smaller flower designs are selected rather than the large designs, which are so conspicuous this season. Illustrated above is a roman striped crape dress with white dotted crape. Tones of red in stripe and ribbon trim it. The low belt and tunic effect make the dress very smart.

FEARLESS WOMEN DIVERS.

How the Shellfish Hunters of Japan Work In Icy Waters.

The women shellfish divers of Toba, Japan, perform the work that men elsewhere feel called upon to do. In fact, travelers claim that the women of Toba do nearly all the manual labor, the men being shiftless. Of the shellfishers in particular writes W. D. Cameron in "The Far East."

"Our sampan pushed off and was headed for a small island in the bay off which was a boat containing in addition to the boatmen two women. They were dressed in a costume representing an upper and a lower garment, and as we approached they jumped into the sea and swam toward us. I may mention the afternoon was bitterly cold, with a raw north wind blowing, necessitating our party turning up heavy overcoat collars and drawing up rugs. After a few preliminary strokes the two women turned turtle, as it were, and disappeared beneath the surface of the water.

"It being clear, we could see them swimming down into the depths until they completely disappeared, the water at that spot being at least twenty-five feet deep. They stayed down for a period covering anything from one and a half to three and a half minutes, reappearing bearing in their hands live shellfish, seaweed, etc., taken from the bottom. This spoil they dropped into our boat, resting a few moments by hanging on to its side, repeating the performance again and again.

"The most impressive and I may almost say awe inspiring feature of the whole performance was the remarkable sounds those women gave vent to while preparing to go under. The noises were like nothing more than moans starting at first softly and gradually increasing both in volume and scale until they reached a stage resembling the cries of a soul in torment. Between these sounds were emitted shrill whistles, all this extraordinary performance being apparently a preparation of the respiratory organs for the long spell under water.

"After repeated dives the women were picked up by their boat and rowed to the neighboring island, where presently we saw the smoke of a large fire, from which no doubt the 'mermaids' obtained a considerable degree of comfort after their prolonged immersion in the icy water."

SHEET BREAD OF ASIA.

Used For Awnings, Blankets, Windowpanes and Food.

Instead of baking bread in loaves, the inhabitants of Asia Minor, Arabia, Turkestan and the Tigris-Euphrates valley make it into sheets. These sheets are about forty inches wide and twice as long, and the natives make almost as much use of them as the American Indian does of birch bark. If they need an awning for protection against sun or rain they unwind a roll of this bread and carry it back and forth over a pole several times, much as a camper puts up a dog tent, for if it has a coat of almond oil or mutton tallow the bread is fairly waterproof.

It is a comical sight to see a teamster or camel driver of the Levant travel placidly through a heavy shower with a couple of yards of bread sheeting thrown over his shoulders and to see him tear off pieces here and there and chew on them if he feels hungry. The bread is made of durum wheat flour mixed with the pulp of sultana raisins, which gives it a sweet taste and a fragrance like that of honey.

The Arab uses his sheets of bread, which look like chamois leather, for a makeshift blanket, and it is said by travelers who have tried it that it keeps the heat in and the cold out almost as well as a real blanket. But some of the Russian engineers at work on the construction of the Transsiberian railway did even better, for they made a paste of the bread by boiling several pieces and then stuck together two strips of the sheeting, each a meter wide by two meters long. Thus they manufactured a sleeping bag, and a very comfortable one too.

The Turkish peasants use this flat bread for window panes, and in the bazaars the venders of merchandise wind up pieces as a grocer does a paper cornucopia and use them to hold small amounts of nuts, Turkish candies or squares of sugar. Of course the purchaser eats the bag with its contents. In the same shape the bread sheeting is used for holding the fruity drinks of the Bosporus, but it will not stand hot liquids, even when it is coated with almond oil. Thanks to the raisin pulp, the bread is of remarkable elasticity and can be bent back and forth without cracking. It has actually been used for bookbinding.—Youth's Companion.

Skimpy.

A contributor to the American Magazine tells the following story:

"A clerk in one of the great jewelry stores on Fifth avenue, in New York city, exhibited to a rich and weary customer a lady's handbag, five inches square, made of platinum and fairly well covered on one side only with diamonds. The price was $9,000. The fact that one side only was covered with diamonds troubled the customer. Turning the handbag around and around and looking at it from all sides over and over, he finally said: 'Very pretty, really. But I don't like one side without diamonds. Honestly, the thing looks skimpy—rather skimpy.' At an additional expense of $7,000 this difficulty was removed."

Prize Offered of $500.

A prize of $500 is being offered by the Society for the Suppression of Cruel Steel Traps for a trap which will humanely catch or humanely kill. Nearly ten years ago this society offered a prize of $250 for a trap to supersede what is known as the toothed Dorset gin, which has been in such widespread use in the past. Owing to the generosity of a lady, the prize is now increased to $500.

HISTORY AND A PICTURE.

Cornwallis and His Sword After the Fall of Yorktown.

Art is not always true to history. Schoolboys of several generations are familiar with the picture of Cornwallis surrendering his sword to Washington after the fall of Yorktown. Lord Cornwallis is revealed in the act of passing over his beautiful sword to the band of his conqueror. The inference is that Washington took the sword and kept it as a trophy of victory. The facts are quite otherwise.

Cornwallis, proud even in defeat, declined to put in a personal appearance on the occasion of his surrender. The allied forces, American and French, who had besieged him for thirteen days, were drawn up in two columns along the road leading to Hampton. Rochambeau, on a fine bay horse, was at the head of the French column. On his white charger sat Washington at the head of the American troops. The surrendered British and Hessians marched out of their intrenchments and passed down between the two columns.

Many thousands of Virginia citizens were gathered to watch the scene, all eager to get a glimpse of Lord Cornwallis. But they were disappointed in that. Cornwallis pleaded indisposition and stayed in his quarters. He sent his sword by one of his officers, General O'Hara, to be delivered up to Washington. General O'Hara offered the sword to Washington, who directed him to General Lincoln, the officer whom Washington had appointed to conduct the surrender. Lincoln took the sword from O'Hara's hand and then politely handed it back, to be returned to Cornwallis.

Blood Shed by Queen.

The late Sir William Alexander Smith, the founder of the Boys' Brigade, who was in Canada at the time Earl Aberdeen was governor-general, used to tell an amusing story. He said, "Thousands of Her Majesty's subjects have shed their blood, and other people's blood, for their Queen, but I am the only man whose blood has been shed by his sovereign. When I was decorated by Queen Victoria she was old and blind. I was wearing a very thin suit of clothes, and in pinning the decoration on to my coat the Queen forced the pin right into my skin, with the result that when I reached home I found that my vest was covered with blood."

Increase In Strikes.

There was a slight increase in the number of trade disputes reported to the Department of Labor during May. Ten new disputes were reported, twenty-six less than in the corresponding month of the previous year. Although the disputes occurring in May were more than in April, industrial conditions were not seriously affected. The total number of strikes in existence at the end of May was fifteen.

GONE ARE THE BELLES FROM ROTTEN ROW

No More is Seen the Glossy Top Hat

London, July 24.—Time was when Rotten Row in the season was a sight for the gods. Then, as Henry James put it in his "Lady Barbarina," the Row was "the great exhibition of English wealth, health, luxury and leisure * * * all striking, all pictorial * * * a great composition."

Gone now are the triple row of stately carriages, the bright cavalry of fashion, those promenading belles too, of the line.

"The women" (it is Henry James again) had tight little bonnets and still tighter little knots of hair. Their rounded chins rested on a close swathing of lace, or in some cases of silver chains and circles. They had flat backs and small waists. They walked slowly with their elbows out, carrying vast parasols, and turning their heads very little to the right or the left. There was * * * a general look of successful development. The men * * * had an air more elaborately decorative."

Ancient Row Man.

Here is our ancient Row man, an Olympian indeed. He "sat beside his nectar and the thunder clouds were furled. Or at least, as he sat apparently careless, he made cunning arrangements for "nectar" to come, and was booked for many a fashionable feast. There was diplomacy and intrigue and security and supremacy in the Row of those days. It was the apotheosis of aristocratic man.

Where now is that Row man and where the Gibbon to chronicle his fall? Even his successor survives only as an exception to the motley rule. The real Row man signed his abdication when he discarded his coronation robes. Where now are his glossy "top hat," his high white collar—emblem of eminence—his slim frock coat (now "middle class"), his large, fragrant "buttonhole," that sceptre of a stick, that prevalent air of stiff loftiness, which used to proclaim dominion? The "nut" will have none of them, for he rejects restauran

Has No Sanctity.

He rejoices in what tailors term a "lounge suit." He wears a "straw" or "bowler," according to the caprice of our so-called climate. Sometimes he even declines upon brown brouges. He might almost be on the river — though I suppose he would scarcely condescend to the neighboring Serpentine. These sacred precincts inspire no awe. For him town has no sanctity. He does not recognize its right (or even his own) to any allegiance—there is nothing venerable about his youth.

What a Medley Now!

What a medley surrounds him! His patrician predecessor—of the years before golf was almighty — would never believe it. It belongs to a "democratic" age which plays at being equal and advertises "equality" as quality—to a fascinating age, none the less, one of infinitely varied interest. For now at last the audience is on the stage and sees itself act. Once "somebody" was in the Row, now it is "nobody." Really, however, it is everybody, for most barriers are broken down.

Think of Them.

The shabby smart, the smart shabby alternate with the "ab dowdies and dandified slovens. Rags and finery, dirt and diamonds jostle each other in a kind of "rag" time. And there too layers of respectable citizens pore over newspapers. Ostlers crane over the railings, smoking pipes. Pipes! Pipes! The serene, imperious Victorian Row man would have a fit.

How the riders have changed! What would the old Row man have thought of ladies riding straddle in half masculine guise. It is more like a circus. But after all, if we have lost caste—says an old fogey writing to the Times, we have found fun. That must be the solace.

To Insure Sheep.

The Prince Edward Island governor-in-council has approved of the by-laws of Sheep Breeders' Association, the most important of which are the insurance and protection granted the sheep industry from destructive agencies.

There are to be two classes of insurance—one for pure bred registered sheep, and the other for sheep not registered. In the first class is three per cent. per sheep and the compensation for loss not to exceed $15. In the cases of ordinary sheep, or in cases where the sheep have not been registered, the insurance is one cent per head, and the compensation shall not exceed $6.

BANK OF NOVA SCOTIA ABSORBS METROPOLITAN

Financial Operation Which Makes the Nova Scotia Canada's Fourth Largest Banking House, is Announced in Toronto.

TORONTO, July 24.—The amalgamation of the Bank of Nova Scotia and the Metropolitan Bank, two of the leading chartered banks in Canada, was announced last night. The merger has progressed so far that circulars embodying the basis of the amalgamation have been prepared and approved by the directors of both institutions and are being mailed to the shareholders of each. The tendency towards consolidation among the larger banking interests has been marked for some time, and under the present arrangement the Bank of Nova Scotia, which since its absorption of the Bank of New Brunswick has been making numerous extensions in Western Canada, will secure at one stroke the business of the most important and strongest of the younger banking institutions, and an organization which is recognized among the banking fraternity as a very important asset.

Under the agreement as outlined the shareholders of the Metropolitan Bank will receive $200 in cash and one share of Bank of Nova Scotia stock for each two shares held. Although the negotiations which led to the adoption of a practicable basis of amalgamation has been in progress for a considerable period, nothing of the plans leaked out, and it is noteworthy that no trading of unusual proportions has occurred in either stock, although it is understood that during the past few years several tentative proposals have been made to the Metropolitan Bnak looking towards the absorption of this institution by some of the larger banks, but in each case the directors of the Metropolitan have declined to consider any offers.

Although the Metropoltan Bank will be merged into the older business, the shareholders of the Metropolitan will be represented on the board of the Bank of Nova Scotia by the president, S. J. Moore, and the general manager, W. D. Ross.

As the result of the merger the Bank of Nova Scotia will take its place as the fourth largest bank in Canada, with a paid-up capital of $6,500,000 and a reserve fund of $11,043,789 and the total assets $94,142,284. The net profits of the combined institution in 1913 were $1,392,662.

The great advantage which will accrue to the Bank of Nova Scotia through taking in its younger rival will be recognized by banking men as opening up to it new and attractive territory in which it has been hitherto sparsely represented. It also secures a staff and general organization which in the ordinary course of events would have required years of time and the expenditure of much capital to build up.

The board of directors of the Bank of Nova Scotia are: John Y. Payzant, president; Charles Archibald, vice-president; G. S. Campbell, J. Walter Allison, Hector McInnes, Hon. N. Curry, J. H. Plummer, Robert E. Harris, James Manchester, W. W. White, M.D.

The board of directors of the Metropolitan Bank are: S. J. Moore, president; D. E. Thomson, K.C., vice-president; Sir W. Mortimer Clark, K.C., John Firstbrook, James Ryrie, W. D. Ross.

Lighting a Picture.

The hall in the Rijks museum, in Amsterdam, which contains Rembrandt's "The Night Watch," painted in 1642, was specially built to hold the picture that the lighting might be as perfect as possible. The picture is always lighted, the hall always dark. Originally the picture was arranged badly as to light and space. When, in 1715, it was transferred from the Doelen to the town hall it was made to fit into its new position by having strips cut off the canvas on either side and off the top, which destroyed the balance.

Polling Division at Downer's Corners

At the last meeting of Otonabee Council, John Johnston requested that the road opposite lot 22, concession 13, be opened and made fit for travel.

On motion, $25 was granted, Mr. Deyell, the commissioner.

A petition presented and signed by a majority of ratepayers at Downers' Corners, asked for a polling subdivision at that point and on motion the request was granted. The clerk was instructed to prepare a by-law to establish the polling division to take effect, in 1915, as the petition was too late for action this year, the 1914 voters' list having been printed and distributed.

The Reeve and Councillor Eason, were authorized to have a bridge constructed at the base line road, east of the Keene station.

MEAT PRICES COMPARED

The meat prices throughout many United States cities have risen rapidly during the last few wocks, and below will be found a few prices of meats in those cities in comparison with Toronto and Peterboro.

Various reasons are given for these changing prices. Those generally accepted as being true are given below:

Mr. E. C. Fox, general manager of the William Davies Co., said:

"It is our business to serve the places where the market is high. Prices are best in the United States at present, and we have free trade, so far as we are concerned. The rise, in Canadian prices is partly due to that and partly to [illegible] the hot season always causes a flutter upward in the meats which are easy to cook. The demand for cured meats and steaks that do not require the housewife to stand over the hot stove for any length of time is increased."

Blames Harvest Time.

Mr. Alfred Matthews, general manager of Park, Blackwell & Co., attributed the cause to the harvest season.

"Farmers are busy with their fields now and for the next few weeks. They have no time to market their live stock and the shortage is caused. I think that the fact that we have free delivery of animals into the United States is another reason that the Canadian market is suffering from a scarcity of meat."

In New York.

The following report of prices show the condition of the New York market:

Round steak rose from 26c to 30c. [illegible] roast, 30c; chuck roast 18c; porterhouse steak 34c; sirloin steak [illegible]; spring lamb 26c; lamb chops [illegible]; lamb stew 18c; veal cutlets [illegible]; veal chops 30c."

The average increase on all meats was from one to four cents over last year.

Rises in Pittsburg.

In Pittsburg the prices of meat have soared in the course of two weeks to a record height. This report was received:

Prices to-day as compared with prices of July 1 were: Beefsteaks, [illegible]c, 30c, 35c per pound as against [illegible]c, 25c, 30c; veal, 30c, 35c, as against 25c, 30c; lamb, 25c, 30c, as against 20c, 25c; pork, 20c, 23c., as against 18c, 20c.

Leading dealers expressed the belief that the rise was due to the heavy demand for veal of the last two years. Last year they said too many veal calves were killed.

Toronto Prices.

In Toronto stores the different varieties of meat are selling at the prices quoted below. It will be plainly seen that meat is a more expensive table supply now than it has been in any month since last summer:

Round steak, 24c and 25c; rib roast, 20c to 22c; chuck roast, 16c to 18c; porterhouse steak, 28c; sirloin steak, 28c; spring lamb, front quarters, 18c; loins, 22c; legs, 25c; lamb chops, 25c to 28c; lamb stew, 18c; pork loin roast, 18c.

Lindsay Prices.

In Lindsay the prices of meat are as follows: Spring lamb sells at 18c to 30c per lb; fresh pork, 18c to 20c lb.; pork chops, 18c to 25c lb.; sirloin steak, 25c lb; roast beef, 18c to 20c lb; veal chops, 20c to 25c lb.; hamburg steak, 18c lb.; round steak, 22c lb.

Here in Peterboro the following are the prices quoted: Spring lamb 22c. to 30c.; fresh pork, 16c. to 20c.; pork shops, 19c. to 20c.; sirloin steak 25c. to 28c.; roast beef 15c. to 20c.; veal chops 13c. to 20c.; hamburg steak 15c. to 18c.; round steak 22c. to 24c.

ST. JOHN'S LADIES AND MEN'S BIBLE CLASSES IN DEBATE

Decision Against Allowing Women the Ballot

A very interesting debate took place on Wednesday evening on the beautiful lawn of St. John's Church, between the ladies and men of the Adult Bible Classes, the subject being "Resolved that women should have the right to vote." Mrs. H. May occupied the chair, while Miss Hawkins led for the affirmative, and Mr. Looms the negative.

After an hour had been spent in debating the question in which most of the members took part, it was put to the vote, and was given a verdict of 14 to 8 in favor of the negative, many of the ladies agreeing to be quite willing to forego the pleasure of the ballot, in order to give themselves entirely to home duties while others stood on neutral ground and would not vote. Both leaders were accorded warm praise, for the excellent papers which they had so studiously prepared, and also for the spirit maintained during the debate.

Refreshments were served by the Men's Class, and after arrangements had been completed for their first annual combined excursion the meeting closed at 10 p.m. by the singing of the National Anthem. The excursion will take place on Saturday afternoon to Chemong. Busses will leave the Church at 2.15 p.m. sharp.

Italian Fined $25 for Carrying Weapon

Lindsay, July 2[illegible].—Tony Morano, the Italian who was arrested at the G.T.R. station by Chief of Police Short, for the theft of $400, appeared before Magistrate Jackson, on a charge of carrying concealed weapons. He was fined $25 and costs, total $29.50.

Constable Roberts of Haliburton came down on the six o'clock train and took Morano back north with him at eight o'clock to answer for stealing $400 from a brother Italian. Morano was one of a gang who were cutting wood at Sawyer's Lake. He bunked with the man who lost the money, which was kept in a trunk. There was nobody else living at the same house. The money found on Morano tallies exactly with that lost by the other Italian, although nearly half of it was gone.

WINNER AT GALWAY.

Miss Hazel Molyneaux of Union Creek, Galway, was the successful pupil in winning the handsome gold watch donated by J. H. Burnham, M.P., for the pupil in Galway obtaining the highest marks. One of the features in connection with Galway was that two pupils passed, which shows a great improvement over other years.

Lindsay Wants Hydro Radial Connection

Toronto, July 25.—The town of Lindsay wants the proposed Hydro-Electric radial railway to Port Perry extended to Lindsay, and a meeting of the Ontario Municipal Railway Association will be held at Agincourt in about two weeks' time, at which the proposal will be considered.

The municipalities affected are preparing their bylaws and informing their electorates.

Western Ontario is ablaze with Hydro radial enthusiasm, according to reports reaching the commissioners' office, and the railway idea promises to spread as fast and far and wide as did the power and light one.

MAROONED IN A BOG

Exciting Experience at Harwood of Party of Ladies Who Were Chased by a Bull

Harwood, July 24.—On Tuesday, about 1.30 while other members of their party were out fishing, four Rochester ladies, one of whom was 82 years of age, set out on foot around the bay to the east of the village to investigate the rumor that some other Rochester people were camped on the eastern point. They had safely crossed the marshy stretch at the head of the bay and were well out into a pasture field, when an exclamation from their leader caused a sudden halt. "Heavens, here comes a bull!!! Quick! Take off those sweaters whose rosy hue had angered him, and run where the tallest timbers grow."

It was good counsel and instantly acted upon, the older lady setting out with grim determination and the others following immediately, after accomplishing the removal of the sweaters, and such other adjustments of feminine garments as the perversity of modern fashion made necessary for the attainment of speed, if not of grace.

On reaching the edge of the swamp they found that inequalities of the ground bid them temporaril from the animal and they concealed themselves in the bushes. This ruse was at first successful and he passed by without seeing them, but presently returned and discovering them began to bellow fiercely and paw up the ground in clouds. Almost frightened to death, the ladies broke from their hiding places and rushed deeper into the swamp where in a moment their terror was increased by finding themselves deep in a bog, where the burden of 82 years proved too much and the old lady was soon flat in the black muck. Two of her companions managed to reach her in time to prevent her sinking entirely beneath the surface. The roarings of the bull continued unabated and the situation seemed desperate. The three older women were not surprised to see their youthful companion holding herself erect by the aid of a tall slim young cedar tree engaged as they thought in petitioning heaven.

In this estimate, however, it is the humble opinion of your correspondent that they were wrong and it was not the maiden's prayer but the more modern wireless message which ascended that cedar tree for his private installation recorded distinct S.O.S. signals from the direction of Harwood at 2.05 p.m. In answer to these he hastened thither arriving shortly before two Peterboro surgeons who had also picked up the distress signals and burned up the intervening 30 miles in an auto.

Meanwhile the marshy nature of the swamp proved the salvation rather than the undoing of the distressed women, for the bull had apparently unpleasant memories of that bog and after skirmishing around it for some age long minutes, finally vanished.

The ladies managed with difficulty to extract themselves from the bog and to reach a house some hundreds of yards distant in the field unscathed in body but in a serious state of nerves. The house-wife did everything possible to assist them and even attempted the impossible in trying to persuade them that there was nothing worse in the field than a playful heifer. The good woman meant well but this was too obviously absurd as one of the visitors declares she was born on a farm and could readily note the nature of the beast.

Word was sent to the hotel and some of the men of the party who had returned from fishing rowed across the bay and brought back the venturesome ladies.

A hasty inventory showed the young lady's sweater to be missing and a young man, the son of "mine host" on learning this leaped from the verandah and sped quickly in search of it. It was a deed worthy of the days of chivalry and the picture of the maiden as her heavenly blue eyes followed her knight errant until he disappeared in the swamp is one which will long be remembered. Success attended the courageous young man and in a short time he reappeared bearing the prize in triumph to its owner who had retreated to the sitting room. Verily he deserved his reward and the envious looks of some others. Lucky dog!

A search later in the evening revealed nothing more than 6 yearling calves, two pigs and a large buck rabbit.

YOUNG WOMAN IS FOUND DRUNK

Fought Desperately to Thwart Arrest by Constable

Charged with being a common prostitute, Lena Van Norman, who last night, was arrested by a police officer, who found the young woman in an intoxicated condition and in a rig, in company with a man, appeared before the Magistrate, this morning and was remanded to jail.

Police Matron Mrs. McElhiney told the Magistrate that the girl who is aged twenty and the mother of a seven months' old baby had been an inmate of the Salvation Army Home in Toronto. She had prayed and worked with her to no avail, owing to the fact that her people seemed to be against her and would hinder her efforts to look after the girl.

"This is twice she has been found drunk in the last month," said the Chief.

"Worse and worse," said the Magistrate who was plainly at a loss as to how to dispose of the case.

"Well," he continued, "I am afraid I can't do anything for her; she has taken to drink which means a rapid downward path for her."

"Who gave her the liquor?" asked the Chief.

The man giving his name as Matthew McWilliams was brought in and identified by the woman as the man who was with her. He will appear next Friday, charged with supplying liquor for an unlawful purpose.

"You will murder your child at this rate," concluded the Magistrate as he proceeded with the next case.

The arrest was made on George Street late last night and P. C. Dainard, was the object of a persistent attack, on the part of the young woman. After her arrival at the police station, she kept up a continuous round of abuse directed at her captor and policemen in general.

BENJ. HOBSON FALLS FROM GRACE

Passes From the Great White Way to the Coop

"Ben Hobson, you are charged with being drunk in a public place," said Magistrate Dumble to the famous Ben as he gallantly marched to his doom in the prisoner's box, at Police Court this morning.

"You're a fine man to make promises. You, who said that you would never touch another drink," continued the Magistrate to the cowering Ben who seemed to have lost all his powers of speech.

"I must admit I have committed a great wrong," were the only words that came to the trembling lips of the culprit.

"Well the next charge against you is vagrancy and this time I'm going to fine you $2 forthwith or ten days," was the explosion next heard by Ben. In silence and sorrow Ben walked slowly from the court room, once more to spend the next 240 hours at Hillside Villa.

SHACKLETON IS READY TO LEAVE FOR ANTARCTIC

Takes Sixty Men and Two Ships With Him

A FUND OF $300,000

Sir Earnest Shackleton recently announced that in a month's time he will leave London with sixty comrades in two ships for the frozen Antarctic. The preparations have been much quickened by a timely gift of £24,000 by Sir Charles Caird, the millianaire jute manufacturer, of Dundee.

This is the largest sum given to Polar research work since 1901, when Mr. Longstaff gave £25,000 to the National Expedition, and brings the funds of the Shackleton expedition up to £60,000.

"It puts us in a sound position financially, and with it I have now £60,000, sixty men, two ships, and two well-equipped bases to work from," says Sir Earnest Shackleton.

"We shall leave England not later that the first week in August. The equipment of the Endurance, which was built for ice work, is now almost complete. We are putting in electric winches for deep-sea trawling and sounding.

"I shall join the party at Buenos Ayres, and we are working now practically day and night. We leave there about the middle of September for the Falklands and South Shetlands, where I have arranged for whalers to supply us with our last intake of coal before going into the unknown seas.

Stores for the Journey.

"Among material I am assembling in London now are five motor-sledges, a hut, 25 ft. square, stores and provisions for one party of fourteen for two years, for a party of six for two years, and for two ships parties of twenty each for a year.

"Our foodstuff is placed in oblong cases of 60-lb. weight each. Twenty motor-sledges will come from Norway.

"From Russia we are getting our felt boots. They are the warmest boots to use in winter quarters. From Lapland is coming some specially dried grass for padding the boots.

"Our rations will be 35 oz. per man per day, containing 5,500 calories. In normal life man eats about 3 lbs. of food a day, containing some 2,500 calories. Then our foods are so divided that we shall have the quickest heat-giving and muscle-forming values for use in the day, and the slow-assimilating, heat-forming proteids at night.

"In the middle of the day our food will consist entirely of nuts mixed with oil, and, in order to keep the oil from oozing out, they are packed in powdered milk. Everything like meats is in skins, and even the skins will be useful for part feeding of the dogs.

Honors for British Flag.

"I am proud to think I have the finest possible body of fellows going with me. They are now assembling in London from Canada, from South Africa, and chiefly from various parts of the United Kingdom."

The expedition intends to cross the Antarctic from sea to sea, securing for the British flag the honor of being the first carried across the South Polar Continent. Its other objects are

To make all possible scientific observations on the journey.

To carry on similar scientific work and trace unknown portions of the coastline by the two ships of the expedition—the Endurance, now lying in the West India Dock, and the Aurora, awaiting us at Hobart.

For over 700 miles the region to be traversed is one which has never been penetrated before, and the party must be risking their lives every hour of the silent struggle.

Dignity.

Are you dignified? If so, why? Is it because of what you are, what your ancestors were or what you hope your descendants will be?

Is it because of something you have done, something you can do, something you know or something you possess?

Is it because of some reputation you have or some reputation you would like to get?

Is it because of definite notions of what is right and proper or vague notions of what somebody else thinks is right and proper?

Or do you just happen to be that way, often wishing that you could relax and enjoy yourself like some of the more frivolous people you meet?—E. O. J. in Life.

Wicked King John.

The professor was puzzled. "Haven't you made a mistake?" he inquired doubtfully. "Surely your teacher didn't tell you that?"

"Oh, yes, she did! She told us that King John ground down the people with his taxis."—London Chronicle.

FINANCING INTRICATE

New Brunswick Probe Almost Floored by Valley Railway Accounts.

ST. JOHN, N.B., July 24.—Ralph D. Hoben, accountant for the St. John & Quebec Construction Co., was on the stand all day in the Valley Railway enquiry.

The session was devoted to tracing and locating payments, on account of interest, made by the construction company.

One of the most puzzling entries was a charge of $45,000 for interest, which was shown as part of the cost of construction. The only voucher for this was an order-in-council freeing a surety company of responsibility for $45,000 of a $60,000 guarantee of interest on bonds.

The interest on the loans, totaling $445,000, negotiated with the Prudential Trust Co. of Montreal, was paid by the construction company and charged to the cost of the road.

The deeper counsel and commissioners dug into the accounts, the more difficult it seemed to bring order out of the chaos. At every turn they were met with the obstacle that transactions which they wished to trace had been handled through the New York office and the explanations, if there are any would be found only there.
